THERE are other Medico-Phyſicians ſuperior to the above-mentioned, whoſe Office extends no farther than to calm the Spirits, and receive their Oracles. They never attain to this Supreme Dignity till after having practiſed Phyſic for a long Courſe of Years; they are alſo obliged to faſt for a whole Year together, and their Abſtinence, ſays the Relation of the Moxes, muſt exhibit itſelf by their pale and wan Countenances. " At " certain Seaſons of the Year, particularly at the New Moon, they aſſemble their People " on ſome Hill at a little Diſtance from the Town. At Break of Day, all the Aſſembly " march to that Place with a deep Silence, but the Moment they arrive at the Halting " Place, they break out into hideous Cries, in order, ſay they, to mollify the Hearts of " their Deities. The whole Day is ſpent in Faſting and confuſed Noiſes. Towards the " Evening, they conclude with the following Ceremonies. The Prieſts begin by cutting " their Hair, which among them is a Token of great Joy and Gladneſs, and cover their " Bodies with red and yellow Feathers; which being done, they have great Veſſels " brought them, into which they pour the Liquor prepar'd for the Solemnity; this they " receive as the Firſt-Fruits offer'd to their Idols, of which they drink inordinately, " then give it to all the People, who quaff it off to great Exceſs. The whole Night is " ſpent in Drinking and Dancing. One of them ſings the Song, when all of them drawing round him in a Circle, begin to drag their Feet after them in Cadence, and to loll " their Heads from one Side to another with a careleſs Air, at the ſame Time throwing " their Bodies into very indecent Poſtures; the Warmth of their Piety and Religion, is " judged by the Diſtortions into which they throw themſelves."

SOME other Nations, who are all confounded under the Name of Moxes in the Relations of the Jeſuits, worſhip the Sun, Moon and Stars, and others pay Adoration to Rivers: Some always carry about them a great Number of little Idols, made in a very ridiculous Shape. Every Act of Piety and Religion flows from a Principle of Fear, and among ſo great a Number of People, to whom the Miſſionaries and Spaniards have given the Name of Moxes, they, ſays the Author of that Relation, have not been able to diſcover but one or two Nations who employ any kind of Sacrifice.

THEIR Medico-Phyſicians, Enchanters, or Quacks, preſcribe alſo to their Sick. We do not hear that they take their Degrees like the Prieſts of Paraguay: Be that as it will, when the former are ſent for to the Sick, they [d] mumble certain ſuperſtitious Prayers over them, promiſe to faſt for their Health Sake, and to ſmoke Tobacco a certain Number of Times every Day. But it may be a queſtion, whether they really do it as ſincerely as they pretend to do? They alſo ſuck the diſeas'd Part, which is a prodigious Favour; after this, they withdraw, but upon Condition however of being liberally rewarded for their Services.

THEIR Marriages conſiſt in the mutual Conſent of both Parties, and in ſome Preſents which the Bridegroom makes to the Bride's Father, or neareſt Relation. The Conſent of thoſe who contract it, is look'd upon as nothing; and they have another very whimſical Cuſtom among them, viz. that a Wife may live where ſhe pleaſes, and her Huſband is obliged to follow her up and down. If they have but one Wife, it is becauſe they can get no more, for they favour Polygamy both by Cuſtom and Inclination, and always put it in Practice whenever they have an Opportunity to do it.

THEY look upon the Incontinence of Women as a moſt enormous Crime; and if any of them happens to run counter to her Duty, ſhe is look'd upon as an infamous Creature, and a Proſtitute, and is often put to Death. If Men are unjuſt in any Thing, 'tis certainly on this Occaſion. Why are not Women allow'd to puniſh the Lewdneſs of Men? Or at leaſt, why do we not indulge a Sex, whoſe Frailty is the daily Subject of our Ridicule, to divert themſelves at the Men's Expence, who are vaſtly more frail than Women? [a] forgetting twenty Times a Day at their Feet, their ſo much boaſted Strength of Mind, and ſacrificing all that is moſt valuable to their Charms.

" THE Women prepare the Liquor which their Husbands drink, and take care of the " Children. They have the Barbarity whenever a Woman dies, to bury her little Chil- " dren with her, and in caſe ſhe happens to be brought to Bed of Twins, ſhe buries " one of them, and the Reaſon ſhe gives for it, is, that it is impoſſible to nurſe two " Children well together.

THEY have a very obſcure Idea of the Immortality of the Soul, and bury their Dead with very little Ceremony. The Relations of the Deceaſed dig a Grave, whither they attend upon the Body with a deep Silence, which is interrupted by nothing but Sobs; and as ſoon as the Body is laid in the Ground, they divide between themſelves the Things it was wrapt in. Father Sepp tells us, in a Letter of his publiſh'd in the eleventh Collection of curious and edifying Letters, " That ſome People of Paraguay cut their own " Fingers, and afterwards their Toes, according as their Relations go off the Spot." A Man is very unhappy in that Country who has a great many old Relations; for he runs the Hazard of being mutilated very young: But then we may ask Father Sepp, if he himſelf was an Eye-Witneſs to that unaccountable Mutilation.

RELIGION of the Peruvians.

THE Peruvians, before their being govern'd by their Incas, worſhipp'd a numberleſs Multitude of Gods, or rather [b] Genii. " There was no Nation, Family, " City, Street, or even Houſe, but had its peculiar Gods; and that becauſe they thought " none but the God to whom they ſhould immediately devote themſelves, was able to

" aſſiſt

" aſſiſt them in Time of Need." They worſhipped Herbs, Plants, Flowers, Trees, Mountains, Caves; and in the Province of Puerto Viejo, Emeralds, Tygers, Lyons, Adders; and, not to tire the Reader with an Enumeration of the ſeveral Objects they thought worthy of religious Worſhip, every Thing that appeared wonderful in their Eyes, was thought worthy of Adoration.

THESE antient Idolaters of Peru offered not only the Fruits of the Earth and Animals to theſe Gods, but alſo their Captives, like the reſt of the Americans. We are aſſured, that they uſed to ſacrifice their own Children, whenever there was a Scarcity of Victims. Theſe Sacrifices were perform'd by cutting open the Victims alive, and afterwards tearing out their Hearts; they then ſmear'd the Idol, to whom they were ſacrificing, with the Blood yet reeking, as was the Cuſtom in Mexico. The Prieſt burnt the Victim's Heart, after having view'd it in order to ſee whether the Sacrifice would be agreeable to the Idol. Some other Idolaters offer'd their own Blood to their Deities, which they drew from their Arms and Thighs, according as the Sacrifice was more or leſs ſolemn; and they even uſed on extraordinary Occaſions, to let themſelves blood at the Tips of their Noſtrils, or between the Eye-Brows. [a] We are however to obſerve, that theſe kinds of Bleedings were not always an Act of religious Worſhip, but were often employ'd purely to prevent Diſeaſes.

[b] SUCH was the State of Idolatry all over Peru, when Mango-capac, the Law-Giver of that vaſt Empire, taught thoſe Savages the Worſhip of the Sun and the [c] Supreme God, under the Name of Pachamacac. Before we make any Reflections on that new Religion, we muſt inform the Reader, that Mango-capac and his Wife were the Children of the Sun, and that they both receiv'd a Commiſſion of equal Import from that Planet to teach and humanize the Peruvians. They ſet out from Titicaca, and guiding themſelves with a golden Rod which the Sun had given them, and which was to ſink in the Earth, when they were come to the Place where they were to ſettle by the Command of that Planet, they accordingly travel'd Northward, having continual Inſtances of the Virtue of this golden Rod, which at laſt ſunk down in the Valley of Cuſco; and 'twas here they took a Reſolution of fixing the Seat of their Empire. Immediately this Offspring of the Sun employ'd ſpiritual Weapons; the Brother and Siſter began to preach their Father's Religion, and made a great Number of Proſelytes, who poſſibly might have been as much won over by the Novelties of the Equipage and the Advantages of the new Religion, as by the Force of inward Conviction. The Boldneſs of theſe Miſſionaries, their ſurpriſing Vocation, the Ideas of Power and Superiority which they infuſed into the Minds of thoſe groſs and brutiſh People, raiſed them undoubtely a conſiderable Number of Followers in a little Time; among whom, the new Law-Giver was particularly careful of making choice of the ableſt and moſt skilful, for the better eſtabliſhing his Authority, which he afterwards enlarged by Conqueſt, and at laſt aboliſh'd the antient Religion, commanding, ſays the Inca Garcilaſſo, all his Subjects to worſhip the Sun. This Inca Mango-capac, not ſatisfy'd with making a Reformation among his Subjects in Things relating to the Deity, he likewiſe gave them excellent political Laws, and founded ſuch wonderful Inſtitutions, as might juſtly be compared to the moſt boaſted among the Europeans.

THE laſt Words of that Monarch [a] merit our utmoſt Attention: Theſe would almoſt perſuade us, that they were guided by a more exalted Principle than that of Nature, were we not certain that ſeveral antient Legiſlators exhibit as ſhining Examples of the Force of natural Truths. The virtuous Mango-capac was ſoon after deified: His Subjects raiſed Altars in his Honour, and to his Succeſſors after him; not but they were perſuaded that thoſe Incas were mortal Men, but they paid him theſe Honours out of Gratitude for the Favours they had received from the Poſterity of the Sun, whom, we are told, they worſhipp'd only. In order to make this Syſtem of Religion appear leſs abſurd and ridiculous, we muſt ſuppoſe that they conſider'd their Incas in the ſame Light as the antient Greeks did their Heroes, and the Romans, Romulus, and ſome of their Emperors: They might imagine that the Children of the Sun became the tutelar Divinities of the Kingdom, and that in Recompence for the Virtues they had practiſed in this mortal Life, they enjoy'd the Privilege of being the Depoſitaries, as it were, of the Prayers, as alſo of preſenting them to that Planet. However, the Peruvians denied pretty ſtrongly the Conſequences which might have been drawn from their Practice.

" [b] GARCILASSO relates, that the above-mention'd People, in Proceſs of Time, built " Temples to the Sun, and embelliſh'd them with Ornaments of a prodigious Value; " but they did not pay the ſame Honours to the Moon; for though they look'd upon " her as both Wife and Siſter of the Sun, and even as Mother of the Incas, we yet " don't meet with one ſingle Inſtance of their paying any Worſhip to that Goddeſs, or " their having ſacrificed on her Altars, or erected Temples to her Glory, though at the " ſame Time they had her in the utmoſt Veneration, ſo far as even to call her the " univerſal Mother of all Things; but their Idolatry went no farther. They call'd " Thunder and Lightening, the Executors of the Sun's Juſtice; and in that Quality they " were honour'd ſo far as to have an Apartment allotted to them in the Houſe of the Sun " at Cuſco. But this is no Conſequence of their having been rank'd among the Number of the Gods, as a Spaniſh Hiſtorian would perſuade us they were; ſo far from it, " that if a Houſe, or any other Place happen'd to be ſtruck with Thunder, it was ſo " much deteſted by them, that they immediately ſtopp'd up the Door with Dirt and " Stones, in order to prevent any one's ever entring into it; and if any Thunder hap- " pen'd to fall in the Country, they always pointed out the Place with Stakes, or ſuch " like Marks, in order to prevent any one's walking over it. In a Word, they gave the " Epithets of unhappy and curſed to thoſe Places, and added, that the Sun ſent down " thoſe Curſes upon them by the Mediation of Thunder, whom they conſider'd as his " Lacquey, and the Miniſter of his Juſtice."

NOTWITHSTANDING they adher'd ſo zealouſly to the Worſhip of the Sun, yet the moſt knowing among the Indians acknowledge a Soul of the World, or rather firſt Mover of Matter, call'd by them Pachacamac, which Garcilaſſo tells us ſignifies expreſly, He who animates the World. He adds, " That their Veneration for this Word

[a] He above all recommended to the Peruvians, the worſhipping of the Sun as their God and Father. " It muſt " neceſſarily have happen'd, ſays the Incas Garcilaſſo, that Mango-capac having a perfect Knowledge of the Stupidity " of this People, and the great Need they had of being inſtructed in the Duties of Morality, judg'd it would be " proper for him to feign that he and his Wife were the Offspring of the Sun, and that their Father had ſent them " from Heaven. The better to poſſeſs the Peruvians with this Opinion, he appear'd among them in a ſplendid " Manner, and diſtinguiſh'd himſelf particularly by the Largeneſs of his Ears, which were of ſo incredible a Size, " that I could never have believ'd that Circumſtance, had I not ſeen it in his Deſcendants." In this Manner the antient Lawgivers have made an Advantage of the favourable Opinion their People had of them; and ſome of them have even had Artifice enough to make a Merit of certain pretty remarkable Defects both of Body and Mind. The long and repeated Retirements of Numa Pompilius, during which he was probably ſeiz'd with violent Fits of Melancholy, and the Extaſies of Mahomet, are well known. " And as Mango capac, continues Garcilaſſo, corroborated " the Fiction of his Genealogy by the great Advantages he procured his Subjects, they really believ'd him to be " the Offspring of the Sun, and that he was come from Heaven to aſſiſt them, &c."

[b] We have quoted this whole Paſſage from Garcilaſſo, becauſe he is more exact than the other Authors who have written on the Subject.

" was ſo great, that they did not dare to utter it; but in caſe they were forced to do " it at any Time, they always pronounc'd it with the greateſt Tokens of Submiſſion " and Reſpect, ſhrugging up their Shoulders, ſtooping their Heads and Bodies, lifting " up their Eyes towards Heaven, and on a ſudden caſting them on the Ground; laying " their Hands extended on the right Shoulder, and kiſſing the Air." They paid a conſiderable Part of this Worſhip to the Sun, and even to the Incas; nevertheleſs Garci- " laſſo relates, that they had in reality a much greater Veneration for Pachacamac than " for the Sun. They acknowledg'd, " That he alone animated the Univerſe, and con- " tinued its Exiſtence; but then, as they had never ſeen him, they conſider'd him as " the unknown God," or rather an inviſible and immaterial Being. From an Anſwer which the Inca Atahualipa made [a], one would be apt to think, that the Word Pacha-camac was one of the Sun's Attributes.

THE Peruvians took the Character of Cupai to be directly oppoſite to that of Pachacamac, and whenever they were oblig'd to name him, they uſed to ſpit upon the Ground, in token of their mortal Averſion for that wicked Being. They only paid a bare Reſpect to the Moon, in quality of the Sun's Wife and Siſter; and they honour'd the Stars, whom they ſaid were the Women or Maids of Honour to the Houſe of theſe Planets.

HERE follows the Account that Garcilaſſo gives of the Huacas or Guacas, which ſeems more juſt and rational than what Purchas has cited in his Collections, upon the Authority of ſeveral Spaniſh Authors. Garcilaſſo informs us, that the Word Huaca ſignifies Idol and ſacred Things; ſuch were the Repreſentations of the Sun; the Offerings they made him, ſuch as the Figures of Men, Birds, Quadrupeds, in Gold, Silver, and Wood; not excepting Rocks, Trees, Stones, Caverns, Temples, and Tombs, which God ſanctified either by his Preſence or his Oracles. They alſo gave the Name of Huacas to the Genii; to the Heroes rank'd among the Immortals; to all ſuch Things as were moſt beautiful and excellent in their kind, and even to miſhapen and monſtrous Things. The Spaniards, continues Garcilaſſo, who were ignorant of theſe various Significations, imagin'd that the Indians took all thoſe Things to which they gave the Name of Huacas for Deities, and likewiſe fancied that the Peruvians worſhipp'd Hills and Hillocks under the Name of Apachitas, for want of knowing, " That the corrupted " Word Apachecta, which often ſignifies he who cauſes to ſupport or ſurmount ſome Diffi- " culty, expreſs'd, in the Laconic Way of ſpeaking, uſed by the Indians, the following " kind of Bleſſing: Let us return Thanks to him, who has enabled us to ſupport the Fa- " tigue we have undergone in walking up this Hill. Theſe Prayers of Thanks were of- " fer'd up to Pachacamac, whom they then worſhipp'd mentally, for having aſſiſted " them in this Fatigue. When they were got to the Top of the Hill, they laid down " their Burdens, in caſe they carried any; and after having lifted up their Eyes to Hea- " ven, they caſt them down on the Ground, and gave the ſame Tokens of Adoration " as they uſed with regard to Pachacamac. Moreover, they repeated the dative Apa- " checta two or three Times over, and afterwards uſed, by way of offering, to pull up " the Hairs from their Eye-Brows, and whether they tore them up or not, they always " blew them in the Air, as if they intended to waft them to Heaven. They had alſo " a Cuſtom of putting an Herb call'd Cuca in their Mouths, which they threw into " the Air, in token that they offer'd all their moſt precious Things to Pachacamac. " They were even ſo fooliſhly ſuperſtitious as to offer him Splinters of Wood, or even " Straws, in caſe they could not meet with any Thing better, or ſome Flint-Stone; " and for Want of theſe, a Handful of Earth. Large Pieces of theſe Offerings were " ſeen upon the Tops of the Hills. They never look'd up to the Sun when they per-

The Inca anſwer'd, he did not believe that any Being, except the Sun, could have created any Thing in Nature; that he held him for God, and that Pachacamac had form'd this World out of Nothing.

THE Incas, and the Peruvians their Subjects, uſed to ſacrifice ſeveral Sorts of Animals in honour of the Sun: They alſo offer'd him Cocoa, Corn, rich Clothes, and a Liquor made of Water and Maiz. They always preſented the laſt Offering to the Sun in the following Manner: " When they were very dry, they firſt fell to eating, and " afterwards dipt the Tip of their Finger in the Veſſel into which the Liquor was " pour'd: This being done, they lifted up their Eyes to Heaven in a very ſubmiſſive " Manner; ſhook that Finger on which the Drop hung, and offer'd it to the Sun as " an Acknowledgment for his Goodneſs in providing Drink for them. At the ſame " Time they gave two or three Kiſſes to the Air. This Oblation being made, they " all drank as they thought proper.

" EVERY Time they enter'd into their Temples, the chief Man in the Company " laid his Hand on one of his Eye-Brows, and whether he tore off any of the Hairs " from thence or not, he blew it into the Air before the Idol, as a Mark of its being " an Oblation." They paid the ſame Adoration to Trees, and to all ſuch Things as a divine Virtue had made ſacred and religious.

THE Peruvians paid a kind of Worſhip to the City of Cuſco, becauſe of its being founded by Mango-capac. We ſhall obſerve, that heathen Rome had antiently the ſame Reverence paid to it by its Inhabitants. At Cuſco was that wonderful Temple of the Sun, the Beauty and Riches whereof ſurpaſs'd Imagination. We ſhall tranſcribe the Deſcription which the Inca Garcilaſſo has given us thereof. His Words are as follows: " The high Altar of this pompous Edifice ſtood eaſtward, and the Roof, which " was made of Timber, and very thick, was thatch'd over, they having no Tile or " Brick among them. The four Walls of the Temple, to conſider them from the Top " downwards, were all cover'd over with Plates of Gold. On the high Altar was " made the Figure of the Sun, which was alſo repreſented on a gold Plate, twice as " thick as thoſe above-mention'd. This Figure, which was made of one continued " Piece, was repreſented with a round Face, ſurrounded with Rays and Flames, in " the ſame Manner as our Painters uſually draw it. It was of ſo prodigious a Breadth, " that it almoſt cover'd one Side of the Wall, on which nothing was repreſented but " that Idol; the Reaſon of which was, becauſe this was the only one thoſe Indians had, " either in that or any other Temple; nor did they worſhip any other Deity than the " Sun, whatever ſome Writers may affirm to the contrary.

" ON each Side of the Image of the Sun, the ſeveral Bodies of their deceaſed Mo" narchs were ranged in Order, according to the Courſe of their reſpective Reigns, " and ſo embalm'd, (the Manner of which was a Secret) that they ſeem'd to be alive. " They were ſeated on Thrones of Gold, raiſed on Plates of the ſame Metal, with their " Faces looking towards the Bottom of the Temple; but Huana-capac, the beſt be" lov'd of all the Sun's Children, had the peculiar Advantage above the reſt, of being " placed directly oppoſite to the Image of that Planet; and that becauſe of his having " merited Adoration during his Life-Time, and for having practiſed the moſt exalted " Virtues, and diſcover'd Qualities worthy the greateſt Monarch, from his very Infancy. " But upon the Coming of the Spaniards, the Indians hid thoſe Bodies with the reſt " of the Treaſure; and notwithſtanding that the ſtricteſt Search has been made after " them, they are not yet found.

" THIS Temple had ſeveral Gates, which were all cover'd over with Plates of Gold, " the chief of which look'd towards the North, as it ſtill does to this Day. Moreover,

" over, round the Walls of this Temple was a Plate of Gold, in the Shape of a Crown
" or Garland, and above an Ell broad. On one Side of the Temple was a Cloiſter
" built, in a quadrangular Form, and in its higheſt Encloſure a Garland of pure Gold,
" an Ell broad, like the above-mention'd. Round this Cloiſter were five great ſquare
" Pavilions, or Houſes, cover'd over in the Shape of a Pyramid. The firſt was built " for the Habitation of the Moon, the Sun's Wife, and ſtood the neareſt to the great
" Chapel of the Temple; the Doors and Encloſures of it were cover'd with ſilver
" Plates, its white Colour denoting that it was the Apartment allotted to the Moon,
" whoſe Figure was painted like that of the Sun, but with this Difference, that it ſtood
" upon a ſilver Plate, and was repreſented with a Woman's Face. 'Twas here theſe
" Idolaters came and offer'd up their Prayers to the Moon, whom they imagin'd to be
" Siſter and Wife to the Sun, the Mother of their Incas, and of their whole Poſte-
" rity. In quality of this laſt, they gave her the Name of Mama Quilca, or Mother
" Moon, but without offering any Sacrifices to her as to the Sun. On both Sides of " this Figure were the Bodies of their deceaſed Queens, rang'd in Order, according to " their Antiquity. Mama Oello, Mother to Huayna-capac, had her Face turn'd to" wards the Moon, and from a peculiar Advantage, was placed above the reſt, becauſe
" of her being the Mother of ſo worthy a Son.

" NEXT to the Manſion of the Moon was that of Venus, the Pleiades, and thoſe of " all the other Stars. They gave the Name of Chaſca to the Planet Venus, by which " her long and curl'd Hair was ſignified. Venus was moreover greatly honour'd, becauſe
" they fancied her to be the Sun's Page, ſaying, that ſhe ſometimes went before, and
" at other Times behind him. They alſo paid great Reverence to the Pleiades, be-
" cauſe of their wonderful Diſpoſition, and their appearing to be all equal in Magni" tude. The others in general were call'd the Moon's Waiting-Maids, and for this " Reaſon they have an Apartment aſſign'd them near their Lady, in order to be near " at Hand whenever ſhe wants them, becauſe they imagin'd that the Stars were fix'd
" in the Sky for the Service of the Moon, and not that of the Sun, ſince they are vi-
" ſible in the Night only.

" THIS Apartment, and its great Gate, were cover'd over with Plates of Silver, like " that of the Moon. Its Roof ſeem'd to repreſent the Sky, being adorn'd with Stars
" of different Magnitudes. The third Apartment next this laſt was ſacred to Thunder
" and Lightening.

" THE two laſt were not conſider'd as Gods, but as the Sun's Lacqueys, and they " had the ſame Idea of them as the antient Heathens had of Thunder, which they
" look'd upon as an Inſtrument of Jupiter's Juſtice. For this Reaſon their Incas aſ-
" ſign'd an Apartment ceil'd with Gold to Thunder and Lightening, which they fan" cied were the Sun's Domeſtics, and conſequently reſide in his Houſe. They did " not repreſent either of theſe Images in Relievo, or on a flat Surface, and that becauſe
" they could not copy them from the Life, they chiefly ſtudying Nature in all their " Images; but they honour'd them under the Name of Yllapa. The Spaniſh Writers " have not yet found out the Signification of this Word. Some of theſe have endea-
" vour'd to draw a Parallel between their Idolatry and our holy Religion in this Re-
" ſpect; but they have been prodigiouſly miſtaken in it, as well as in ſeveral other Par" ticulars, wherein they have ſought, though with leſs Foundation, for Symbols or " Signs of the bleſſed Trinity, by giving ſuch an Explication as they thought proper " to the Names of the Country, and aſcribing a Belief to the Indians which they " never had, as has been already ſhewn in another Place.

" THE fourth Apartment was ſacred to the Rainbow, becauſe they found that it " ow'd its Birth to the Sun. This Apartment was all enrich'd with Gold, and the " Rainbow was repreſented after the Life, on Plates of this Metal, with all its Variety " of Colours, on one of the Faces of the Building, and this Phenomenon was drawn " ſo prodigious large, that it reach'd from one Wall to the other. They call'd it Cuy- " chu, and had it in very great Veneration. Whenever it appear'd in the Air, they " immediately ſhut their Mouths, and put their Hands upon it, imagining that were " they to open it never ſo little, their Teeth would infallibly rot.

" THE fifth and laſt Apartment was that of the High-Prieſt, and of the other " Prieſts, who adminiſter'd in the Temple, and who were all obliged to be of the royal " Blood of the Incas. This Apartment, enrich'd like the reſt, with Gold from Top " to Bottom, was not uſed either for Eating or Sleeping, but as an Apartment for gi- " ving Audience, and to conſult about ſuch Sacrifices and other Things as related to the " Service of the Temple."

WE muſt not omit a very remarkable Circumſtance, which is, that in the Temple of Cuſco there were the ſeveral Gods of thoſe Nations whom the Incas had conquer'd. Theſe were there ſerv'd and ador'd in Preſence of the Sun, but their Worſhip was conditional. They were firſt oblig'd to worſhip that Planet in quality of the great God, upon which Conſideration they were permitted to ſerve the other Deities. Such was the State-Policy of the Incas, who did not make a dreadful Havock of Men's Conſciences, by terrifying them with Sword and Halter. On the contrary, they were of Opinion, that ſome Regard ought to be paid to the Religion of a vanquiſh'd People, and juſtly perceiv'd that it would inſenſibly die away at the Sight of a Worſhip, which as it was leſs abſurd, was at the ſame Time ſupported by the royal Authority; nor were they miſtaken in their Conjectures, for the Worſhip of the Sun was more and more receiv'd, and would have rooted out that of their ſtrange Gods, had not the Empire of the Incas been deſtroyed by the Spaniards. But we ſhall wave theſe Reflections, and leave the Reader to draw ſuch Conſequences as he ſhall judge proper from what has been already mention'd.

WE ſhall not take any notice of the pompous Temple at Titicaca, but refer the Reader to the Hiſtory of the Incas. [a] We alſo meet in this Hiſtory with a very particular Detail of the Riches contain'd in this Temple, [b] Part of which is repreſented in the Figure, where we ſee an Inca offering a golden Veſſel to the Sun: This was one of the moſt ſolemn Ceremonies of the great Feaſt of that Planet, which was kept in June, and is a Proof of what we before advanc'd, viz. that Pachacamac was one of the Attributes of the Sun, that reſplendent Fire, which was antiently worſhipp'd by the Perſians and Chaldeans. The Peruvians aſſerted, that in this ſolemn Feaſt they particularly worſhipped the Father of Light, " as being the ſole, ſupreme, and uni- " verſal God, whoſe Light and Virtue gave Birth and Nouriſhment to all worldly " Beings. They alſo ſolemnized it as a public Acknowledgment that the Sun was the " Father of the firſt Inca," and of all his Poſterity.

THE Feſtival open'd with Sacrifices: " They ſaid, it was not lawful to uſe any Fire " in thoſe Sacrifices, but that which was preſented them by the Sun's own Hand; for " this Purpoſe they made uſe of a great Bracelet, called Chipana, like thoſe which the " Incas wore on their Left Wriſt; with this Difference, that that which was worn by " their chief Prieſt was larger than the reſt. They had inſtead of a Medal, a con-

" cave Veſſel, about the Bigneſs of half an Orange, very ſmooth and glittering. This " they placed directly oppoſite to the Sun, and in a certain Point where the Rays which " ſhot from the Veſſel were all collected; and applied to it, inſtead of a Match, a lit- " tle Cotton Lint, which immediately took Fire from a natural Effect. With this " Fire thus lighted, and given by the Hand of the Sun, they uſed to burn their Vic- " tims, and roaſt all the Fleſh which they eat that Day. After that, they took ſome " of the ſame Fire, carried it to the Temple of the Sun, and the Houſe of the Vir- " gins elect, and there it was preſerv'd all the Year; and its going out was looked up- " on as a very unlucky Omen. In caſe the Sun happen'd not to ſhine out the Eve " before the Feſtival, on which Day every Thing was prepar'd for the Sacrifice that " was to be made on the Morrow, and conſequently if there were no Poſſibility of " getting Fire that Way, they then took two little Sticks, about as thick as one's " Thumb, and half an Ell in Length, made of a Wood called Vyaca, very like Cin- " namon, and theſe by being rubbed together very hard, had ſeveral Sparks of Fire " drawn out of them which ſet fire to the Match. Notwithſtanding that this was " a very good Way of ſtriking fire, they nevertheleſs, when Neceſſity forced them to " uſe it in the Sacrifices which were made on their Feſtivals, diſcovered a deep Afflic- " tion, and looked upon it as a very ill Omen, ſaying, that the Sun muſt neceſſarily " be very angry with them, ſince he refuſed to give them Fire with his Hand."

THE chief Captains of the Empire, and the Curacas, or Caciques, always aſſiſted at this Feſtival: Theſe, when they were prevented from adminiſtring at it in Perſon, either by very urgent Affairs, or extreme old Age, uſed always to ſend their Sons or Brothers, accompanied with the nobleſt of their Relations, as their Proxies. The Inca, in quality of Son to the glorious Planet of the Day, always open'd the Feſtival; nor could he be diſpens'd from ſo doing, unleſs War called him another Way, or he was obliged to make a Progreſs through his Empire. All the Nobility of the Empire went in Proceſſion to preſent their Oblations to the Sun. The Curacas appear'd in a moſt ſplendid, but very whimſical Dreſs. " Some of theſe had Robes adorn'd with gold and ſil- " ver Plates, and Garlands of the ſame on their Caps, and others were dreſſed in Lions " Skins.

" AFTER theſe there advanced others, whom, with regard to their Dreſs, we ſhall " take the Liberty of comparing to Angels, they wearing the Wings of a Bird to which " they give the Name of Cuntur. Theſe Wings are ſpeckled black and white, and " fifteen Foot long from End to End. Thoſe who adorn'd themſelves with the Fea- " thers of theſe Birds, did it purely to ſhew they were deſcended from them.

" THE Yuncas uſed to diſguiſe themſelves with certain frightful Masks, by which " Means they made the moſt hideous Figure that Fancy could poſſibly paint. To ſee " the apiſh Tricks and Diſtortions they made in thoſe Aſſemblies, one would have " taken them for mad Men; and to make themſelves appear more completely ſo, they " uſed to make a confuſed Noiſe of diſſonant Inſtruments, ſuch as Flutes and Drums, " holding torn Skins in their Hands, and with theſe they uſed to play a thouſand filly " Tricks.

" AFTER theſe Curacas there advanced others dreſſed in a different Manner, and " each Nation carried the Weapons uſed by them in War, ſuch as Bows, Arrows, " Lances, Javelins, long and ſhort Hatchets, to fight either with one or both " Hands.

" THERE were others alſo who wore Ornaments, on which were repreſented the " glorious Actions they had perform'd in honour of the Sun, and of their Incas; and " others again were attended by a great Train of Servants, who played on [a] Atabales, and " blew on the Trumpet. In a word, every Nation appear'd there in as much Pomp and " Splendor, and with as great a Train of Domeſtics as they could poſſibly procure, they " all endeavouring to rival their Neighbours in Grandeur and Magnificence.

" THEY always prepar'd themſelves for the Solemnity of this Feſtival by a moſt ſtrict " Faſt, eating nothing every third Day but a little white raw Maiz, with certain Herbs " call'd Chucam, nor ever drank any other Liquor but Water. During this Time they " abſtain'd from all Commerce with their Wives, nor were Fires made in any Part of the " City.

" AFTER this Faſt, on the Eve of the Feaſt of the Sun, the Inca-Prieſts, whoſe Of- " fice it was to perform that Sacrifice, ſpent the Night in getting ready the Sheep and " Lambs which were to be ſacrificed; they alſo prepared the Victuals and Drink that " were to be preſented as an Oblation to the Sun: Theſe ſeveral Affairs were ſettled, " after they had firſt taken a pretty exact Account of the Number of the People who " were aſſembled at the Feſtival; for not only the Curacas, the Embaſſadors, their Re- " lations, their Domeſtics and Subjects, partook of theſe Oblations, but likewiſe all the " Nations in general who were preſent at the Solemnity. On the ſame Night, the " Women of the Sun were employ'd in kneading a kind of Dough call'd Cancu; and " this they made into little round Loaves, about the Bigneſs of an Apple. We are to " obſerve, that theſe Indians never made their Corn into Bread except at this ſolemn " Feaſt, and another call'd Citua, and then they never eat more than two or three " Pieces of it; for their common Bread was call'd Gara, which was a kind of Pulſe; " and the Corn of which it was made was either baked or parch'd. None but ſuch " choſen Virgins as had devoted themſelves to the Sun, in order to be his Wives, were " permitted to knead the Dough of which that Bread was made, particularly that " which was eaten by the Incas and thoſe of the Royal Blood, or to prepare the o- " ther Viands which were to be eaten on that Feaſt; becauſe on that Day, the Sun's " Children did not treat their Father, but rather the Sun gave a Banquet to his Chil- " dren. The common People were waited upon by a numberleſs Multitude of other " Women, who prepared their Victuals, and took a vaſt deal of care in working up " the Bread which was made for their Uſe, and was always of the fineſt Flower. " They were not allow'd to eat any of it except on this ſolemn Day, which was the " greateſt of all their Feſtivals, for they thought this Bread to be of a very ſacred " Nature."

ON the moſt ſolemn Day of the Feaſt, the Inca appear'd in Public, accompanied with his Relations, when he went with all his Train to the great Square in Cuſco, and there waited bare-footed till ſuch Time as the Sun ſhould riſe, during which he look'd attentively towards the Eaſt. The Moment he ſaw it appear upon the Horizon he fell proſtrate on his Knees, and opening his Arms directly oppoſite to his Face, kiſs'd the Air: The Curacas and other Nobles of the Empire ſtood at ſome Diſtance, and wor- ſhipped the Sun in imitation of the Inca, and the Princes of the Blood. Then the In- ca roſe up, the reſt continuing ſtill upon their Knees, and took two great golden Vaſes fill'd with Drink, and at the ſame Time, he, in Quality of Chief of the Houſe of the Sun, lifted up one of thoſe Vaſes, and ſhewing it to the Sun, invited him to drink. The Peruvians were perſuaded that this Planet pledg'd the Inca and all the Princes of the Blood.

[a] A kind of Drum.

AFTER

" [a] After the Inca had invited the Sun to drink in this manner, he poured all the " Liquor that was in the Veſſel dedicated to the Sun, which he held in his Right Hand, " into a golden Tub with Ears, whence the Drink diffuſed itſelf as from a Spring into a " Pipe that was curiouſly wrought, and which reach'd from the great Square to the Houſe " of the Sun. When that was done, he drank a little of it, as his Portion, out of the " Veſſel which he held in his Left Hand, and at the ſame Time the reſt was divided among " the Incas, by a little Gold or Silver Veſſel which each of them had brought with him. " In this manner they inſenſibly emptied the Inca's Veſſel, the Liquor whereof, ac- " cording to them, was ſanctified by his Hand, or that of the Sun, whoſe Virtue is " communicated to them. All thoſe of the Royal Blood took a Draught of this Liquor, " but they gave the Curacas the Drink which the Sun's Wives had made, and not that " which they believed to be ſanctify'd.

" [b] THIS Ceremony ended, which was no more than a Prelude to a Quaffing-Bout, " they march'd in Order to the Houſe of the Sun, when all, the King excepted, pull'd " off their Shoes and Stockings at two hundred Paces Diſtance from the Gates of the " Temple. Then the Inca and his Relations enter'd it, as being the Sun's legitimate " Offspring, and proſtrated themſelves before his Image. In the mean Time the Cu- " racas, who thought themſelves unworthy of entering his Temple, becauſe they were " not related to him, ſtood without in a great Court which was before the Gate; and " the very Moment the Inca had, with his own Hand, offered the golden Veſſel, with " which he had perform'd the Ceremony, the reſt gave theirs to thoſe Inca-Prieſts, " who had been nominated and dedicated to the Service of the Sun; for they only " were allow'd to execute that Office, and not even thoſe who were related to the " Sun, unleſs they were of the Prieſthood. When the Sacrificers had offer'd the " Veſſels of the Inca, they went all to the Door, to receive thoſe of the Curacas, " who all walk'd according to their reſpective Ranks, and in the Order of Time they " had been reduced under the Empire of the Incas. Beſides their Veſſels they " alſo preſented to the Sun ſeveral Gold and Silver Pieces, repreſenting in Miniature, but " very naturally, various Kinds of Animals, as Sheep, Lambs, Lizards, Toads, Adders, " Foxes, Tygers, Lions, Birds of all Kinds, and every Thing that grew in their re- " ſpective Provinces.

" THE Offering being ended, each of them return'd in order to his Place, and at " the ſame Time the Inca-Prieſts were ſeen advancing forward with a great Number " of Lambs, barren Ewes, of all Colours, for they are naturally ſpeckled in this man- " ner, like the Spaniſh Horſes. Out of all theſe Beaſts, which belong'd to the Sun, " they took a black Lamb; the Indians making choice of that Colour preferably to any " other, particularly in their Sacrifices; becauſe, according to them, it had ſomething " Divine in it. To this they added, that a black Beaſt was generally ſo all over the Bo- " dy, whereas a white one has generally a black Spot upon its Snout, which they " look'd upon as a Blemiſh. For this Reaſon their Kings are generally dreſs'd in black, " and their mourning Habits were of a Mouſe-Colour.

" THE firſt Sacrifice which they made of a black Lamb, was in order to obtain happy " or unhappy Preſages of the Solemnity of their Feaſt; for this People in every impor- " tant Action, whether in Peace or War, always ſacrificed a Lamb, when they took " out its Heart and Lights, in order thereby to judge whether or no their Oblation would " be agreeable to the Sun; if the War in which they were going to be engaged, would " be happy or unſucceſsful, and whether the Earth would yield an Abundance of Fruits

" that Year. But we are to obſerve, that they always ſacrific'd different Animals ac" cording to the Nature of the Preſages which they were deſirous of obtaining by
" that Means, as Lambs, Sheep, barren Ewes; for they never kill'd any but what " were ſo, nor eat their Fleſh till ſuch Time as they were paſt bringing forth Young.
" In theſe Sacrifices they took the Lamb or Sheep which they had mark'd out for " Slaughter, with his Head turned Eaſtward, without tying his Feet together; but three " or four Men held him with all their Strength, to prevent his ſtirring. They then rip-
" ped up its Left Side, the Beaſt being ſtill alive, and thruſting in their Hands took from " thence the Heart, the Lights, and all the reſt of the Harſlet, which they were oblig'd
" to pull out entire, without tearing the leaſt Part of it."

THEY were as ſuperſtitious at leaſt as the Greeks and the Romans in inſpecting the Intrails of their Victims. This is manifeſt from that Paſſage of the Hiſtory of the Incas above cited. " When the Lights, after being juſt taken out, were found ſtill panting,
" it was look'd upon to be ſo happy an Omen, that all other Preſages were conſider'd
" as indifferent or of no Conſequence; becauſe, ſaid they, this alone ſuffic'd to make " them propitious, how unhappy ſoever they might be. After they had taken out the " Harſlet, they blew up the Weaſand with their Breath, then tied it up at the End,
" or ſqueez'd it cloſe with their Hands, obſerving at the ſame Time how the Paſſages
" through which the Air enters into the Lungs, and the ſmall Veins which are gene" rally found there, were ſwell'd; becauſe the more they were inflated, the more the " Omen was propitious. They alſo obſerved ſeveral other Particulars, which it would " be a difficult Matter for me to relate, as I did not take any particular notice of them.
" I only mention theſe, becauſe I ſaw them twice: I remember that I was carried when " a Child, into a lower Court, where ſome old Men performed that kind of Sacrifice
" at one of their Chriſtenings, and not on the Day of their Raymi, (the Name of the " Feſtival of the Sun) which was almoſt forgot at the Time of my Birth, but at an-
" other Seaſon in which they uſed, for particular Reaſons, to ſacrifice Lambs and Sheep
" in order to obtain Preſages,

" THEY look'd upon it as an ill Omen, if while they were ripping up the Beaſt's " Side, it roſe up and eſcaped out of the Hands of thoſe who held it down. They
" alſo look'd upon it as ill-boding, if the Weaſand, which generally joins to the Harſ-
" let, happened to break, and had thereby prevented their taking it out entire; or if " the Lights were torn, or the Heart putrified, and ſo on; Particulars which I did " not enquire into. I remember the above-mention'd, becauſe I heard the Indians
" talk of them; and theſe enquir'd of one another during their Sacrifices, whether the " Omens were propitious or unhappy, not ſuſpecting that ſo young a Child would take " notice of them.

" THE Sacrifices concluded with a Feaſt, when they eat the Fleſh of the ſacrificed
" Victims; this they diſtributed among all the Perſons who were preſent at this Solem" nity, viz. to the Incas, and afterwards to the Curacas, and their Train, according to
" to their reſpective Ranks. After they had been thus ſerv'd up with Meat, Bread, which " Garcilaſſo calls Cancu, was given them. They then ſerved in other kinds of Victuals,
" all which they uſed to eat without drinking; the Peruvians not being allow'd to drink
" at Meals. They never drank till theſe were over, but then they would drink as copi-
" ouſly as any of the European Nations."

THEY had alſo other Feſtivals. That to which Garcilaſſo gives the Name of [a] Citu was very remarkable, and might be look'd upon as a general Luſtration or Purging by [a] It was celebrated on the firſt Day of the Moon of September after the Equinox; as Garcilaſſo informs us.

Sacrifice. The Deſign of this Luſtration was to cleanſe the Soul from thoſe Pollutions which it contracts with the human Body, and to preſerve the latter from the Diſeaſes to which it is expoſed. This People always prepared themſelves for it by Faſting; were obliged to abſtain from all Commerce with Women, and faſt for twenty-four Hours. The Peruvians, the Night after the Faſt, uſed to knead Pieces or Balls of Cancu, in a very devout manner; laid them in earthen Kettles, and parboil'd them till ſuch Time as the Cancu was collected into one great Lump. Of this they made two Sorts, one was mixed with Blood, which they drew from between the Eye-Brows and Noſtrils of young Children. All thoſe who had faſted, waſh'd their Bodies before Day-break, and afterwards rubb'd their Heads, their Faces, their Stomachs, Shoulders, Arms, and Thighs, with the above-mention'd Dough, in order, ſaid they, by this Purification, to drive away Diſeaſes and all kinds of Infirmities. The Purification being ended, the oldeſt Perſon of the higheſt Quality in each Family, took ſome of the above-mention'd Dough, rubb'd the Door of his Houſe with it, and left it ſticking, to ſhew that his Houſe was purifi'd. The High-Prieſt perform'd the ſame Ceremony in the Palace, and in the Temple of the Sun, whilſt his Subalterns or Deputies purified the Chapels and other ſacred Places. The Moment the Sun began to appear, they fell to worſhipping it. An Inca of the Royal Family preſented himſelf in the great Square at Cuſco, magnificently clad, having a Lance in his Hand, adorn'd with Feathers of various Colours, and enrich'd with a great Number of Gold Rings; which Lance was alſo uſed for a Standard in War-Time. This Incas went and join'd himſelf to four others, who likewiſe were arm'd with Lances, which he touch'd with his own; and this was a kind of Conſecration. He then declared, that the Sun had made choice of them to drive away Diſeaſes and Infirmities; upon which theſe four Miniſters of the Sun immediately ſet out to execute their Order: They then viſited the ſeveral Quarters or Diſtricts, upon which Occaſion every Body came out of their Houſes, ſhook their Garments, and rubb'd their Heads, Faces, Arms, and Thighs. Such were the Ceremonies which they thought purify'd them: The whole was accompanied with great Acclamations of Joy. The Miniſters of the Sun took away thoſe Evils which the People had juſt got rid of, and drove them to five or ſix Leagues Diſtance from the City.

THE Night following, the above-mention'd Incas ran up and down with Straw-Torches, after which they came out of the City: This nocturnal Luſtration was of Service in driving out thoſe Evils to which the People are expoſed in the Night-Time, as that of the Lances had been ſerviceable in repelling thoſe of the Day. They threw into the River in which the People had waſh'd themſelves, thoſe half-burnt Torches, and whenever any Pieces of them were found by the Water-Side, they would run away from them as if they had been infected with the Plague. Theſe Feaſts concluded with Rejoicings, intermix'd with Prayers of Thanks and Sacrifices to the Sun.

The Religion of ſome Nations ſubject to the INCAS.

IN this Article we ſhall only give a tranſient Account of thoſe Nations whoſe Idolatry the Incas deſtroy'd in order to eſtabliſh their own. [a] Thoſe of the Valley of Rimac, afterwards call'd Lima, worſhipped the Idol Rimac under the Figure of a Man, who anſwer'd ſuch Queſtions as were made it, like the antient Oracles of Greece. Rimac is as much as to ſay, He who ſpeaks. This Idol was lodg'd in a very magnificent Temple, which however was not ſo pompous as that of Pachacamac.

[a] The Yuncas.

CAPTIF sacrifié par les ANTIS.

THEY alſo worſhip'd Pachacamac, but offer'd human Victims in his Honour; and ſo great was the Veneration they bore him, that they did not dare to once caſt their Eyes up to him. Their Kings and Prieſts always walk'd backwards whenever they entered his Temple, and came out of it in the ſame manner, without ſo much as once lifting up their Eyes towards the Idol.

THE Antis, a People who inhabit towards the Mountains of Peru, worſhip'd Tygers and Adders, and alſo the Herb Coca. They put all their Captives to Death without the leaſt Mercy, but with this Difference, that a Priſoner of no Diſtinction was immediately put to Death, whereas a Man who was thought worthy of that fatal Honour, was ſacrificed with great Solemnity; for which Purpoſe he was ſtripp'd naked; then they tied him to a great Stake, and afterwards ſlaſh'd his whole Body with Knives and Razors made of a Flint-Stone ground very ſharp. They did not immediately tear him to Pieces, but firſt cut the Fleſh from off the moſt brawny Parts, ſuch as the Calves of the Legs, the Thighs, and Buttocks, &c. after which, their Men, Women, and Children ſmear'd themſelves with the Blood of theſe unhappy Wretches, and devour'd them before they were dead. The Women uſed to rub the Tip of their Breaſts with their Blood, and afterwards gave their Children the Blood of their Enemies to ſuck, mix'd with the Milk which Nature had given them for the Suſtenance of thoſe little Creatures. Theſe inhuman Wretches call'd this bloody Execution a religious Ceremony, and rank'd all ſuch as had ſuffer'd Death with Courage, or rather with a ſavage Bravery, in the Number of their Gods, and lodg'd them under the Huts on the Tops of their Mountains; but ſuch as ſunk under the Violence of the Tortures were thrown among the Carrion.

THE Savages of the Province of Manta worſhip'd the Sea, Fiſhes, Tygers, Lions, and ſeveral other wild Beaſts, as alſo an Emerald of a prodigious Size, which they uſed to expoſe to public View in their ſolemn Feſtivals. They uſed to flay their Priſoners of War, and after having ſtuffed their Skins with Earth and Aſhes, hung them up as Trophies on the Gates of the Temples of their Idols. We ſhall wave a farther Deſcription of theſe Abſurdities, ſince they would only tire the Reader.

The Notions the PERUVIANS have of their Origin, &c.

THEY [a] relate, "That a Man of extraordinary Shape, whoſe Name was Choun, "and whoſe Body had neither Bones or Muſcles, came from the North into their "Country; that he levell'd Mountains, fill'd up Vallies, and open'd himſelf a Paſ-"ſage through the moſt inacceſſible Places. This Choun created the firſt Inhabitants "of Peru, giving them the Herbs and wild Fruits of the Field for their Suſtenance. "They alſo related, that this firſt Founder of Peru, having been injur'd by ſome Sa-"vages who inhabited the Plains, chang'd Part of the Ground, which before had been "very fruitful, into Sand, forbid the Rain to fall, and dried up the Plants: But that "being afterwards moved with Compaſſion, he opened the Springs, and ſuffered the "Rivers to flow. This Choun was worſhip'd as a God, till ſuch Time as Pachacamac "came from the South."

CHOUN diſappear'd after the Arrival of Pachacamac, who was much mightier, and "metamorphos'd all the Men whom Choun had created, into wild Beaſts."

THE

THE Peruvians had ſome Knowledge of the Flood; but as it would be a difficult matter to draw any Thing accurate from the Account they have given of it, we refer the Reader to the Inca Garcilaſſo's Hiſtory.

WE ſhall not take any notice here of the great Veneration they paid to the Rainbow; their ſuperſtitious Opinion concerning Comets, the Predictions which they drew from Dreams, nor of the Opinion they had that the Sun at its Setting uſed to plunge himſelf into the Ocean, where it loſt its Light and Heat, both which it recover'd after having paſs'd under the Earth, which they placed on the Surface of the Waters, and that it afterwards roſe in the Morning through the Gates of the Eaſt. Hence we may judge of the Nature of the human Mind, when uninform'd of certain Things, and whether the People of all Countries are not diſpoſed to receive the ſame Impreſſions of Superſtition.

WE ſhall conclude this Article of their Religion with the Notion they had of Eclipſes. Whenever the Sun was eclipſed, they imagined he was angry with them, and look'd on the Diſorder, which, ſaid they, appear'd in his Countenance, as a manifeſt Proof of it. When the Moon was eclipſed, they fancied it was ſick; and when total, that it would infallibly die; that then it would fall from the Sky, that all would be deſtroy'd, and the World be at an End. In order to prevent theſe Misfortunes, they, the Moment the Eclipſe began, [a] made a prodigious Noiſe with Horns, Trumpets, and Drums. They tied Dogs to Trees, and whipped them unmercifully, in order to make them bark ſo very loud, that the Moon, whom they thought was now fallen in a Swoon through the Violence of Pain, and who lov'd thoſe Creatures, becauſe of the ſignal Services they had formerly done her, was forced to awake at their Cries.

Their Prieſts, Diſcipline, Nuns, &c.

NONE but the Incas, who were of the Royal Family, were admitted to be Prieſts of the Sun; but thoſe who were Incas by a ſpecial Grant, i. e. had been raiſed to that Honour for their Merit, were allowed to officiate in the inferior Services of religious Worſhip.

WE have already mention'd the Sacrifices which the Prieſts made to the Sun, to which we will now add, that they did not always ſacrifice in the ſame Place, but frequently in the Court of the Temple of the Sun; but that the Sacrifices of the chief Feaſt of the Sun were perform'd in the great Square at Cuſco: The Prieſts were obliged to enter the Temple of the Sun bare-footed and bare-legg'd.

" [b] THEY always choſe one of the King's Uncles or Brothers for the Sovereign Pon-" tiff, in Default of which they were obliged to elect a legitimate Relation of his. The " Prieſts had no Habit peculiar to their Order, but in all thoſe Provinces where the Sun
" had a great Number of Temples, none but the Natives, and ſuch as were related to the " chief Man of each Province, were allow'd to exerciſe that religious Employment.
" The chief Prieſt, who was ſomething like a Biſhop among us, was obliged to be an

" in their Sacrifices and Ceremonies, their Incas were always elected as Superiors in

" ving any room to ſay they were deſpiſed, or treated in an arbitrary Manner. The " chief Prieſt told the People the Things he had conſulted the Sun about, and what " the latter had commanded him to declare to them, according to the Doctrine of their " Religion. In a word, he declared thoſe Things to them which he had diſcover'd by " Auguries, Sacrifices, and ſuch like Superſtitions as prevail'd among them. They give " their Prieſts a Name which ſignifies to gueſs or divine.

" THERE were ſeveral Apartments in the Houſe of the Sun, appropriated to the " Prieſts and Domeſtics, who were all, as we before obſerved, Incas by ſpecial Grant: " For no Indian, tho' of ever ſo great Quality, was allow'd to enter into it, unleſs he " were an Inca; neither were the Ladies ſuffer'd to go into it, nor even the King's " Wives or Daughters. The Prieſts adminiſtred in the Temple in their turns weekly, " which they conſulted by the Quarters of the Moon, during which they abſtain'd " from all Commerce with their Wives, and continued in the Temple Day and Night". All the Time that the Prieſts and Miniſters of the Religion of the Incas were performing their reſpective Functions in the Temples, in which they adminiſter'd weekly, as was before obſerv'd, they were maintain'd out of the Revenues of the Sun. This was the Name they gave to the Produce of certain Lands which they gave to that Planet as his Demeſns or Inheritance, which [a] generally included about a third Part of the Lands of each Province.

THESE People had alſo Nuns among them, who devoted a perpetual Virginity to the Sun. They were ſo very ſcrupulous upon this Head, that they always made choice of Girls under eight Years of Age, to prevent their being impoſed upon. They were particularly cautious with regard to thoſe Virgins of the religious Houſe at Cuſco, they being deſign'd for the Sun's Wives; for which reaſon none were admitted into that Convent but the Daughters of the Incas of the Blood-Royal, which was not mix'd with that of Strangers. The moſt antient among theſe was choſen as [b] Abbeſs. Theſe had the Direction of the Younger; taught them all kind of Works, inſtructed them in Divine Service, and had an Eye to their Infirmities: Their Confinement was ſo cloſe that they never had an Opportunity of ſeeing either Men or Women; nor had they either Turning-Box or Parlour in their Convent. We are aſſur'd that theſe Injunctions were obſerv'd with the utmoſt Exactneſs, and that the Law by which thoſe who broke the Vow they had made to the Sun their Husband was puniſh'd, was inexpreſſably rigorous. Garcilaſſo ſays as follows upon that Head. [c] " If among ſo great a Number of Religious " any one of them ſhould happen to violate her Chaſtity, there was a Law, by which " it was enacted, that the Nun ſo offending ſhould be buried alive, and her Gallant " hang'd. But becauſe the putting to Death of one Man only, was thought vaſtly diſ- " proportionate to ſo great a Crime as that of violating a Maiden devoted to the Sun their " God, and the Father of their Kings, it was moreover enacted by the ſame Law, " that not only the Perſon offending ſhould be puniſh'd, but alſo his Wife, his Children, " his Servants, his Relations, and all the Inhabitants where he reſided, not excepting " the Babes who ſuck'd at the Breaſt. For this Purpoſe, they razed the City and pav'd " it with Stones, by which means every Part of it remain'd deſart, curs'd, and excom- " municated, as a Teſtimony of that City's having given Birth to ſo deteſtable a Wretch: " They likewiſe endeavour'd to hinder any one from treading upon that Ground, and " even Beaſts, if poſſible. This Law, however, was never put in Execution, be- " cauſe no one ever happen'd to be guilty of this Crime in that Country.

[c] Book IV. Chap. 3.

" THEY had Convents like to thoſe of Cuſco in all the chief Provinces of the Em" pire. In theſe they admitted [a] Maidens of all Ranks or Degrees, whether of the " royal Blood and legitimate, or Baſtards and of foreign Extraction. They ſometimes
" admitted into them, which however was a very great Favour, the Daughters of ſuch
" Lords as had Vaſſals under them, not excepting thoſe of the meaneſt Citizens, pro" vided they were beautiful; for upon that Condition they were educated, in order to " their becoming one Day the Daughters of the Sun, or the Inca's Miſtreſſes, and were
" ſuperintended with as much Care as the Women dedicated to that Planet. Theſe,
" like the reſt, had young Women to wait upon them, and were maintain'd at the " King's Expence, in Quality of his Wives. Moreover, they, as well as the Virgins
" of the Sun, generally ſpent their Time in ſpinning, and in making Robes or Gowns
" for the Inca, who always diſtributed Part of them among his Relations and the Cu-
" racas, as likewiſe among the moſt renowned Generals, and all ſuch as he was deſi-
" rous of diſtinguiſhing by his Favour; which was look'd upon as both juſt and ſeem-
" ly, ſince thoſe Habits were wrought by his own, and not by the Sun's Wives, and " were made for himſelf, and not for his Father.

" THE above-mention'd Women had alſo their Mamacunas like thoſe of Cuſco, but " with this Difference, that theſe were always legitimate Children, of the royal Fami" ly, and were oblig'd to ſpend their Lives in thoſe Convents, to all which Conditions
" the Wives of the Sun were oblig'd to ſubmit; whereas in the other Convents of the " Empire, they receiv'd Maidens of all Ranks and Conditions, provided they were " beautiful, and Virgins of unſullied Chaſtity; they being devoted to the Incas, to whom " they were deliver'd up at firſt asking; and theſe were allow'd to keep them as their " Miſtreſſes, in caſe they happen'd to be agreeable in their Eyes. Theſe Convents were " in reality ſo many Seraglios, like thoſe of the Eaſt. Such as attempted to violate the " Honour of the Inca's Wives, were puniſh'd with as much Severity as thoſe who de-" bauch'd the Virgins devoted to the Sun. The Law had enacted in this Manner, be" cauſe the Crime was equally enormous.

" SUCH young Women as had been once pitch'd upon for the King's Miſtreſſes, and " had had any Commerce with him, were not allowed to return home without his " Leave, but attended in the Palace in quality of Ladies of the Bed-Chamber to the " Queen, till ſuch Time as they were permitted to return back into their own Coun" tries, where they receiv'd the utmoſt Civilities, and were waited upon with a reli" gious Reſpect, becauſe the People of their Country thought it a great Honour to have " one of the Inca's Wives. As for ſuch Nuns as were not choſen by the King for his " Miſtreſſes, they remain'd in the Convent, till they grew in Years; and after the " King's Death, his Miſtreſſes had the Title of Mamacuna beſtowed upon them by his " Succeſſor, becauſe they were appointed Governantes of his Miſtreſſes, whom they
" uſed to inſtruct, as a Mother-in-Law would teach her Step-Daughters." We ſhould not have related theſe ſeveral Particulars, which ſeem fitter for an Epiſode in Romance, than to embelliſh the Religion of a People, had not the Peruvians conſider'd every Circumſtance which relates to their Sovereigns, as ſo many religious Ceremonies.

THERE were ſeveral other Ladies of the Blood-Royal, who led a retired Life in their own Houſes, and made a private Vow of Chaſtity without entering into any Convent. " If " at any Time they went abroad, 'twas only to viſit their neareſt She-Relations, when " they were either indiſpoſed, in Labour, about cutting off the Hair of their eldeſt
" Children, or about giving them a Name. Theſe Women were ſo conſpicuous for " their Chaſtity, and the Strictneſs of their Lives, that they were honour'd with the " peculiar Title of Oello's, a Name which was ſacred in their idolatrous Religion.

" Theſe

" Theſe Ladies were obliged to be ſincerely chaſte, and not diſguiſe it with a falſe Var-
" niſh; for if ever the leaſt Trick or Artifice was diſcover'd in their Conduct, they " were either burnt alive, or thrown into the Lions Den. A Widow never ſtirr'd out " of her Houſe during the firſt Year of her Widowhood, and ſeldom married again if
" ſhe had no Children; and if ſhe had any, ſhe ſpent her Life in perpetual Continence,
" and never enter'd a ſecond Time into the married State. This Virtue gain'd them
" ſo univerſal an Eſteem, that ſeveral very conſiderable Privileges were made in their Fa" vour; and there were many Laws and Statutes, by which it was expreſly enacted, that
" the Widows Lands ſhould be plough'd ſooner than thoſe of the Curacas, or even of
" the Incas."

BEFORE we conclude this Article, it will be proper to take ſome notice of their Confeſſions and the Penance that followed after it. Perſuaded from Reaſon and the Convictions of Conſcience, that the Sins of Mankind do neceſſarily draw down Evils, and the avenging Arm of Heaven, they imagin'd themſelves bound to expiate their Crimes by Sacrifices and Penances. [a] There were Confeſſors eſtabliſh'd in all Parts of the Empire, who always impos'd a Chaſtiſement proportionable to the Greatneſs of the Sin. There were alſo certain Women who had a Share in this religious Function. In the Province of Collaſuio they employ'd Charms for the Diſcovery of Sins, and ſometimes diſcover'd them by inſpecting the Intrails of Victims. He who conceal'd his Faults was beat with Stones. They confeſs'd themſelves on all thoſe Occaſions where the divine Aſſiſtance is immediately neceſſary; but the great and ſolemn Confeſſion was made whenever the Inca was ſick. The Inca confeſs'd himſelf to the Sun only, after which he waſh'd himſelf in a running Stream, addreſſing it in theſe Words: Receive the Sins which I have confeſſed to the Sun, and carry them into the Sea. Their Penances conſiſted in Faſtings, Oblations, withdrawing into the moſt deſart Part of the Mountains, Scourgings, &c.

Their Marriages, and the Education of their Children.

WE ſhall begin this Article with the Marriage of ſuch as were either nearly or diſtantly related to the Incas, of which [b] Garcilaſſo gives the following Account.
" The King caus'd to aſſemble annually, or every two Years, at a certain Time, all the " marriageable young Men and Maidens of his Family, that were in Cuſco. The ſtated
" Age was eighteen or twenty for the Maidens, and twenty four for the Men; for they " were never allow'd to marry younger, becauſe, ſaid they, 'twas fitting the Parties
" ſhould be of an Age requiſite for the well-governing their Families, and affirm'd that " 'twas mere Folly to diſpoſe of them ſooner in Marriage.

" WHEN the Marriage was agreed upon, the Inca ſet himſelf in the Midſt of them,
" they all ſtanding one by the other: He then call'd them by their Names, after which
" taking them by the Hand, he made them promiſe a mutual Faith, which being done,
" he gave them into the Hands of their Parents. Then the new-married Couple went " to the Houſe of the Bridegroom's Father, and the Wedding was ſolemniz'd for three,
" four Days, or more, according as the neareſt Relations judg'd proper. The young " Women who were married in this Manner, were afterwards call'd the lawful Wives, " or the Wives given by the Hand of the Inca; a Title which was beſtow'd purely to " do them the greater Honour. When the Inca had thus married his Relations, the next " Day the Miniſters appointed for that Purpoſe married the reſt of the young Men, Sons

" to

" to the Inhabitants of Cuſco, in the ſame Order, according to the Diviſion of the ſeve-
" ral Diſtricts, call'd Higher and Lower Cuſco.

" THE Relations furniſh'd the Moveables or Utenſils of the Houſe, every one bring" ing Something; and this they perform'd very punctually among themſelves, and ne" ver made any Sacrifices or other Ceremonies at their Weddings.

" THE Governors and Curacas were, by their Employments, oblig'd to marry the " young Men and Maidens of their Provinces in the ſame Manner. They were bound " to aſſiſt in Perſon at thoſe Weddings, or ſolemnize them themſelves, in quality of Lords
" and Fathers of their Country.

" THE Corporations of every City were oblig'd to provide a Houſe for their new-" married Citizens, and the neareſt Relations to furniſh them with Moveables. They " did not allow the Inhabitants of one Province or City to marry with thoſe of another,
" but were all oblig'd to marry among themſelves, and with their own Relations, like the " antient Tribes of Iſrael; which was done to prevent their Nations and Families from " being blended and confounded with one another. They nevertheleſs excepted Siſters.
" All the Inhabitants of the ſame City, or of the ſame Province, call'd themſelves Re" lations, in caſe they were of the ſame Nation, and ſpoke the ſame Language. To " which let us add, that they were forbid to quit their Province or City, or to go
" from one Diſtrict to another, becauſe they could not confound the Decuriæ which had " been eſtabliſh'd by the Citizens; beſides, their Corporations regulated the Houſes,
" which they were not permitted to do more than once, and that only in their own Di-
" ſtrict, and with the Conſent of their Relations.

" THE Heir to the Crown uſed to marry his own Siſter, in Imitation of the Sun and " the firſt Inca. For, ſaid they, ſince the Sun took the Moon his Siſter to Wife, and " had married their two firſt Children together, 'twas but reaſonable the ſame Order
" ſhould be obſerv'd with regard to the king's eldeſt Children. They alſo added, that " the Blood of the Sun muſt not be mix'd with that of Men; that the Succeſſion ought " to devolve on the Heir both of the Father and Mother's Side, and that otherwiſe he
" loſt his Right; for they were very exact with regard to the Succeſſion to the Crown.

" THE elder Brother was lawful Heir to the Crown, and married his own Siſter;
" but in Default of an own Siſter, he married that Woman of the Blood-Royal, who " was neareſt related to him, whether ſhe were his half Siſter, his Couſin, his Neice,
" or his Aunt; and this She-Relation might inherit the Crown in Default of Male
" Iſſue, as in Spain. In caſe the King's eldeſt Siſter brought him no Children, he " married her ſecond or third Siſter, till ſuch Time as ſome were born to him.

" THIS Wife was call'd Coya, i. e. Queen or Empreſs: Theſe Kings, beſides their " lawful Wife, uſually kept ſeveral Miſtreſſes, ſome of whom were Aliens, and others
" related in the fourth Degree of Conſanguinity, and even beyond. They look'd upon
" thoſe Children which they had by their Relations as legitimate, becauſe they were
" of their own Blood; but thoſe which the Incas had by Aliens, were conſidered as " Baſtards; for notwithſtanding the Reſpect that was ſhewn them becauſe of their roy" al Extraction, they yet did not revere them as much as thoſe of the Royal-Blood:
" Theſe they worſhipp'd as Gods, but honour'd the others as Men." The firſt Compartment of the Plate repreſents a Marriage ſolemniz'd by the Incas.

PURCHAS

MANIERE dont L'YNCAS marie CEUX de son SANG.

On COUPE les CHEVEUX, et on donne un NOM aux FILS de L'YNCAS.

PURCHAS relates, on the Teſtimony of the Spaniſh Writers, that the Bridegroom uſed to go to the Houſe of his Bride, and put her on the Otoja, a kind of Shoe. If the Bride were a Virgin, the Shoe was made of Wool; but if a Widow, 'twas made of a kind of Reed. The Royal Habit of the Incas requires a particular Explication; for which Purpoſe we ſhall borrow the Deſcription of it from the Author of the Hiſtory of the Incas. "The Inca generally wore a kind of Twiſt about his Head, call'd Lauta, of about an "Inch wide, and made almoſt in a ſquare Form, which went five or ſix Times round "his Head, with a colour'd Border that reach'd from one Temple to the other.

"HIS Habit was a Waiſtcoat that reach'd down to the Knee, call'd by the Na-"tives Uncu, and by the Spaniards Cuſma, which is not a Word of the general "Language, but rather of ſome particular Province. Inſtead of a Cloke they wore a "kind of Surtout call'd Yacola. The Nuns alſo made a kind of ſquare Purſe for the "Incas, which they wore it as were in a Sling, tied to a Twiſt very neatly wrought, and "about the Breadth of two Fingers. Theſe Purſes, call'd Chuſpa, were uſed only to "hold the Herb Cuca or Cocoa, which the Indians generally chew. This Cuca was "not then ſo common as in our Days; for none but the Inca was allow'd to eat of "it, his Relations and certain Curacas excepted, to whom the King uſed to ſend year-"ly ſeveral Baskets full, by way of Preſent, which was look'd upon as a very great "Favour."

FROM their Marriages we paſs on to thoſe Cuſtoms which relate to their Children, and the Education they gave them. "[a] The Incas always made great Feaſts, and extraor-"dinary Rejoicings at the weaning of their eldeſt Children; becauſe the Right of Se-"niority, particularly of Males, was had in great Eſteem by the Incas, and after their "Example, by all their Subjects; but few Rejoicings were made at the Birth of their "Daughters or younger Children.

"THEY wean'd their Children at two years old, and cut off the Hair which they had "brought with them into the World; never touching them till that Time, nor did they "give them the Name by which they were to be call'd. When this Ceremony was "to be perform'd, all the Relations met together, and he who was choſen Godfather "firſt cut the Child's Hair with his Sciſſars, if we may give that Name to certain Ra-"zors made of Flint-Stone, which they employ'd for that Purpoſe, the Indians being "unacquainted with thoſe Sciſſars uſed among us. After the Godfather, the reſt cut "off ſome of the Child's Hair in their Turn, according to their Age and Quality; "which done, they all agreed upon giving it a Name, and then offer'd it their ſeveral "Gifts; ſome giving Clothes, others Cattle, others Weapons of ſeveral Kinds, and others "Gold and Silver Drinking-Veſſels, which, however, were preſented to none but thoſe "of the Royal Extraction, for the common ſort of People were not allow'd to uſe them, "unleſs by a ſpecial Grant.

"THE Preſents being made, they all drank copiouſly, otherwiſe the Feſtival would "have been good for nought, and danc'd and ſung till Night. This laſted for three "or four Days, according to the Quality of the Child's Relations. They obſerv'd al-"moſt the ſame Ceremony at the Weaning of the Heir to the Crown, and alſo cut off "his Hair, if we except that this was a Royal Solemnity, and that the High Prieſt of "the Sun was always choſen for his Godfather. On this Occaſion all the Curacas of "the Kingdom aſſiſted perſonally, or by their Ambaſſadors, at the Solemnity, which "held for twenty Days together, and made rich Preſents to the Prince, ſuch as Gold, "Silver, precious Stones, and the moſt valuable Things of their reſpective Pro-"vinces.

[a] Hiſtory of the Incas of Peru, Book IV. Chap 11. The Figure under the Marriage of the Incas repreſents that Ceremony.

" As Subjects love to imitate their Princes, the Curacas, and in general all thoſe of " Peru, made likewiſe great Rejoicings on theſe Occaſions, according to their Rank and " Quality; and this was one of their moſt ſolemn Feſtivals.

" THEY were extremely careful not to bring up their Children too tenderly, and " this was generally obſerv'd from the King to the Beggar. The Moment the Child " was born, it was waſh'd with cold Water, and then wrapped up in Swaddling- " Clothes, which they repeated every Morning, after having left that Water in the " Dew the greateſt Part of the Time. Moreover, when the Mother was for fondling " her Child in an extraordinary Manner, ſhe took Water in her Mouth, and ſpirted it " over all his Body, the Crown of the Head excepted, which ſhe never touched. " When thoſe People were asked why they did this, they anſwer'd, that they did it " to enure their Children to Cold and Toil, and ſtrengthen their Limbs. They never " ſwath'd their Arms till they were upwards of three Months old, ſaying, That it " would weaken them: Moreover, they generally keep them in a Cradle, which was " a kind of Bench with four Feet, as we ſee it repreſented in the Figure, one of which " was made ſhorter than the reſt, purpoſely that they might be rock'd with greater " Eaſe. The Bed in which the Child lay, was a kind of coarſe Net, in which the Babe " was wrapp'd on both Sides of the Cradle, to prevent his falling out.

" MOTHERS never took their Children in their Arms, not even when they gave 'em " ſuck; for, ſaid they, they would always be for ſtaying in them, were they to be us'd " to it, and then it would be a difficult matter to confine them to their Cradles. How- " ever, whenever they thought proper to take them out of it, they uſed to make a " Hole in the Ground, and ſet the Child upright in it Breaſt-high; they then ſwathed " them with old Clouts or Rags, in order to make them lie the ſofter, and at the ſame " Time gave them ſeveral Play-Things to divert them with, but never once took them " in their Arms, though they were the Children of the greateſt Lords in the Empire. " When a Mother wanted to give her Child ſuck, ſhe uſed to lay herſelf down upon it, " but never gave it ſuck above three Times a Day, viz. at Morning, Noon, and Even- " ing; nor would ſhe ever give it the Breaſt but at thoſe Times, and would let it ſquall " rather than ſuffer it to get a Habit of ſucking all-day-long. All the Women of that " Country did the ſame, and the Reaſon they gave for it was, that it made them na- " ſty, and ſubject to vomiting, that they became Gluttons when they grew up, and that " the Beaſts themſelves furniſh'd them with an Example, who never ſuckled their " Young but at certain Times of the Day, and not all-night-long. The greateſt La- " dy in the Empire brought up her Children herſelf, and never gave them to another " to nurſe, unleſs forc'd to it by ſome great Indiſpoſition; nor had ſhe any Commerce " with her Husband all the Time ſhe ſuckled it, for fear of ſpoiling her Milk, which " might throw the Child into a Conſumption."

As the Child grew up, they ſtrengthen'd its Body by Labour and Exerciſe, after which they were put under the Direction of the Amautas, who were the Peruvian Philoſophers or Doctors. Theſe Amautas regulated the Manners of their Youth, inſtructed them in the Ceremonies and Precepts of Religion, in the Laws of the Empire, and the Duty which Man owes to his Fellow-Creatures. The Minds of Children were cultivated almoſt from their moſt tender Infancy; at ſix or ſeven Years of Age they always had ſome Employment aſſign'd them, which was always ſuited to their Years. In fine, the Care they took to ſhun Idleneſs and Indolence was ſuch, as might juſtly put Nations infinitely more knowing than themſelves to the Bluſh. Nor were they leſs careful of flying from Luxury, ſtill more dangerous than Idleneſs, whoſe only Aim is to flatter the Senſes, and adminiſter Fuel to Vanity, to awake in us a Senſe for Pleaſure in Proportion as it decays in us, and which keeps the Spirits in a perpetual Hurry, even to the laſt Gaſp, notwithſtanding its Inability to produce the leaſt Fruits from all its Labours, or even to diſcover one ſingle Mark of it.

Their

Their Notions with regard to the Immortality of the Soul, and their Funeral Rites.

THE Amautas made a Diſtinction between the Body and Soul of Man, aſcribing Immortality to the latter, but as for the former they gave it no other Name than animated Earth. Moreover, " Experience, [a] ſays Garcilaſſo, taught them, that Animals " grow, and are indued with Senſation; they therefore ſuppoſed them to be informed " with a vegetative and ſenſitive Soul, but not with a reaſonable one. They were of O- " pinion that there was another Life after this, which would be happy for the Good, " but unhappy for the Wicked, to reward the former, and puniſh the latter. Further, " they divided the Univerſe into three Worlds; to the firſt, which was Heaven, they gave " the Name of Hanan-Pacha, or the High-World, where the Good receive the Recom- " pence of their Virtues; the ſecond Hurin-Pacha, or the Low-World, becauſe of Ge- " neration and Corruption; and the third Veu-Pacha, ſignifying the Center of the Earth, " or Inferior World, where the Wicked were to inhabit. They likewiſe gave the Name " of Cupaypa-Huacin to this laſt World, i. e. the Devil's Houſe: But they imagin'd " that the Life to come was a corporal one, pretty like that we paſs upon Earth, and made " the Repoſe of the High-World to conſiſt in leading a Life of Tranquility, free from " the Cares and Anxieties of this; but then on the other Side they affirm'd, that the " Lower-World, which we call Hell, was fill'd with all thoſe Diſeaſes and Evils which " afflict Mankind here below, without once enjoying the leaſt Interval of Repoſe or Con- " tentment. To this we muſt add, that they did not rank the ſenſual Pleaſures, nor " the Vices with which the Soul is ſullied, among the Pleaſures of the next Life; but " that they made all Happineſs to conſiſt in the Tranquility of both Soul and Body, " which they placed in a State wholly unruffled with Cares or Troubles.

" THE Incas alſo believed in an univerſal Reſurrection, but then their Minds did not " ſoar higher than this animal Life, for which they ſaid we were to riſe, but without " any Expectation of either Glory or Miſery. They were very careful of the Pairings " of their Nails, and the Combings of their Hair, or that which they cut off; theſe they " laid in the Crevices or Holes of Walls. If any of theſe Excreſcencies happen'd at any " Time to fall to the Ground, and were found by an Indian, he always took them up, " and laid them where they were before. This ſuperſtitious Cuſtom often raiſed my Cu- " rioſity to enquire into the Motives of it, and they all anſwer'd to this Purpoſe: Do you " know, ſaid they, that all who are born here below are to live again in this World, " and that the Souls will come out of their Graves with every Thing that belong'd to " their Bodies? In order therefore that we may not be put to a great deal of Trouble " in hunting after our Nails and Hair, in the prodigious Croud and Confuſion of that " Day, we depoſite them altogether in order that we may be able to find them immedi- " ately; nay, we wou'd, if poſſible, always ſpit in the ſame Place. Franciſco Lo- " pez de Gomara, ſpeaking of the Interment of the Kings and great Lords of Peru, ſays " as follows in the 225th Chapter of his Work. When the Spaniards opened thoſe Graves, " and ſcatter'd the Bones they found in them up and down, the Indians beſought them not to " act in that manner, that they might not prevent their finding them at the Day of Judg- " ment. Whence it is manifeſt that they believ'd in the Reſurrection of the Body, and the " Immortality of the Soul, &c.

[a] Hiſtory of the Incas, Book II. Cap. 7.

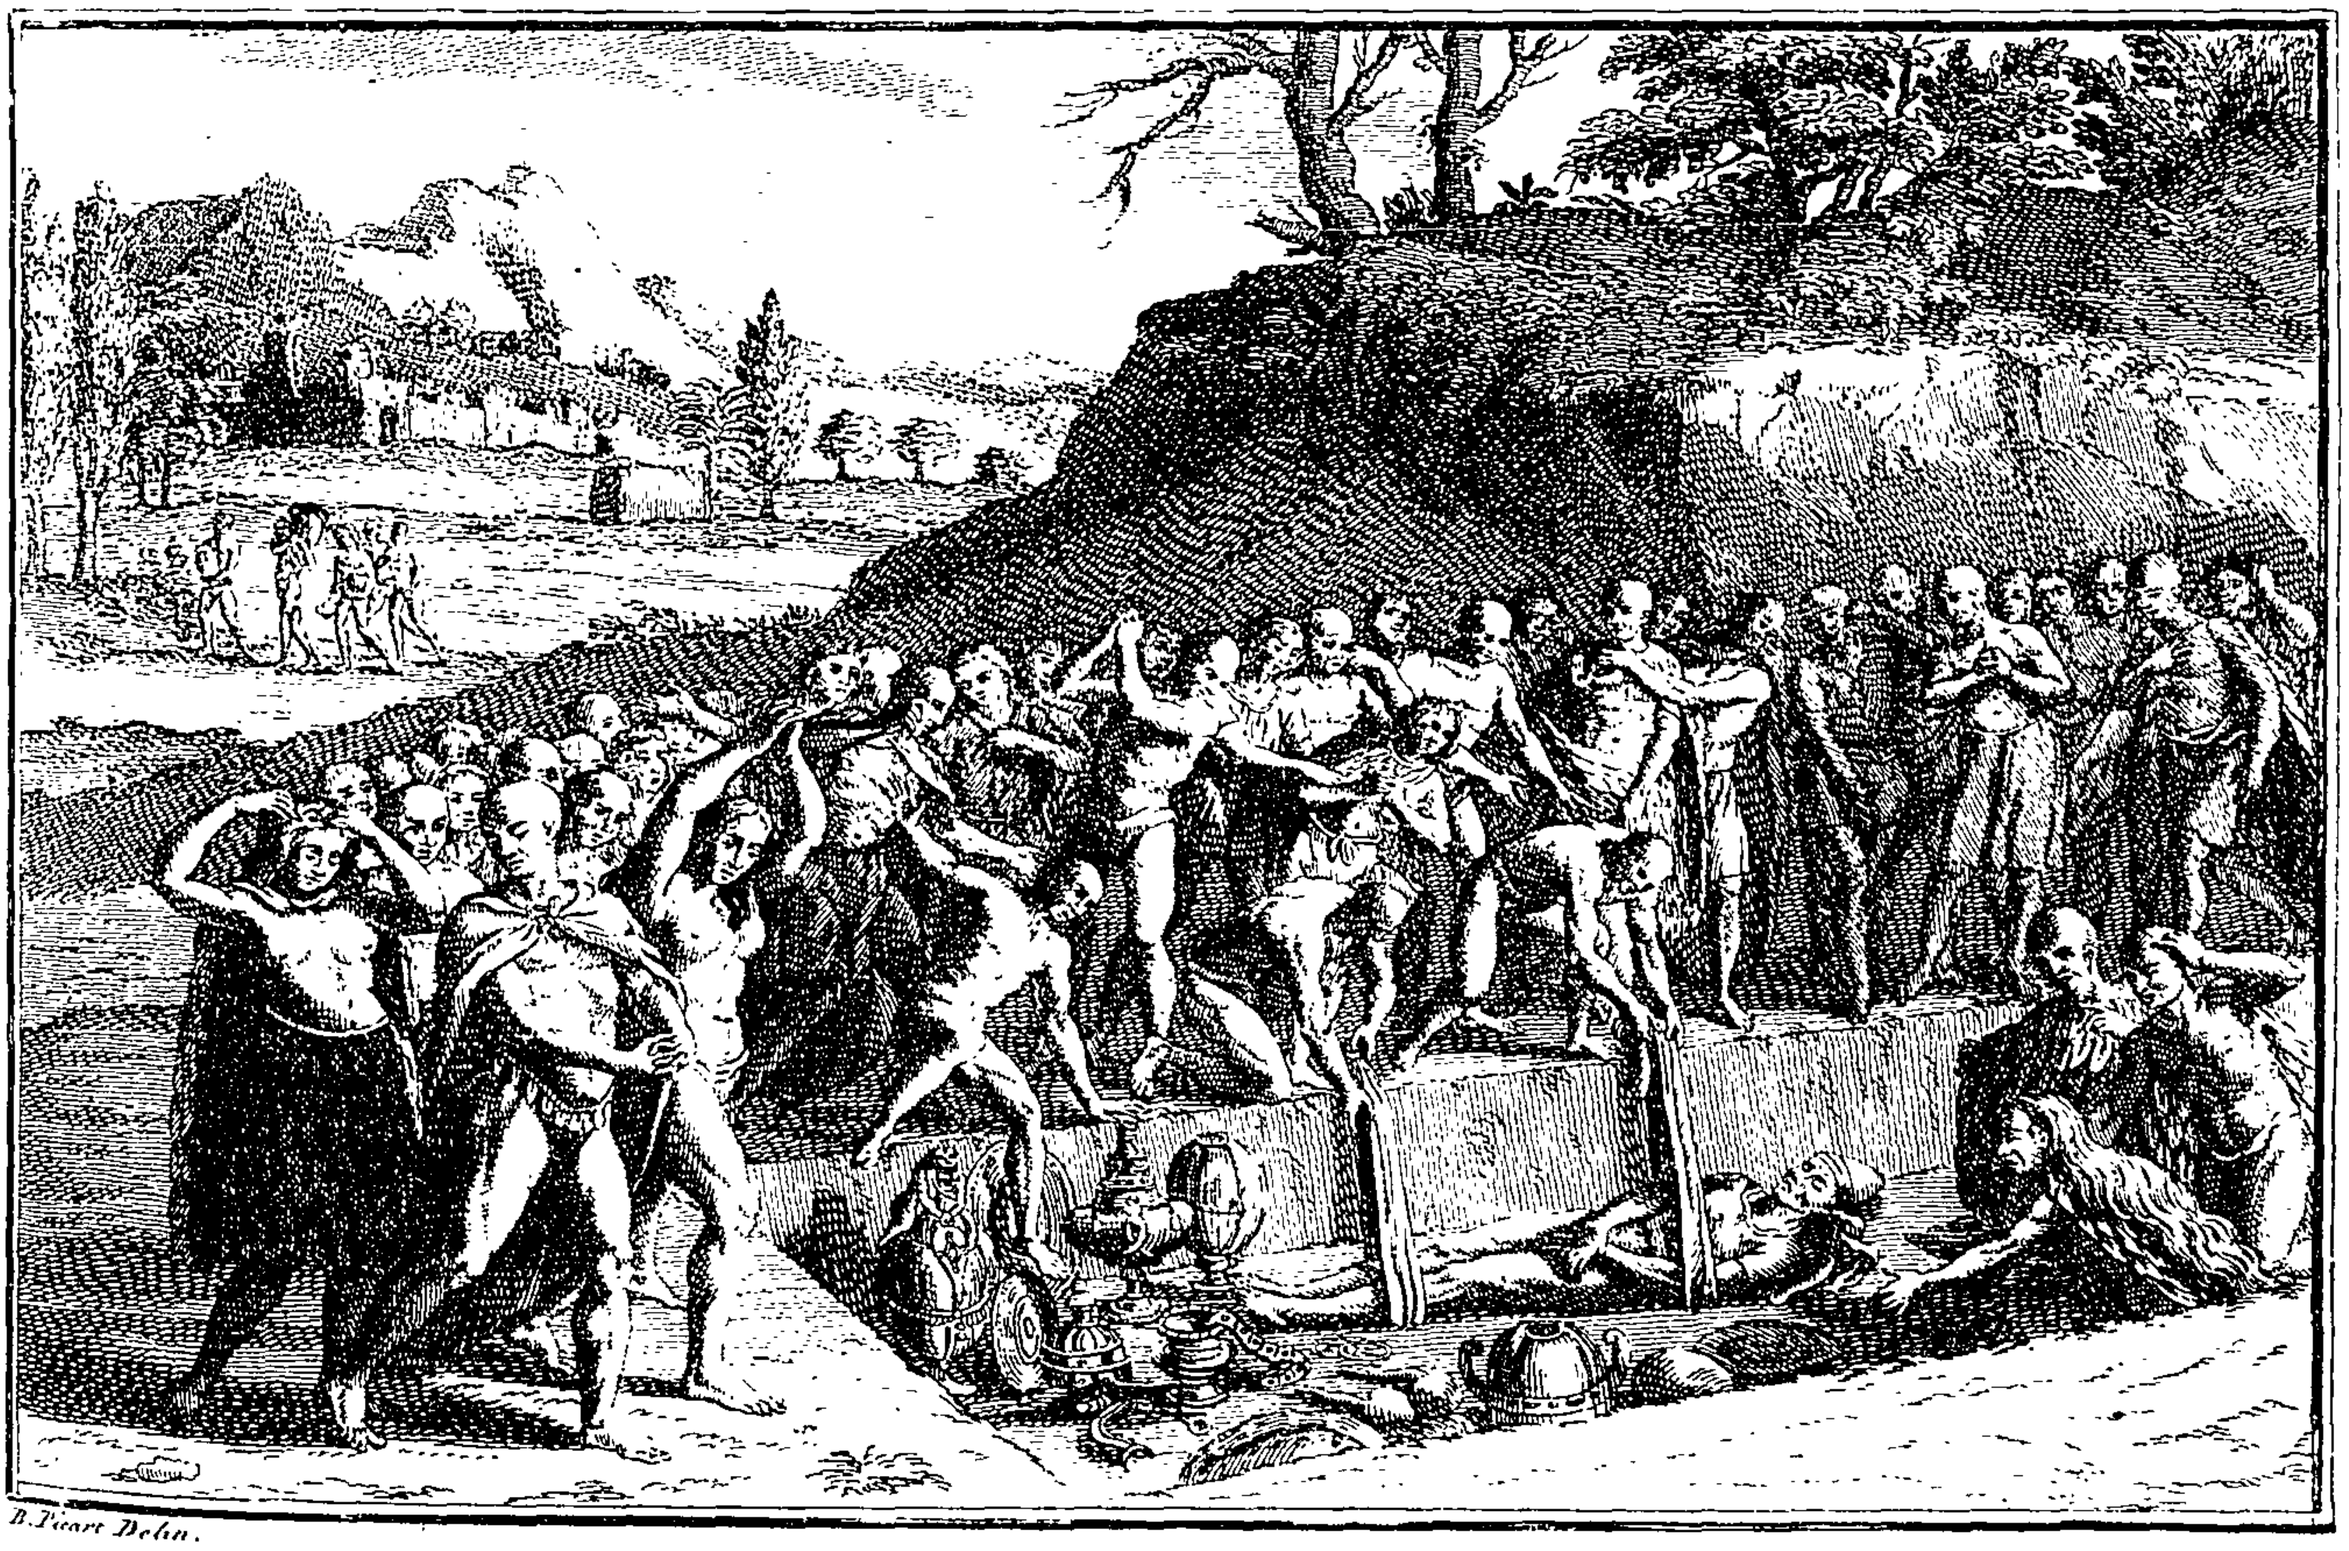
THE Peruvians embalm'd their dead Bodies in ſuch a Manner, as not only preſerv'd them from Rotteneſs and Corruption, [a] but alſo made them grow prodigiouſly hard and callous. They uſed to embalm the Bodies of their Incas after this manner: Whenever the Inca, or any great Man of the Empire, happen'd to die, his Wives and Domeſtics uſed to offer to be put to Death, in order to attend upon him in the other World; and there was ſometimes ſuch a Croud of them, that they were frequently oblig'd to diſmiſs Part of them. We may probably ſuppoſe, ſays a [b] Traveller, that the Prieſts hit upon ſome religious Motive to engage them to devote themſelves to Death in this manner, otherwiſe, wou'd it be poſſible for us to imagine, that Women ſhould be ſo extravagantly fond, as to diſpute who ſhould have the Pleaſure of being buried with their Husband? or that their great Men could have been able to procure one ſingle Domeſtic? They carry'd the Body to the Place of Interment, on a kind of Throne, ſupported by a ſort of Litter, which was followed by the Wives and Domeſtics of the Deceas'd, with Proviſions neceſſary for their Support in the next Life. During the Proceſſion, one of the neareſt Relations of the Deceas'd us'd to ſhoot ſome Victuals into his Mouth through a Tube, like that through which Children ſhoot their Peas, being perſuaded, that it would be impoſſible for the Deceas'd to undergo the Fatigues of that Journey without ſome ſuch Suſtenance. A wooden Statue repreſenting the Deceas'd was plac'd over his Grave, when the Artificer was there repreſented with his Work, and the Soldier with his Arms. The two Compartments repreſent the Ceremonies here deſcrib'd, and the manner of letting the Corpſe down into the Graves.



AFTER they had embalm'd the Bodies of the Incas, they ſet them before the Figure of the Sun in the Temple of Cuſco, and there offer'd Sacrifices to them, as to divine Perſons who were the Sun's Children. "The firſt Month after the King's Deceaſe was "ſpent in Tears; the Citizens wept all-day-long, and gave the higheſt Teſtimonies of "Sorrow; the People of the ſeveral Diſtricts of Cuſco us'd to aſſemble together, and car-"ried the Trophies, the Banners, the Weapons, the Clothes of the Inca, and all Things "that were to be buried with him, by way of honouring his Obſequies. Their Plaints and "Wailings were intermix'd with a Recital of the Victories the Inca had gain'd, his re-"markable Atchievements, and the Grants he had made to thoſe Provinces, where ſuch "and ſuch Perſons, which they nam'd, were born. The firſt Month of Mourning be-"ing expir'd, they renew'd it every Fortnight, every New-Moon, during the firſt Year. "In fine, they concluded it with all imaginable Solemnity and the deepeſt Lamentations; "for which Purpoſe they had certain Hir'd Mourners, who us'd to ſing the Virtues and "Atchievements of the Deceas'd in a melancholy Tone. In this manner all the Inha-"bitants of Cuſco uſed to mourn. The Incas of the Blood-Royal obſerv'd the ſame "Cuſtom, excepting that it was perform'd with greater Pomp and Solemnity.

"THE ſame Cuſtom was obſerv'd in all the other Provinces of the Empire, every "great Man giving the higheſt Teſtimonies of his Sorrow for the Death of his Sovereign. "They viſited all thoſe Places which the King had peculiarly diſtinguiſhed by his Favours "or Preſence, and left greater Teſtimonies of their Affection in them than in other Pla-"ces, intermixing the Recital of Favours and Grants which they had receiv'd from the "Deceas'd, with Sobs and Lamentations." They celebrated the Memory of their Curacas and other great Men after the ſame manner.

B. Picart Delin.

Maniere D'ENSEVELIR les GRANDS, du Perou,

In what Manner they diſtinguiſh'd the SEASONS.

HERE follows the Account which [a] Garcilaſſo gives us on this Head. "The "common People computed their Years by their Crops, and all in general by the "Summer and Winter Solſtices, but in a very particular Manner. There were ſixteen "Towers at Cuſco, viz. eight to the Eaſt, and as many to the Weſt, four being built "near one another; the two which ſtood in the Middle were not ſo high as the reſt, "and were about three Story high or thereabouts; the Towers ſtood at eight, ten, or "twenty Foot Diſtance one from the other; and thoſe on the Sides were much higher "than the Watch-Towers erected in the Ports of Spain, or on the Frontiers. They were "even employ'd to that Purpoſe, and the Space between the little Towers thro' which "the Sun paſſed at his Riſing and Setting, was the Point of the Solſtices.

"THE Inca, in order to make this Obſervation with greater Exactneſs, always plac'd "himſelf in a convenient Place, when he obſerv'd attentively whether the Sun roſe and "ſet between the two little Towers which ſtood Eaſt and Weſt. At the ſame Time the "moſt skilful Indians uſed alſo to make their Obſervations, and in this manner they fix'd "their Solſtices. This was the only Method the Indians had to find out the exact Time "of them, and never fix'd them to certain Days of the Month when they happened; "they not computing their Months by Days, but by Moons, as will be ſhewn in the "Sequel. Their Year conſiſted of twelve Moons, but they had not the Art of adjuſting it "with the Solar Year, which was longer by eleven Days, ſo that they were obliged to "have Recourſe to the Sun's Motion, in order to find the true Time of the Solſtices. "It was thus they divided one Year from another, and computed from the Solar when-"ever they ſow'd the Ground. Some Authors have indeed related that they were able "to compute the two Years together, but we have Reaſon to believe they were miſtaken, "ſince, had the Indians underſtood this kind of Calculation, they would undoubtedly "have fix'd the Solſtices according to the Days of the Month on which they happen, "and conſequently would have not built Towers, or taken ſuch great Pains to look for "the Riſing and Setting of the Sun.

"NEITHER were the Equinoxes unknown to them, for they always made great Re-"joicings at thoſe Seaſons. The Inhabitants of Cuſco at their vernal Equinox us'd to get "in their Maiz, and aſſembling together, made great Rejoicings, particularly at Col-"campara, the Garden of the Sun. But they kept one of their four principal Feaſts at "the Brumal Equinox. This People, in order to find out the exact Time of the Equi-"nox, had raiſed very rich Columns, very finely wrought, in the midſt of thoſe open "Places which were before the Temple of the Sun. Here their Prieſts uſed to aſſemble "daily a little before the Equinox, when they took a very exact Obſervation of the Sha-"dow which thoſe Columns projected. The Area where they ſtood form'd a Circle, from "the Center of which they drew a Line from Eaſt to Weſt: Repeated Experience had "taught them the Place where they were to look for the Point, and they eſtimated by the "Shadow of the Column upon the Line, their Proximity or Diſtance from the Equinox. "If the Shadow went round the Pillar from its Riſing to its Setting, and that there was "none at all when it was at the Meridian, they took that Day for the true Equinox; "whereupon they immediately adorn'd theſe Columns with Flowers and odoriferous "Herbs, and afterwards ſtrew'd them on the Sun's Seat or Throne, ſaying that he had "that Day ſet therein with all his radiant Light, and had ſtopt perpendicularly over their "Columns. And indeed they worſhipped him that Day with greater Demonſtrations

" of Joy and Gladneſs, and preſented him with magnificent Gifts of Gold, Silver, " precious Stones, and ſuch like valuable Commodities. We may here obſerve, that as the " Incas won new Provinces, the Amautas, who were their Philoſophers, found by new " Experiments, that the nearer they came to the Equinoctial Line, the leſs Shadow the " Pillar projected when the Sun was at the Meridian. For which Reaſon thoſe which " were in the City of Quito and about it as far as the Sea-Coaſts, were moſt eſteemed;
" becauſe the Sun was perpendicular in thoſe Places, and caſt no Shadow at all when at
" the Meridian. Hence they paid a greater Reſpect to thoſe Columns than the reſt, and " fancied that the Sun delighted moſt to ſeat himſelf upon them, ſince, ſay they, he " takes a Pleaſure in ſtanding perpendicularly over them, whereas he never ſtops at the " reſt but Side-ways only."

Their RECORDS.

WE ſhall quote Garcilaſſo once more. The Relation he has given us appears to be exact; this we probably ſhould have enervated, had we diſguiſed it under new Terms; and by putting it into a modern Dreſs, we poſſibly might have varied the Facts related by him.

" WHEN the Indians had a Mind to make their Computations, which they expreſs'd
" by the Word Quippu, ſignifying to tie, or a Knot, and is alſo the Account itſelf, be" cauſe their Knots were made of all kind of Things, they generally uſed Thread of " various Colours; for ſome had only one, others two, and others again three, and ſo
" on. Every Colour, whether ſingle or mix'd, had a peculiar Signification. Theſe
" Strings, which were made of three or four Threads twiſted together, about the Big" neſs of the ſmalleſt Packthread, and three Quarters of an Ell long, were threaded in " Order long-wiſe into another String or Twiſt, the whole making a kind of Fringe.
" They judg'd the Import of each Piece of Thread by its Colours; as for inſtance, the " Yellow ſignify'd Gold, the White Silver, and the Red Warriors. To denote any Par" ticulars which were not of a remarkable Colour, they uſed to ſet them according to " their reſpective Orders, beginning at the moſt conſiderable, and ſo going on to ſuch as " were leaſt ſo: Thus for inſtance, to denote Corn or Pulſe, the firſt in Order would then " have been Wheat, next Rye, then Peas, Beans, Millet, &c. In like manner to denote " Weapons, they always plac'd thoſe firſt which they thought the moſt noble: In cal" culating the Number of their Vaſſals, they firſt began by the Inhabitants of each City,
" and then number'd thoſe of the Provinces. The firſt Thread was for old Men of ſixty
" or upwards, the ſecond for thoſe of fifty, the third for thoſe of forty, and ſo on in a " decimal Proportion down to the Children ſucking at the Breaſt: They likewiſe com" puted the Number of Women according to their reſpective Ages in the ſame Order.

" SOME of theſe Twiſts or Strings had other ſmall thin Twiſts in them, all of the ſame " Colour, which ſeem'd to be ſo many Exceptions from the general Rules; as for in-
" ſtance, the ſmall Twiſts that were annex'd to the Knot of the married Men or Wo" men, at ſuch or ſuch an Age, denoted the Number of Widows or Widowers that Year:
" For theſe Calculations were as ſo many Annals, and included only the Tranſactions of " one ſingle Year.

" THEY always computed decimally on thoſe Strings, viz. by Units, Tens, Hundreds,
" Thouſands, Ten of Thouſands, and ſeldom went further than Hundreds of Thou-
" ſands; becauſe as every City, and each Capital of a Province, kept their particular Eſti-
" mate, the Number never went any farther. Not but if they had been obliged to com-

" pute by Hundred Thouſands, they could have done it, becauſe they can expreſs all " Arithmetical Powers in their Tongue. Theſe ſeveral Numbers which they computed " by the Knots of their Strings, were ſeparated from one another; and the Knots of each " Number was relative to one, like thoſe of the Franciſcans, which was done ſo much " the more eaſily, as they never went higher than from one to nine; and Tens, &c. the " higheſt Number of which was Tens of Thouſands, was at the Top of the String, next " to that Thouſands; and ſo on. The Knots of each Thread, and of each Number, " were equal to each other, and diſpoſed as artfully as the moſt skilful Arithmetician " places his Figures to make a long and regular Calculation.

" THERE were certain Perſons among theſe Indians who had theſe Quippus, or knot- " ted Strings, under their immediate Direction. They were call'd Quippucamayus, i. e. " the Perſons who had the Care of the Accompts, whoſe Number was always regulated " in Proportion to the Inhabitants of the ſeveral Cities and Provinces: The ſmalleſt City " was obliged to have four at leaſt, and the largeſt had twenty or thirty. They all kept " the ſame Accompt, and were as ſo many Checks one to the other; and tho' one Ac- " comptant could have tranſacted all the Buſineſs, nevertheleſs the Incas would have ſeve- " ral ſettled in each City, in order to prevent Frauds and Abuſes, ſaying, That if there " were but few, they might eaſily combine together and defraud the Public, which could " not be ſo eaſily done when they were many, and conſequently would either oblige them " all to be juſt and faithful, or ſhare equally in the Guilt.

" THEY computed the ſeveral Tributes which the Incas receiv'd every Year by Knots. " On them a Regiſter of the Soldiery was kept, as alſo of thoſe who were kill'd in the " War, and of the Births and Deaths which happen'd every Year, &c. They even com- " puted thereby the Number of their Battles and Skirmiſhes, the ſeveral Embaſſies that " had been ſent from their Incas, and the Declarations their King had given. But as it " was impoſſible to expreſs the Subject and Iſſue of each Embaſſy, and all their hiſto- " rical Tranſactions, by Knots, they uſed certain Marks to diſtinguiſh the ſeveral memo- " rable Actions, the Embaſſies and Declarations which had been made both in Peace and " War: The Quippucamayus got the Subſtance of theſe by Heart, and taught them the " reſt by Tradition, particularly in the Cities and Provinces where thoſe Incidents had " happen'd, and whoſe Inhabitants were more deſirous of tranſmitting them to Poſterity " than thoſe of any other Country. They had alſo another Method of recording their " moſt memorable Events. The Amautas made them in Proſe, and afterwards work'd " them into a kind of ſhort Fables, for Parents to repeat to their Children, and Citizens " to their Country People; ſo that devolving in this manner from Age to Age, theſe ſeve- " ral Incidents might be known to all. They moreover work'd up their hiſtorical Re- " lations in a fabulous and allegorical Manner; for which Purpoſe their Aravicus's, or " Poets, uſed to compoſe ſhort Verſes, in which a ſuccinct Account of the Hiſtory, Em- " baſſy, or Anſwer made by the King was given; and thus they expreſs'd the ſeveral In- " cidents, which otherwiſe would have been unintelligible, by Knots. They uſually ſung " theſe Verſes in their Triumphs, in their moſt ſolemn Feaſts, at the Coronation of a new " Inca, and the reſt of their Ceremonies."

WE ſhall now conclude what we had to obſerve with regard to the religious Ceremo- nies of Peru, and of whatever may be thought relative to them.

I. The general Idea of the following Diſſertation.

IF it be dangerous to write any Thing concerning foreign Countries, becauſe of the Prejudice which great Numbers of People entertain againſt every Thing that comes from far or appears wonderful, 'tis no leſs ſo for a Man to conceal from the World ſuch Particulars as he may have ſeen; becauſe ſeveral are of Opinion, that a Man has no ſooner left his Country, but new Wonders muſt exhibit themſelves every Moment; that all Things in foreign Nations are ſtrange and ſurprizing, and that every Thing which ſtrikes a Traveller's Eye, muſt neceſſarily afford him Inſtruction; ſo that what Reſolution ſoever a Traveller may take, he runs the Hazard of being cenſured either as an inſincere, or an indolent Perſon. To pleaſe one Part, a Man ſhould relate ſuch Particulars only as are very trite, and to be daily met with, becauſe the Moment any Thing extraordinary is related, 'tis immediately look'd upon as Fiction;

Fiction; the other are unſatisfied, unleſs the Writer mentions Prodigies in every Line; for with theſe 'tis ſufficient that a Piece be written in the common Stile of Travellers, to make it be rejected with Scorn, and conſider'd as a trifling Performance.

'TIS certain that the following Sheets will not ſuit the Taſte of either, ſince as I have liv'd too long in India, not to diſcourſe pertinently on certain Matters, which may poſſibly appear ſurprizing to the Reader; ſo on the other Side, I did not reſide long enough there to be able to write confidently on every Particular; to flatter myſelf ſo far, as to imagine myſelf thoroughly acquainted with the Policy and Cuſtoms of the Indians, or that I had acquir'd a Knowledge of Things in the Space of three or four Years Time, which a Man could hardly be Maſter of in twenty. But though the Account I give of the Indies may not pleaſe the Readers above-mention'd, it nevertheleſs may not diſpleaſe thoſe who are able to form a juſt Idea of Things, though brought from far, and who judge without Prejudice. If theſe ſhould find that I ſometimes miſtake in my Parallel between the Cuſtoms of the Indians with thoſe of the Antients, I nevertheleſs flatter myſelf, that they will not cenſure the Deſire I had of opening to myſelf a Path to the Knowledge of Antiquity, by ſtudying the Maxims of thoſe People.

I HAVE wholly deviated from the common Road which moſt of our Travellers generally ſtrike into; for were a Man to write from others, and agree with them in their Relations, 'twould be no more than barely tranſcribing them, which might eaſily be done, without travelling to Countries ſo remote; then again, to vary from them would but heighten the Confuſion, which is great enough already among thoſe who have written on that Subject; nor could a Traveller flatter himſelf that his Writings would be better receiv'd on that Account, or be ſooner believ'd by his Readers, who think, as they may ſafely do, that other Writers will afterwards ariſe, who will differ from them.

I FIRST thought to ſtudy only the Religion of the Indians, and was confirm'd in my Reſolution by the firſt Diſcoveries I had made therein, having obſerv'd a certain Order between their Principles, and the Syſtem of their triple Divinity, viz. Brâma, Witſnou, and Devender, as is not found in the Multitude of Gods ador'd by the Greeks and Romans, and mention'd by Heſiod in his Theogony. But as 'tis the Nature of Error to be always ſo; that 'tis impoſſible for Falſhood to boaſt ſuch a Series of Proofs and Reaſons as illuſtrate each other; but on the contrary, that the whole is a Rhapſody of Contradiction and Obſcurity; when I was for entring into a Detail of the different Sects among the Pagans, and for piercing farther into their Myſteries, ſo many Abſurdities occurr'd, that I thought it would be ridiculous to buſy myſelf any longer in theſe Enquiries, eſpecially as the Theology of the antient Heathens ſcarce agrees with theirs in one ſingle Particular. However, I did not form the ſame Judgment with regard to their particular Cuſtoms, but conſider'd them as ſo many valuable Remains of Antiquity, which might be of Service in illuſtrating ſeveral Paſſages in antient Authors, the ſacred Writings in particular: This Knowledge being abſolutely neceſſary, in order for the giving a natural Explanation of certain Paſſages which ſome very learned Interpreters frequently explain allegorically, for want of being acquainted with the Cuſtoms of the Eaſterns.

MOREOVER, we meet with ſeveral Paſſages, and even Terms in the Scriptures, which at firſt are ſomething ſhocking; however they ſoon grow familiar to us, after a ſmall Acquaintance with the Eaſterns, among whom we ſtill meet with all thoſe Characters of Antiquity which are found in the Bible, and generally in all thoſe Books which treat of the Jews and other antient Nations.

St. JEROM

St. JEROM was very ſenſible of the Uſefulneſs of this Knowledge. He travell'd over the Eaſt, in order to learn the Maxims of its Inhabitants; and notwithſtanding the Reports which were ſpread to the Prejudice of his Reputation, he nevertheleſs ſtudied under a Doctor of the School of Tiberias, who inſtructed him in the antient Cuſtoms of the Jews, and aſſiſted him in his Tranſlation and Commentaries.

MY Deſign was to have gone over all Aſia, could I have done it with Conveniency, and to have made exact Obſervations on the moſt minute Circumſtances, ſuch as, for Inſtance, the antient Cuſtoms of the common People, their Holidays, Proverbs, Manner of building, eating, dreſſing, and cultivating the Ground; well knowing, that if any Footſteps of Antiquity are ſtill remaining in the World, we ſhall certainly find them among ſuch People as live in a State of Simplicity, and inhabit Deſarts, and in general among thoſe whoſe Minds have been leaſt refin'd by Education, &c. who are neither ambitious or rich enough to invent new Modes, or follow thoſe invented by the Great, and conſequently never deviate from thoſe of their Anceſtors.

MOST Travellers have neglected to make the above-mention'd Obſervations, looking upon them as Trifles, and unworthy of their Regard. It muſt indeed be confeſs'd, that they are not of any Value in themſelves, but whoever reflects but ever ſo little on the Advantage which may accrue from thence for the Illuſtration of antient Writers, will ſoon agree with me, that they are worthy our Enquiry, and of being publiſh'd to the World.

I HAVE uſed my utmoſt Endeavours to inſtruct myſelf in the Cuſtoms of the Indians, and have obſerv'd their moſt trite Maxims with the utmoſt Nicety. But it was impoſſible for me to ſee them in all their Purity, ſince I did not go high enough into the Country for that Purpoſe; for the Trade which they carry on perpetually with the Europeans, makes thoſe who inhabit the Coaſts very remiſs in certain Duties, and neglect a great many Particulars which they before obſerv'd with the utmoſt Exactneſs; inſomuch, that their Proſelytes are generally neither Chriſtians nor religious Heathens. This it is that increaſes the Difficulty of making Diſcoveries, not to mention that a Man is oblig'd in ſome meaſure to make his Informations himſelf, it being almoſt impoſſible to get any Thing from them on that Head; for moſt of theſe People are ſo much employ'd in Traffic, that it almoſt engroſſes all their Thoughts; and their learned Bramins think they would profane their Doctrine and Laws, were they to divulge them to Foreigners.

I HAVE therefore been obliged to confine my Enquiries to their moſt common Actions and Cuſtoms, and to draw moſt of my Obſervations from thence, which we therefore may ſuppoſe will not amount to a great Number.

I HAVE gone no farther in my Enquiries than the examining ſuch Particulars as the Indians had in common with the Antients, and particularly the Jews, without entring into that important Queſtion, viz. Whether thoſe who were carried into Aſſyria by Theglath-Phalaſſar, under Phaceus, Son to Romelius, King of Iſrael; or whether thoſe whom Salmanazar ſent thither under the Reign of Oſea, travelling among the Indians, did not communicate to them thoſe Particulars wherein we have obſerv'd a Conformity? or whether God, at the Time of his giving a Law to his People, did not enjoin them to obſerve ſeveral Rules, which being naturally good, had been already obſerv'd by other Nations?

SEVERAL Things might be alledg'd in favour of each of theſe Opinions, but as they are Reaſons drawn only from Probability and Veriſimilitude, and that 'tis impoſſible to bring one poſitive Proof on that Head, I thought proper to paſs over it.

SOME will perhaps wonder that this Work conſiſts only of detach'd Obſervations, and of ſuch Incidents as bear no Relation to one another; but I thought it would be beſt to draw them up in this Manner, ſince every Article treats of a particular Subject, which has no Connection with that which precedes or follows after it; not to mention that 'twould have been impoſſible to have connected theſe Articles, without employing long Digreſſions: Theſe, as they would have ill ſuited this Place, ſo they would infallibly have diſguſted ſuch Readers as love to find no more in a Book than it ought to have; that is, what the Title promiſes, or at leaſt Something that anſwers it in ſome Meaſure.

FARTHER, I thought proper to [a] quote the Paſſages I have borrowed from the Latin Authors verbatim, eſpecially if they related to difficult Subjects, wherein it is proper to know the real Sentiment of the Author. As for thoſe Paſſages of Greek Authors which I have been oblig'd to tranſcribe, I have made uſe of the beſt Verſions we have from that Tongue, becauſe great Numbers of very learned Perſons are unacquainted with it. I am ſenſible that many of my Readers will not reliſh theſe Quotations; but then I am perſuaded they will be very agreeable to others, and that all ſuch as are acquainted with the Affairs in queſtion, will be glad to form a Judgment (without being oblig'd to have Recourſe to the Authors themſelves) whether I have given the true Senſe of thoſe Paſſages I quote, and if the Conſequences I have drawn from thence are juſt.

THE Reader will perhaps wonder at my having made more Reflections on the Antients than on the Indians; and particularly in my firſt Obſervations, wherein after having given a pretty ſuccinct Account of all ſuch Particulars as relate to India, I afterwards am very diffuſive upon Antiquity; but the Wonder will immediately ceaſe, when he recollects what I have already obſerv'd, viz. that the Knowledge of the Cuſtoms of the Indians was not abſtractedly of any Uſe; that the only Reaſon of my employing them, was to juſtify what is related of the Antients, and illuſtrate them upon Occaſion; in a Word, that I had Antiquity only in View.

As I have not always explain'd certain Paſſages of the Antients, in all thoſe Places in which the Indians are mention'd, and the Conformity of thoſe People with the Antients, a Query will perhaps be made, Why I mention'd that Conformity, ſince it cannot be of any Service in illuſtrating the Scriptures and the moſt antient Writers? To this I anſwer, That though the chief Deſign of my making theſe Obſervations, was to find out the Meaning of certain difficult Paſſages in the Antients, it nevertheleſs was not my only Aim; for I alſo intended to ſatisfy thoſe who cannot perſuade themſelves that the Heathens were as blind as they are repreſented; and to ſhew, that ſince there are great Numbers in our Days who embrace the moſt extravagant Errors, there might have been others, equally blind and ſtupid, in former Ages.

I MUST deſire the Reader to take notice, that Part of thoſe Conſequences which I have drawn from the Conformity between the Cuſtoms of the Indians and thoſe of the Jews, and all the antient Nations in general, are only given as ſo many Conjectures, and that I don't blindly eſpouſe any of thoſe Opinions mention'd in this Diſſertation.

[a] They are under the Text of the Diſſertation.

I SHALL

I SHALL further obſerve, that when, on the Teſtimony of Quintus Curtius, and Chares of Mitylene, I take notice in the 29th Article, of the Drunkenneſs of the Indians, and of the famous Debauch which was made after the Death of Calenus, in honour of his Obſequies, and that I affirm'd the Conqueror drank an hundred and ninety two Pints of Wine, which I ſuppoſed to be the Quantity of the four Congii mention'd by Athenæus, I had regard to the Character which that Author gives thoſe People, for their prodigious Drinking, rather than to the uſual Quantity which that Congius is generally ſuppoſed to contain, which ſtrictly is no more than four [a] Pints and a half; ſo that the four Congii would have amounted to no more than eighteen Pints in all, which is not ſo mighty a Wonder. Novellius Torquatus drank three Congii, or thirteen Pints and a half, at one Draught before Tiberius, whence he was call'd Triçongiarius. And Julius Capitolinus, in the Life of Maximin, ſays, that he drank an Amphora every Day, containing eight Congii, which amounted to thirty ſix Pints, according to the common Way of computing. The Reaſon of my ſuppoſing the four Congii to make an hundred and ninety two Pints, was, becauſe I imagin'd that the Manner in which Authors have written on that celebrated Debauch, would not admit of a leſs Quantity. In fine, I have, with other Writers, allow'd the Congius to contain ſix Sectaries; but ſuppoſe at the ſame Time, that every Sextary conſiſted of eighteen Pints, in which I have followed our Gaugers, as it would otherwiſe have been impoſſible for me to anſwer the Idea which Chares of Mitylene would give us of that Debauch. But I ſubmit the whole to the Reader's Judgment.

II. The Dominions of the Great Mogul.

THOUGH I have made a Reſolution not to inſert any Particulars among my Remarks, but what relate to the Conformity of the Cuſtoms of the Indians with thoſe of the Antients; nevertheleſs as the People in queſtion live under the Government of the Great Mogul, I thought myſelf indiſpenſably oblig'd to give ſome Account of that Kingdom, at leaſt to give the Reader a general Idea of its Beginning and Extent.

TEMUR-LENGUE, ſignifying a lame Prince, call'd by Corruption Tamerlane, was the Founder of the Empire of the Great Mogul. Certain Authors pretend, that he was deſcended from a noble and antient Tartarian Family; but moſt Hiſtorians [b] who mention him, have own'd that he was of very mean Extraction, and that it was his Merit only that rais'd him to that Pitch of Grandeur.

HE married the Emperor of Great Tartary's Daughter, one of the Succeſſors of the famous Ginghis-Can, who firſt govern'd that Empire. About Anno Dom. 1400. he ſet himſelf at the Head of the Moguls, a People who inhabited the eaſtern Part of Great Tartary, and march'd with them into India, where, after having brought ſeveral petty Kings of Indoſtan, and of the neighbouring Provinces under Subjection, he at length laid the Foundation of that vaſt Empire, which at this Day goes by the Name of the Empire of the Great Mogul.

'TIS well known that Tamerlane took the famous Bajazet, Sultan of the Turks, Priſoner, and that the Tartar, after having uſed his utmoſt Endeavours to make his Captivity leſs grievous, and if poſſible heal their Diviſions, provok'd by the Sultan's Haughtineſs, and continual Threats, he was at laſt oblig'd to impriſon him in an iron Cage,

[a] Pliny, Lib. XIV. Cap. xxii.

[b] However, ſuch as are converſant in the eaſtern Writers, affirm that Tamerlane boaſted a very illuſtrious Deſcent.

and that Bajazot dash'd out his own Brains againſt one of the Bars of it. Tamerlane had a very extenſive Genius, was daring and intrepid, and bating ſome little Tendency he had to Cruelty, boaſted an irreproachable Character.

THE Empire loſt much of its Luſtre under his Deſcendants, moſt of whom gneleƈting their military Affairs, employ'd all their Thoughts in inventing new Scenes of Pleaſure, and ſpent their whole Lives in Luxury and Eaſe; but in the laſt Century there aroſe a Monarch, who abhorring the Effeminacy of a great Number of his Predeceſſors, imitated not only the Bravery and glorious Atchievements of Tamerlane, but alſo the Severity of his Adminiſtration; a Prince, who not only reſtor'd the Empire to its former Luſtre, but alſo made great Acquiſitions to it.

THE Monarch I mean is Aurengzeb. But before I proceed farther, it may not be improper to trace Things a little higher, and to relate in what Manner his Father aſcended the Throne, and was afterwards driven from it.

CHAH-JEHAN, who, before his being rais'd to the Empire, was call'd Sultan Corom, was Father to Aurengzeb. He was Son to the Great Mogul, Jehan-Guire, whoſe Succeſſor he might naturally have expeƈted to be, and not to meet with the leaſt Oppoſition. However, whether it were from an impatient Deſire of reigning, or from ſome private Reſentment, he rebell'd againſt his Father. Unhappily for him his Father happen'd to die whilſt he was engag'd in open Rebellion againſt him; for thoſe who had govern'd the Empire under Jehan-Guire, knowing Sultan Corom not to be their Friend, they therefore cauſed Bulloquoi, Jehan-Guire's Grandſon, to be proclaimed Emperor. This News was ſo far from diſpiriting Sultan Corom, that it only inflam'd him the more: He purſued Bulloquoi, took him Priſoner, and ſtrangled him, after he had reign'd three Months; which being done, he was univerſally recogniz'd as Great Mogul, under the Name of Chah-Jehan.

THIS Monarch reign'd in Peace ſo long as the tender Years of his four Sons prevented their raiſing any Commotions; but no ſooner were they grown to Maturity, and were able to know what it is to reign and have command over others, but they all pretended to the Empire: Dara, as being Chah-Jehan's eldeſt Son, and the other three from a Principle of Ambition only.

THEY were four Brothers, Dara was the eldeſt, Sultan Sujah the ſecond, Aurengzeb the third, and Morad-back-che the youngeſt; beſides which Chah-Jehan had two Daughters, the eldeſt of whom was call'd Begum Saheb, a very proud witty Woman; the other was call'd Rauchenara Begum, and was one of the moſt beautiful Princeſſes of her Age.

DARA, Sultan Sujah, and Morad-back-che diſcover'd pretty manifeſt Indications that they all aſpir'd to the Empire, and intended to live independent; but Aurengzeb, who was a very ſubtle Man, and inform'd with a very elevated Genius, though it did not blaze out, and at the ſame Time as ambitious as the reſt of his Brethren, thought it beſt to appear outwardly as one entirely diveſted of all ſelf-intereſted Principles, the better to ſucceed in his Deſigns; nor was he any way miſtaken in his Conjeƈtures. In order therefore to remove all Suſpicions, and to prevent his Brothers from harbouring the leaſt Diſtruſt with regard to him, he became a Faquir, or poor Friar, and pretended to bid adieu to all Pomp and Grandeur. He was artful enough whilſt he followed this Way of Life, to exaſperate his Brothers ſo highly againſt each other, that they all took up Arms, without ſcarce knowing the Reaſon for their ſo doing.

WHILST

WHILST theſe Diviſions continued, Aurengzeb always adher'd to the weakeſt Side, publicly declaring, that as he had no farther Pretenſions, all his Views terminated in the public Good, and the reſtoring of his Father's Affairs to their former Tranquility. In the mean Time he privately ſet every Engine at Work, in order to bribe as many Friends as he poſſibly could to his Intereſt, particularly the greateſt Men of the Empire. When he found himſelf ſtrong enough, and that the moſt conſiderable Omrahs, or Generals of the Mogul, were reſolved to ſtand by him, he at laſt threw off the Mask, and then it was his Friends knew, but too late, that his only Deſign in exaſperating them againſt each other, was only to pave the Way to their Ruin, and aggrandize himſelf.

THE firſt Step he took was the keeping his Father Chah-Jehan Priſoner in a ſtrong Hold, whither he had withdrawn himſelf, and in which he died ſix Years after. This Monarch did not ſeem to merit Pity, ſince he himſelf had before rebell'd againſt his Father. Aurengzeb no ſooner found himſelf Maſter of Chah-Jehan's Perſon, but he endeavour'd to ſeize his Brothers, and diſable them from interrupting the Tranquility of his Government, which he effected without any great Difficulty. Dara was taken Priſoner, and afterwards poiſon'd; and Aurengzeb ſoon put it out of the Power of the reſt to give him any Diſturbance, ſo that he was proclaim'd Great Mogul in the Year 1660. Bernier, and ſeveral other Authors who have written on the Indies, have related the ſeveral Particulars of Aurengzeb's Wars againſt his Brothers, and the Artifices he employ'd to raiſe himſelf to the Empire. He was living when I left Bengal, which was on the 10th of February 1702. but 'twas reported that he doated.

IT cannot be denied but that this Prince was one of the greateſt Politicians and greateſt Monarchs of his Age; this is manifeſt from the Account which Hiſtorians have given of him. He is indeed reproach'd with having ruin'd his Family, and with the great Cruelty he exercis'd towards them, his Father and his Brother Dara in particular; but in this he had only follow'd the Maxims of the greateſt Part of the Eaſterns, who run all Hazards when a Throne is the Reward of the Victor.

IF we were to compare Aurengzeb with any famous European Prince, I believe we could not draw the Parallel better than between him and Pope Sixtus V. for as Aurengzeb gain'd the Empire by making the moſt public Renunciation of it, and leading a retir'd Life for ſome Time, Sixtus in like manner got the Pontificate, by pretending he was not fit for it, and by living in the ſtricteſt Solitude, though in the Midſt of Rome, all the Time he was Cardinal. Aurengzeb did not reveal himſelf till after he was rais'd to the Empire, or at leaſt not till ſuch Time as his Brothers were almoſt unable to diſpute the Crown with him, and that he himſelf had made ſure of it. Sixtus did not diſcover himſelf till he had got Poſſeſſion of the triple Crown, and the World was prodigiouſly ſurpriz'd to ſee ſo ſudden a Change. They both put their reſpective Dominions in a very flouriſhing Condition, made themſelves be dreaded and reſpected by their Subjects and the Princes their Neighbours, and though they were both cruel, and acted ſeveral Things which in ſtrict Juſtice are far from meriting Applauſe, they yet have acquir'd immortal Glory. Aurengzeb indeed made very great Conqueſts, which Sixtus never did; but we are to conſider that the former has reign'd upwards of forty two Years, whereas the latter enjoy'd the Pontificate no more than five; and happily too for ſeveral Princes of Italy, particularly Spain, who probably, had he reign'd longer, would have loſt Naples, a Kingdom he as much thirſted after, as Aurengzeb did for that of Golconda, becauſe of its rich Diamond Mines; ſo that had he reign'd only a few Years longer, he would perhaps have been as ſucceſsful in his Enterprize as the Great Aurengzeb.

IT would be difficult to determine whether a Deſire of Death or Empire, which we meet with in moſt Eaſtern Princes who have any Pretenſions to the Crown, may be owing to the Pride and Cruelty of thoſe Monarchs under whom they are oblig'd to live; or whether that Pride and Cruelty which thoſe Princes diſcover, flows from the inſatiable Thirſt which the Princes who are ſubject to them have after Empire. 'Tis impoſſible to ſay whether the cruel and bloody Adminiſtration of ſome Princes be owing to the Ficklenes, and little real Affections of their Subjects; or whether the Inconſtancy and little Affection of their Subjects may not be the Reſult of their cruel and bloody Adminiſtrations. Some will perhaps ſay, How would it be poſſible for a Monarch to reign with Mildneſs and Gentleneſs over ſuch Subjects? Subjects who breathe nothing but Rebellion? But then again others would ſay, What Man but would endeavour to withdraw himſelf from the Subjection to ſuch Princes, as reign over him with a Rod of Iron? and how would it be poſſible for their Subjects to love, and be faithful to them?

To this I believe we may anſwer, That the little real Affection the Eaſterns generally diſcover for their Kings, is owing to the Pride and Cruelty of their firſt Monarchs, whoſe tyrannical Spirit made ſo great an Impreſſion on the Minds of the People, that they afterwards conſider'd all the reſt of their Princes as Tyrants: So that their Succeſſors were indiſpenſably oblig'd, in order to divert the fatal Conſequences of the ill Impreſſion which the Tyranny of their Anceſtors had made on their Minds, to tread in their Steps, or, in other Words, to uſe their Subjects like Slaves, to keep them in perpetual Terrors and Apprehenſions, and to imitate the Cruelty and Barbarity of their Predeceſſors. Thus the inclement Adminiſtration of the firſt Monarchs raiſed Fear and Suſpicion in the Minds of their Subjects: And, on the other Side, this Fear and Suſpicion in the Subject, was afterwards the Cauſe of the Monarch's Cruelty.

MOREOVER, the Eaſterns are in general more effeminate, and fonder of Pleaſure, than other Nations; and conſequently leſs capable of that real and ſolid Virtue, which is as neceſſary to a good Subject as a great Monarch: For if a vaſt Fund of Knowledge and Strength of Mind be requir'd in thoſe who would command over others according to the Principles of Juſtice and Lenity, as much of both is required in thoſe who would be juſtly obedient; and there is at leaſt as much Greatneſs of Soul in being a good Subject, as a good Monarch.

BUT tho' Kings had nothing to fear from the wicked Intentions of Subjects, yet many would be almoſt forc'd to be cruel: For Subjects obey only upon theſe two Motives; either from a Conſciouſneſs of the real Lenity of their Sovereign, which conſequently demands Submiſſion and Obedience, or from the Knowledge they have of their Cruelty, which naturally commands Awe; inſomuch that ſeveral Eaſtern Princes, not being endued with good Qualities ſufficient to keep their Subjects in Obedience, they would always be forc'd, as it were, to reign over them in a cruel and tyrannical Manner.

THE Dominions of the Great Mogul extend Eaſtward to the other Side of the River Ganges, and have the Ocean to the South, Macran and Candahar to the Weſt, and Tartary to the North. Agra and Delli are the two chief Cities of the Empire, and both have the Title of Capital.

I BELIEVE we may ſafely affirm, that the Dominions of the Great Mogul are the richeſt in the World; for not only almoſt all the Nations of Europe, but thoſe of Aſia carry Gold and Silver thither, and never have any Thing but Goods in Return; ſo that this Empire is a kind of Gulph, into which all the Riches of the Univerſe are thrown, and whence none are returned.

III. Of

III. Of CIRCUMCISION.

CIRCUMCISION is not practiſed by the Heathen Indians, at leaſt by thoſe whom I frequented. I nevertheleſs thought proper to take notice of Circumciſion as uſed by the Inhabitants of Guinea, and the Country thro' which I paſſed. From this and ſome other Inſtances which I ſhall now mention, ſome Critics have pretended to prove that Circumciſion was not peculiar to the Jews, and that, independent from the Command which God had laid upon Abraham to obſerve it, it was uſed by other Nations, and by them conſider'd as a natural Expedient to facilitate Procreation.

BUT before I examine the Paſſages which the above-mentioned quote in Favour of their Opinion, and the Inſtances they produce to corroborate it, I believe it may not be improper to take ſome Notice of Circumciſion in general, and the Time of its Inſtitution, and to weigh and conſider the Words of Scripture which relate thereto.

CIRCUMCISION is not once mention'd in the Bible before Abraham's Time, whom God enjoin'd to inſtitute this Ceremony as a Teſtimony of the future Alliance between him and the Deſcendants of that holy Patriarch. [a] The Reaſon therefore why God commanded the Jews to uſe Circumciſion, was, that it might be a Sign and Token of the Alliance which the Creator had made between Abraham and his Poſterity. Nothing is there mentioned with regard to its particular Advantages. In the ſame Chapter God threatens to lift up his vengeful Arm againſt thoſe who ſhall not conform to this Inſtitution, by ſaying [b], That he ſhall be rooted out from among the People. And indeed when Moſes, by God's Command, came away from among the Midianites, in order to deliver the People from their rigorous Egyptian Bondage, the Angel of the Lord would have kill'd his Son in the Journey, becauſe he was uncircumcis'd: Nor would Zipporah have appeaſed the juſt Anger of Heaven [c], had ſhe not immediately circumcis'd him with a ſharp Stone.

WE may reaſonably ſuppoſe, that the Midianites did not uſe Circumciſion, for otherwiſe 'tis very probable that Jethro, who was the Prieſt of Midian, would not have ſuffer'd his Grand Son to have remain'd uncircumcis'd in oppoſition to Cuſtom. Beſides, had Moſes liv'd in a Country where Circumciſion was practiſed, he would certainly have had the Child circumcis'd, eſpecially, if we conſider how zealouſly he adher'd to the Religion of his Forefathers; ſo that we may naturally ſuppoſe, the only Reaſon why he was not circumcis'd, was, becauſe it was not uſed in the Country where he dwelt.

THE Sichemites, who inhabited the Land of Canaan, were not enjoin'd Circumciſion, nor would they all have ſubmitted to that Law, had it not been that they might reſemble the Family of Jacob; and that [d] Shechem, Son to Hamor, Prince of the Country, might marry Dinah. Neither were the Philiſtines circumcis'd; nor were they better known to the Jews by the Name of their Country, than by that of uncircumcis'd: Thus after Saul had loſt the Battle, he bid his [e] Armour-Bearer kill him, to prevent his falling alive into the Hands of the Philiſtines, and of being made the Scorn and Sport of thoſe Uncircumciſed. In fine, one would imagine, that by the Word Uncircumcis'd, the Jews underſtood all other Nations, or at leaſt ſuch as were not of the Poſterity of Abraham. Nevertheleſs

[c] Exod. iv. 24, 25.

vertheleſs I would not infer from hence, that the Jews only uſed Circumciſion, but only that this Practice was inſtituted among them, purpoſely to diſtinguiſh them from other Nations; and that if it was uſed by other People, they firſt borrow'd it from the Jews, as I ſhall now endeavour to prove.

SOME have pretended that Circumciſion was not peculiar to the Jews, or, in other Words, that ſeveral other Nations had uſed it, independent from the Injunction which God had laid upon Abraham to that Purpoſe. Thoſe who favour this Opinion, endeavour to ſupport it from ſeveral Paſſages of the Antients; and moreover they inſtance in ſeveral other Nations who practiſe it in our Days, and even maintain, that it is abſolutely neceſſary for ſome People, who otherwiſe would not be able to propagate their Kind.

HERODOTUS [a] mentions Circumciſion, and ſays, That the Inhabitants of Colchos, Egypt, and Ethiopia, were the only People who firſt uſed it. He afterwards adds, that he could not affirm which of thoſe Nations firſt practiſed it, it appearing to be of great Antiquity among them all: Nevertheleſs, that as the Ethiopians and the Inhabitants of Colchos had carried on a great Trade, and been very converſant with the Egyptians, he imagines they might have borrow'd it from them, and conſequently that it came firſt from Egypt. This [b] Author founds his Conjecture, in that of ſeveral Nations who had any Correſpondence with the Egyptians, the Phenicians only uſed Circumciſion; and at the ſame Time, that it was not uſed by thoſe who frequented the Greeks only.

DIODORUS SICULUS [c] ſpeaking of the Troglodites, tells us, that they uſed Circumciſion in the ſame manner as the Egyptians. Theſe Troglodites inhabited that Part of Africa, which now goes by the Name of the Coaſt of Abex or Abexim, being the Eaſtern Part of Abyſſinia. And we are likewiſe told, that the celebrated Thales got himſelf circumciſed, in order that he might appear leſs Savage to the learned Egyptians, nor ſo much as Foreigner in their Eyes, [d] in order to get the eaſier Acceſs to their Perſons, by thus imitating them in ſo great a Ceremony, and to enable himſelf the better to pry into their Myſteries.

IT is therefore particularly on theſe Paſſages, and others of the like Nature, that ſome learned Critics of our Days have founded their Opinions to prove, as was before obſerv'd, that Circumciſion was uſed by ſeveral other Nations, independent from the Jews, and the Injunction which God hath laid upon them, pretending even, that it was abſolutely neceſſary to certain Nations for the Propagation of their Species. Let us now ſee what Anſwer may be made to the Conſequences which they pretend to draw from theſe Authorities. There were but three Reaſons which could induce Men to make uſe of Circumciſion; viz. Firſt, in Obedience to the Religion which they profeſs'd; Secondly, the Impoſſibility there was of getting Children without this Practice; or, Laſtly, the Example of the People among whom they dwelt, and the Idea they had formed to themſelves of that Ceremony.

WE have no Reaſon to believe, that the Egyptians were enjoin'd to circumciſe their Children by their Law, nor can the Knowledge we have at this Time of their Religion and Cuſtoms, give us any Light into this Matter; neither could the Impoſſibility of procreating Children without this Practice, have obliged the Egyptians to uſe Circumciſion, ſince they were not form'd differently in thoſe Days from what they are at this Time; and it is certain, that they do not now want it to aſſiſt Procreation; ſince there are at this Time great Numbers of Chriſtians in Egypt who do not practiſe it; and that they are as populous now as they were antiently, when they uſed Circumciſion. If it ſhould be otherwiſe, it can be owing to nothing elſe than to the great Number of young People who are carried away from thence into Slavery, and not to the Impotency of their Men. We may therefore ſuppoſe, that the Egyptians only circumciſed themſelves in Imitation of the Jews among whom they lived; and indeed ſuch a Suppoſition is much more probable than the other two.

To perſuade ourſelves that the Egyptians copy'd Circumciſion from the Jews, or at leaſt to admit of this laſt Opinion in prejudice to the other two, we need only make ſome Reflections on their Character, and the ſtrong Impreſſion which every Circumſtance that happen'd among them with regard to the Iſraelites, might have made upon their Minds.

THE Egyptians have in all Ages been the moſt ſuperſtitious, and at the ſame Time the moſt fond of Myſteries of any People that ever lived, and conſequently the moſt apt to receive any new Impreſſions in religious Matters. On the other Side, the moſt dreadful and ſurpriſing Cataſtophes that ever befel any Nation, happen'd in their Country at the Time of Moſes's being among them; ſo that we may naturally ſuppoſe, that the aſtoniſhing Actions which that great Law-Giver wrought, and in general every Circumſtance that was any way relative to him, made the deepeſt Impreſſions on their Minds.

THE Prodigies which were wrought by the Hand of that great Man, the Army of Pharaoh drown'd in the Red-Sea, the Death of the Firſt-Born, the Darkneſs which overſpread Egypt, and in fine, all the Methods he employ'd to deliver the People of Iſrael out of Captivity; all theſe Circumſtances could not fail of ſtriking the Minds of the Egyptians with great Terror, and giving the Learned a high Idea of the Author of ſuch Miracles: And as all the antient Heathens in general did not ſcruple to rank in the Number of their Deities all thoſe of other Nations whom they thought powerful, and to embrace ſome Principles of their Religion, we may hence, methinks, ſuppoſe, that the Egyptians, ſtruck with the Croud of Wonders which the Iſraelites had performed before their Eyes, borrow'd ſome of their principal Ceremonies, and thoſe particularly which diſtinguiſhed the Children of Iſrael from other Nations. Now as Circumciſion was the moſt eſſential Characteriſtic of the Jewiſh Religion, we may reaſonably ſuppoſe, that they adher'd particularly to that Ceremony.

To this we may add, That it is very probable Circumciſion was not uſed by the Egyptians before the Children of Iſrael left their Country; and we may ground this Conjecture on a Circumſtance mention'd in Joſhua. The Scripture informs us, that Joſhua cauſed all the Iſraelites to be circumcis'd after the croſſing the Jordan, and that becauſe this Ceremony had not been obſerv'd in the Deſart; and that the Lord ſaid to the worthy Succeſſor of Moſes after their Circumciſion, [a] That he had that Day taken away the Reproach of Egypt from among them. Methinks nothing but the Fore-Skin could be meant by this Reproach of Egypt, which Circumciſion had taken away; and if the Jews look'd upon that Part as the Reproach of the Egyptians, we may naturally ſuppoſe that the Egyptians had it, and conſequently did not uſe Circumciſion at that Time. But if they did not uſe Circumciſion when the Children of Egypt left their Country, and that we ſtill can prove that they afterwards practiſed it, we may, I preſume, conclude from thence, as has been already obſerv'd, that all the Miracles which Moſes wrought among them, gave them ſo high an Idea both of his Perſon and Religion, as engaged them to copy the moſt peculiar Characteriſtic in their Religion, and to appropriate to themſelves what diſtinguiſh'd them chiefly from other Nations; and this undoubtedly was Circumciſion.

THE Reader will poſſibly at firſt make the following Objections to the Arguments which have been now offer'd, viz. That they are no more than Reaſons of mere Probability, and conſequently are not concluſive, to prove that the Egyptians borrow'd Circumciſion from the Jews, and that they did not uſe it independently from the Precept which had been given to Abraham for that Purpoſe. I am not inſenſible, that the Reaſons I have here offer'd cannot be conſider'd as ſo many certain and poſitive Proofs; however, I believe, that when there is no Poſſibility of our attaining to a phyſical Certainty of a Thing, we in that Caſe ought always to adhere to thoſe Circumſtances in it which appear the moſt probable: And I think there is much more Probability in ſaying, that the Egyptians borrow'd Circumciſion from the Jews who lived among them, and to whoſe Miracles they themſelves had been Eye-Witneſſes, Miracles that were infinitely greater than any which their Prieſts and Enchanters could work, than to admit that the Egyptians had it independently from the Jews, and that too without any ſtrong Reaſon for ſo doing. For, in fine, if we are for laying any Streſs on that Paſſage of Herodotus, which is the moſt antient and moſt authentic Proof that the Favourers of this laſt Opinion can alledge; yet the only Inference we can draw from thence, is, that the Egyptians made uſe of Circumciſion. But ſtill this is no Argument of their having that Ceremony from themſelves, and independent from the Jewiſh Religion. Had we ſome Inſtance, or ſome Paſſage which mention'd the Circumciſion of the Egyptians, before the Coming of the Children of Jacob into Egypt, we then might conclude, that as the above-mention'd Nation practiſed Circumciſion before they had any Correſpondence with the Iſraelites, they conſequently did not borrow that Ceremony from them. But we meet with nothing like this; and Herodotus, who wrote about two hundred and forty Years after the Foundation of Rome, and conſequently about one thouſand and eighteen, or one thouſand and twenty Years after the Iſraelites left Egypt, makes no further mention of the Egyptians than that they uſed Circumciſion, but without taking any notice of the Time when it firſt began among them, or whence they firſt borrow'd it: So that, to me, the Argument in Queſtion receives no manner of Force from the Paſſage of this Author, nor can any Thing be drawn from thence in favour of that Opinion.

A FURTHER Objection may be, viz. That Circumciſion was practiſed not only by the Egyptians, but alſo by thoſe of Colchos and Ethiopia, as Herodotus informs us; but this will not be of more Service to them, ſince the ſame Author obſerves, that he is not very ſure, and cannot poſitively affirm, whether the Ceremony firſt took its Riſe among the Egyptians or the Ethiopians, notwithſtanding that it appears probable to him, that it was firſt uſed by the Egyptians, and that the Ethiopians borrow'd it from them, becauſe Circumciſion was practiſed by thoſe Nations only who frequented the Egyptians. If the Ethiopians receiv'd it from the Egyptians, we are not to quote the Example of thoſe People, to prove that Circumciſion was uſed independently from the Jewiſh Doctrine, ſince it will always be ſuppoſed, that the Egyptians, from whom other Nations had taken it, had themſelves borrow'd it from the Jews.

DIODORUS SICULUS mentions the Circumciſion of the Troglodytes; but adds, as has been already obſerv'd, that they perform'd it in the ſame manner as the Egyptians; from whom, 'tis very probable, they might have borrow'd it, theſe two Nations not being at a great Diſtance from one another.

WE know that the Negroes of Guinea uſe Circumciſion, but then it is that of Mahomet, and we have no Arguments to prove that they had this Inſtitution among them before his Time. It is certain that they have embrac'd, at leaſt imperfectly, the Mahometan Religion, for I myſelf have ſeen Phylacteries about their Arms and Necks, written in very good Arabic Characters, which contain certain Invocations out of the Alcoran. Imperfectly, I ſay, becauſe it is certain there are ſtill ſeveral heatheniſh Ceremonies among them; ſuch as, for Inſtance, the Cuſtom of ſacrificing to Devils, in order to prevent their hurting them, and ſeveral others of the ſame kind.

WE therefore have no Argument or Proof to engage us to think that the Negroes made uſe of Circumciſion before Mahomet's Time: But tho' it were ſo, yet this would not prove, that it was independent from the Injunction laid upon Abraham; for they might have borrowed it from the Ethiopians that lie moſt to the Eaſt, and who traded with the Jews. Nay, ſeveral of that Nation made a public Profeſſion of the Jewiſh Doctrine, and uſed to go regularly to worſhip at Jeruſalem, as is manifeſt from the Acts of the Apoſtles; and even ſeveral Perſons of great Diſtinction among them had embraced thoſe Principles. As for inſtance, [a] the Eunuch of Candace, Queen of Ethiopia, was coming from worſhipping at Jeruſalem when St. Philip met him reading the Prophet Iſaiah. As therefore ſeveral Ethiopians read the Scriptures and the Jewiſh Law, and not ſatisfy'd with worſhipping in thoſe Temples which they might have in their own Country, went alſo to worſhip at that of Jeruſalem, it is natural to believe that they had a very exalted Idea of the Jewiſh Religion, and a great Veneration for its Ceremonies: And as Mankind generally endeavour to imitate whatever is the Object of their Eſteem and Admiration, it is very probable that they obey'd the Injunction of Circumciſion, as it is ſo frequently inculcated in thoſe ſacred Writings, and in the Books of that Law for which they expreſs'd ſo much Eſteem and Veneration.

IT would be to no Purpoſe to object here, that Herodotus did not affirm that the Ethiopians had borrow'd Circumciſion from the Jews, but from the Egyptians; for I humbly preſume, that the Conſequences which are drawn from the Scripture, will be prefer'd to thoſe of Herodotus, who, tho' generally call'd the Father of Hiſtorians, is nevertheleſs well known not to have always ſtrictly adher'd to Truth, but that he has as frequently err'd in his Deſcriptions of Times, Nations, and Empires, as Pliny has in thoſe of Nature. Moreover, it will be no difficult Matter, without enquiring which of thoſe two Authorities are of greateſt Credit, to reconcile them together: For as it may eaſily have happen'd, that the Ethiopians firſt borrow'd Circumciſion from the Egyptians; ſo it may likewiſe have fallen out afterwards, that this People hearing that the Egyptians themſelves had firſt borrowed it from the Jews, might have ſought the Acquaintance of the latter in order to obtain from them, in all its Purity, thoſe Things whereof the Egyptians could give them but a very imperfect Account, who in all Probability, intermixing it with their idle Conceits, had form'd to themſelves a new Religion out of the two old ones.

SOME, in order to prove that the Negroes practiſed Circumciſion independent from the Jewiſh Law, have maintain'd, that they were forced to it from Neceſſity, it being impoſſible for them otherwiſe to get [b] Children: But it is certain, that thoſe who alledg'd this Circumſtance, were not acquainted with them. For they are ſhap'd exactly as we are; and not only in Guinea, but in all thoſe Parts of Aſia and America which I viſited, in all which Places, tho' I took care to get the moſt exact Informations poſſible, I yet could never hear of any Thing of [a] that Nature. I cannot indeed affirm ſo preciſely with regard to Egypt and the Country of the antient Troglodytes, becauſe I never frequented thoſe Countries; but I can at leaſt affirm, that I have ſpoke with People who have viſited them, and theſe all aſſured me they had never heard the leaſt mention of any ſuch Defect.

OTHERS have gone ſo far as to advance, that Circumciſion was equally neceſſary to the Jews; but then we muſt ſuppoſe an incredible Number of Miracles, or make a continual one for forty Years together; for they did not once uſe Circumciſion all the Time they were in the Deſart, which however was no Obſtacle to their getting Children. Beſides, ſeveral Jews had Children after they had embrac'd Chriſtianity; and theſe Children, tho' not circumcis'd, did nevertheleſs propagate their Species when they were of an Age requiſite for that Purpoſe. Conſequently Circumciſion was not abſolutely neceſſary to theſe People in order to their getting Children, ſince they encreaſed their Poſterity without it.

IF ever there were room to ſuppoſe that the Jewiſh Ceremonies were no more than Types, under which greater Things were ſhadowed than what they appeared to be naturally, or Preſages of Things to come, it is undoubtedly in that of Circumciſion; which was no more than a Ceremony, by which God ſignified to his People, that they ſhould cut away from their Hearts all ſuch Things as were not relative to their great End, or to thoſe Things for which they were created. The Reader is not to conſider this as the figurative Explication of any particular Perſon, or the wild Liberty of ſome Interpreter, who ſometimes changes the Senſe of the Scriptures as Caprice ſhall dictate, and moulds it according to his own Fancy; no, God himſelf expreſſes himſelf in this manner, by the Mouth of his Servant Moſes: [b] Circumciſe therefore the Foreskin of your Heart, and be no more ſtiff-necked. I own it may be objected, that it is very poſſible for Circumciſion to have been a natural Help to Procreation, and at the ſame Time a Type how Mankind ought to behave with regard to their Hearts; but as we have Proofs that Circumciſion was not neceſſary for Procreation, and that it is evident the Jews could diſpenſe with it for a conſiderable Number of Years; I therefore think we ought to infer, that it was in reality no more than a Type, to teach Man, as was already obſerv'd, to cut away from his Heart whatever did not carry him to his ultimate End, viz. God.

SOME will perhaps ſay, that the Ceremony of Circumciſion was not indeed abſolutely neceſſary for Procreation with regard to the Jews, but only a Means of facilitating it. Philo appears to be of this Opinion in the End of his Book De Specialibus Legibus. [c] He firſt obſerves, that certain People laugh at Circumciſion, notwithſtanding it was had in great Honour by ſeveral Nations, the Egyptians in particular. By the Way, we are to obſerve, that we may alſo conclude from this Paſſage in Philo, that the Egyptians borrow'd Circumciſion from the Jews, ſince he ſays expreſſly, that the Circumciſion of his Anceſtors was honour'd by the Egyptians.

THIS Author produces ſeveral natural Reaſons of Circumciſion, in order to prove to foreign Nations that it ought not to appear ſo very extraordinary in their Eyes. He obſerves that it was not only inſtituted to denote the Covenant between God and the Jews, but alſo to preſerve the Body in [d] Health, and free it from Impurities.

Now,

[a] On the contrary I have heard, ſays the Author of that Diſſertation, that in hot Countries, Præputium eſt ſemper maxime dilatatum.

[b] Deut. x. 16. Circumcidite igitur præputium cordis veſtri, & cervicem veſtram, ne induretis amplius.

[d] Ut caveatur morbus curatu difficilis, vocatus carbunculus.—— Ut totum corpus ſit purius, ne impediat officia ſacerdotalis ordinis; quamobrem etiam radunt corpora Ægyptii Sacrifici, ne quid ſordium, vel ſub pilis, vel ſub præputiis hæreat, quod poſſit obeſſe

Now, to anſwer theſe Paſſages, we are to obſerve, that his Deſign in this was to juſtify the Uſe of Circumciſion to certain Foreigners who were very much ſhock'd at the Practice of it; and therefore, without inſiſting very much on the Reaſons of that Inſtitution, ſince they would not have been reliſh'd by Perſons who profeſſed a Religion which differ'd vaſtly from his own, he was obliged to give ſome natural Reaſons for it, in moſt of which he nevertheleſs ſeems to be pretty much miſtaken. I would not allow of the firſt Reaſon he gives, viz. that it preſerves from ſeveral Diſeaſes which are hard to be cured: So far from it, that in my Opinion, it would be the very contrary; but this is properly the Province of the Phyſician. Beſides, ſuppoſing it to have been ſo, it was giving themſelves a great deal of Trouble, and taking great Precautions beforehand, for the better healing of a Diſeaſe, from which they might eaſily have preſerv'd themſelves; not to mention that they were never afflicted with it but it was their own Fault.

THE ſecond Reaſon is much more probable, in as much as the Eaſterns, and among theſe the Jews and Egyptians, were very ſcrupulous with regard to the Purity and Cleanlineſs of their Prieſts. However, if they were ſo very ſcrupulous as that comes to, it is, methinks, ſurpriſing they did not carry it ſtill further, and imitate the Prieſts of Arcadia or Gaul.

As to this laſt Reaſon, 'tis of no manner of Weight; to prove the Falſity of it, we need only reflect a little on the pretended Fruitfulneſs of ſuch Nations as uſed Circumciſion. The Jews, the Turks, the Arabians, and all thoſe Nations who practiſe Circumciſion, are not more prolific than others; ſo far from it, that I am perſuaded, were we to make a diligent Enquiry into that Article, the very contrary would be found. But Philo was obliged to employ ſuch Reaſons, whether good or bad, as he thought made for his Purpoſe, to oppoſe ſuch as did not approve of that Ceremony, and who would not have admitted any which bore ever ſo little Relation to Religion, and that Covenant which God had made with Abraham and his Poſterity, this being the ſtanding Object of Ridicule to the Heathens, and the Romans in particular; ſo that we are not to wonder that all thoſe Reaſons which he alledges have no great Foundation.

IV. Of the chief Cauſes of Paganiſm and Idolatry.

AS the Obſervations I have made with regard to India, do all relate to the Cuſtoms of the Heathen Nations; and that the greateſt Part of theſe Cuſtoms are founded on Paganiſm, and are even a Conſequence thereof; it may not be improper to make ſome mention of Idolatry in general, and the principal Cauſes of its fatal Eſtabliſhment.

THERE are few Evils in Religion, but what aroſe from ſome kind of Good; and few Errors but were founded on ſome Truth, either ill underſtood, or corrupted by Length of Time.

IN this manner, the fabulous Hiſtory of the Gods, their Deſcent, their Diviſions, Victims, and thoſe Fictions which were ſung by antient Poets, were all founded on Truth, which is the Source of that Religion we profeſs at this Time. Nevertheleſs, the Heathens have ſo much diſguiſed Truth, by the numberleſs idle Conceits and Fictions with which they have clouded her, and her Features are ſo much alter'd, that it is almoſt impoſſible to know her under this falſe Dreſs.

obeſſe puritati ſacris debitæ. He adds, That that Operation, eſt cura fœcunditatis & numeroſæ ſobolis, —— & idcirco circumciſas gentes fœcunditate pollere, eſſeque populoſiſſimas.

IT is pretty ſurpriſing how ſo great a Change could ever have been wrought in Religion, and that Men ſhould leave the pure and clear Light of Truth, to plunge themſelves in an Abyſs of Errors, and a Chaos of numberleſs Fictions; nevertheleſs, a little Reflection on the Character of the Generality of Mankind, and on the Corruption which Time brings down along with it, will leſſen the Wonder conſiderably.

THE firſt Cauſe of Error, is, the little Care which Man takes to judge from Reflection only, and his being ſuch a perpetual Slave to Senſe. He muſt have ſomething to act upon him outwardly, and whenever Truth ceaſes to exhibit herſelf by exterior Signs, he chuſes rather to be affected with Falſhood, than to let his Senſes remain in a State of Inactivity, and to judge independent from them. This, perhaps, was the Reaſon why God, who knows the moſt hidden Receſſes of our Hearts, and its leaſt Impulſes, heightened the Jewiſh Religion with an almoſt numberleſs Multitude of Ceremonies, which to us appear needleſs. God was for fixing the Senſes on ſome good Object, that might guide them to Truth; and to prevent their being affected with any Thing pernicious, or which might be capable of leading them into Error.

ANOTHER Cauſe of Idolatry, was the Idea which Men had always form'd to themſelves of the Divine Being. They wanted a God, and were perſuaded of the Certainty of ſuch a Being, from the Voice of univerſal Nature; the Heavens, the Earth, the regular Motion of the Stars, and that unerring Order and Harmony in the Univerſe, were all ſo many Teſtimonies of his Exiſtence. But their ſtrongeſt and moſt convincing Proof, was thoſe ſecret Impulſes of the Heart, which carry'd them, as it were in ſpite of themſelves, to ſomething of a higher and more auguſt Nature than theſe Creatures, which were born, grew up, and died before their Eyes; for Idolatry did not firſt begin by the worſhipping the Creatures. Mankind being very ſenſible of their Corruption, they did not immediately fall into thoſe groſs Errors which took their Riſe among the Egyptians, and which the Greeks, and afterwards the Romans, carried to the higheſt Pitch of Extravagance; for the firſt worſhipped ſuch Things only as to them appear'd fit Objects for Adoration.

THE firſt Things that Men ador'd were the Sun, the Moon, and Stars; but as they could not always have the Sight of thoſe luminous Bodies, they ſought for ſomething that might compenſate, in ſome meaſure, for thoſe Moments when they were hid from them, and which, at the ſame Time, might be an Hieroglyphic of thoſe imaginary Deities.

THEY could not think of any Thing that reſembled them more than Fire, or which exhibited a more ſenſible Mark of the Splendor of the Stars, and that of the Sun in particular; ſo that they pitch'd upon Fire for the Object. This Element was at firſt reſpected only as the Repreſentative of the Planet they worſhipped, but it afterwards became inſenſibly the Object of their Adoration. The Chaldeans firſt pointed out the Way; and Ur in Chaldea, whence Abraham came, was the Place where that firſt Worſhip began; for which Reaſon it was call'd Ur, that is to ſay, Fire.

I SHALL here mention an Incident, which indeed was pleaſant enough, as related by Euſebius on occaſion of Fire, which the Chaldeans look'd upon as a Divinity. [a] This People aſſerted, that their God was the ſtrongeſt and moſt powerful of all the Gods, ſince they had not met with any one that could reſiſt its Force; ſo that whenever they happen'd to get any Deities worſhipped by other Nations, they immediately threw them into the Fire, which never fail'd of conſuming them to Aſhes; by which means the God of the Chaldeans was publicly look'd upon as the Conqueror of all other Gods. But a Prieſt of [a] Canopus, one of the Egyptian Gods, which was worſhipped in a City of the ſame Name, found out the Art to deſtroy the great Reputation the Fire had acquir'd. For this Purpoſe he cauſed an Idol to be made of a very porous Earth, with which Pots were commonly made, which were employ'd to purify the Water of the Nile. The Belly of this Statue, which was very capacious, was fill'd with Water. Here the Prieſt made a great Number of little Holes, and ſtopp'd them with Wax; after which he challeng'd the Fire of the Chaldeans to diſpute the Victory with his God Canopus. The Chaldeans immediately prepar'd one, and the Egyptian Prieſt ſet his Statue to it. No ſooner was the Fire come to the Wax but it diſſolved it; the Holes were opened, the Water paſſed through, and at laſt quite put out the Fire. Upon this a Report was ſoon ſpread, that the God Canopus had conquered and deſtroyed that of the Chaldeans; and the Egyptians, as a Memorial of that ſignal Victory, always made all their Idols with very great Bellies, and very ſhort little Feet, that which had conquered the Fire being ſo ſhap'd. The greateſt Part of the Idols of the Indians are alſo made after that Manner.

THE Perſians alſo worſhipp'd [b] Fire, which was generally carried before their Kings, and at the Head of their Armies, and was always attended by three hundred and ſixty Prieſts. There are at this Day ſome Perſians who ſtill adhere to the antient Religion of the Nation, but then they are a kind of Savages, who inhabit the Mountains, and would never receive the Alcoran. The Athenians had a perpetual Fire in the Prytanæum, a kind of Fortreſs, and their Council-Houſe, wherein alſo their old Officers, and all ſuch as had done any ſignal Service to the Commonwealth, were maintain'd. This Fire was kept by Widows, whereas that of the Romans was under the Care of Virgins, call'd Veſtals. 'Tis well known that the Jews were alſo commanded to keep a perpetual Fire, as is manifeſt from the ſixth Chapter of Leviticus.

SOME have aſſerted, that the Worſhip and Adoration which ſo many Nations paid to Fire, was founded on this Paſſage in [c] Deuteronomy, Thy God, O Iſrael! is a [d] conſuming Fire. But that is no way probable, ſince, as it has been already obſerv'd, the Chaldeans worſhipp'd Fire long before the written Law was given.

AFTERWARDS Man became the Object of religious Worſhip; but we ſhall ſpeak of the Origin of this Idolatry under the Head of the Penates, or Houſhold Gods. In fine, Mankind at laſt by inſenſible Degrees came to worſhip Beaſts, and the very Refuſe of Nature.

ALL theſe Irregularities which Men gave into are likewiſe owing to the lofty Stile of the Eaſtern Languages, to the Scruples of whole Nations, and to the great Veneration they paid to every Thing their Prieſts or Elders told them. The Stile of the Eaſterns, but particularly that of their Prieſts, and of thoſe whom we may call their Philoſo-

[a] Siris, Oſiris, Canope, were the ſame Deity under different Names, all which are thought to be the Nile.

[b] 'Tis the Practice at this Day to carry a Fire at the Head of the Caravans in the Eaſt. The Arabians and other People obſerve likewiſe that Cuſtom when they march. 'Tis probable that the Pillar of Fire which walked in the Night-Time before the Iſraelites in the Deſart, might have given Riſe to it. God has been pleaſed on ſeveral Occaſions to conform to a ſervile Cuſtom which the antient Jews have adopted in almoſt every Branch of their Behaviour, and which has frequently led them to Idolatry. Were we well aſſur'd that the Fire which walk'd before the Iſraelites was ſhap'd like a Pillar, we then poſſibly might have Room to juſtify the Indians for repreſenting ſome of their Gods under that Form.

[c] Chap. xii. 19.

[d] We are of Opinion, and with ſome Foundation, that this Expreſſion of the Scripture alludes to the Religion of thoſe People who worſhipp'd Fire.

phers,

phers, has in all Ages been ſwell'd with Figures and Similes. They ſearch'd only for pompous Terms and metaphorical Expreſſions, and the leſs they were underſtood by the People, the more learned and witty they thought them. Afterwards the firſt Poets aroſe, who improv'd upon all this numberleſs Rhapſody of pompous Words and Hyperboles, when at laſt 'twas found, that Mens Words were directly contradictory to their Thoughts. [a] Lactantius inveighs ſtrongly againſt the Evils which Poets have occaſion'd, and ſays, that People, who do not give themſelves Time to reflect, may eaſily be inſnar'd by their ſoft, agreeable, and inſinuating Manner of Writing.

THE Generality of Mankind did not ſearch into the Senſe ſhadowed under the Figure, and what it repreſented, but conſider'd the Figure itſelf; ſo that we may judge, what kind of Notions they form'd to themſelves with regard to God and Myſteries; for were we only to follow the literal Senſe of the Deſcription which the Scripture gives of God, we ſhould figure him arm'd with a ſharp Sword, a Shield, a Bow, and Arrows, and ſometimes lying in Ambuſh. We there ſometimes ſee him gay, at other Times angry or ſad. In a Word, we ſhould at laſt go ſo far as to make a mere Man of him, and very often, were we to ſtick to the Letter, a Man of no great Wiſdom. This however the Heathens have done; for they have really aſcrib'd ſuch Things to God, as were ſpoken of him in a figurative Senſe only. They began by giving him a Body, which was founded firſt on the Deſcriptions their Prieſts and Poets gave of him, and ſecondly on the natural Tendency they had to judge independent from their Senſes, and of forming to themſelves only ſuch Ideas as were groſs and material.

HAVING thus ſeen Man aſcribe a Body to the Deity, we are not to wonder at the odd Figures under which they repreſented him, and the different Functions they aſcrib'd to him. 'Tis well known, that there were of all Kinds, inſomuch that at laſt there was not any Part of the Houſe but was guarded by its peculiar God or Goddeſs. Nay, they even went ſo far, as to put thoſe Places which are deſign'd for the Eaſing of Nature, under the Direction of a Goddeſs, to whom they gave the Name of Cloacina. In fine, they carried their Extravagance to the utmoſt Lengths. Tertullian, Lactantius, and even ſeveral profane Writers, have given us the Particulars of all theſe ridiculous and idle Chimæras.

WE ſhall take notice of the Veneration which the People had for every Thing that came from their Prieſts or Elders, when we come to ſpeak of their tutelar Divinities. This Veneration, as has been already obſerv'd, was one of the Cauſes of their great Fondneſs for Error, and the Fictions they had receiv'd from their Anceſtors. But enough has been ſaid on a Subject which has been thoroughly handled by very learned Authors in our Age. We find in their Works all the Extravagance and ridiculous Foppery of Paganiſm, and at the ſame Time ſee how widely the Belief of Perſons of good Senſe differ'd from that of the common People.

V. The Sacrifices of the Indians, and their Manner of honouring their Gods.

MANKIND have in all Ages paid an outward Worſhip to the Deity, which conſiſted in offering up to him their beſt and moſt valuable Things, as an Acknowledgment that they were indebted to him for them. Thus Cain, whoſe Employment was to till the Ground, offer'd Part of his Fruits to God; and Abel, who kept Sheep, made him a Sacrifice of one of his fatteſt Lambs.

'TIS not certain, whether there were any fix'd Ceremonies at the Riſe of Oblations, and there is even Room to believe, that [a] Enos firſt reduc'd them under a regular Form. [b] Father Petau has indeed taken it in another Senſe, viz. underſtanding hereby, that this Grandſon of Adam's reſtor'd the Worſhip of God which the Children of Cain had aboliſh'd.

THERE was alſo another kind of Sacrifice, call'd the Sacrifice of Libation. This was perform'd by pouring out ſome Liquor in honour of the Deity, and was alſo uſed under the written Law.

As for Inſtance, after the Ark of the Covenant was return'd, the Iſraelites aſſembled together at Mizpeh, under Samuel, in order to return thanks to God for reſcuing them out of the Hands of the Philiſtines; [c] the Scripture takes notice, That they drew Water, and poured it out before the Lord, by way of Thankſgiving for his Mercies.

THE Water which David poured out when he was before Bethlehem, and which he refuſed to drink, becauſe [d] three Chiefs of his Army had endanger'd their Lives in drawing it out, was equally a Sacrifice of Libation; but Oil was generally made uſe of on this Occaſion. Thus Jacob, deſirous of returning Thanks to God for the myſterious Dream, in which he had ſeen a Ladder and Angels aſcending and deſcending thereon; and looking upon the Place where God had been ſo merciful to him, as truly holy, and as the Houſe of the Lord, [e] He poured Oil upon the Stone which he had uſed as a Pillow during that Dream.

FROM this Action of Jacob we may obſerve by the way, that in his Time 'twas a Cuſtom for ſuch Travellers as were piouſly inclin'd, to provide themſelves, before they ſet out upon a Journey, with thoſe Things which might enable them to praiſe and honour the Lord in a due Manner, during the Time they might ſpend in it; and that the Sacrifice of Libation being the moſt eaſily perform'd, as requiring the leaſt Ceremony, they were always careful to carry a certain Quantity of Oil along with them, in order to pour it out before the Lord, and to offer it to him, either as an Acknowledgment of his Almighty Power, to thank him for ſome Bleſſing, or to implore one at his Hands.

THE Sacrifices of Libation among the Heathens were perform'd with ſeveral other ſorts of Liquors. As for inſtance, they offer'd Milk to Rumina, the Goddeſs whom they invok'd for Children that ſuck'd at the Breaſt. The Athenians never offer'd Wine to the Sun, to the Moon, to Aurora, to Urania, the Muſe who, according to them, invented Aſtrology; nor to Mnemoſyne, on whom Jupiter had begotten the nine Muſes, nor to any of the Nymphs: To theſe the Oblation was Honey diluted with Water.

SOME pretend that the firſt Libations were made with Wine, and that the Etymology of the Word Libation comes from the God Bacchus, who was alſo call'd [f] Liber.

[a] According to that Paſſage in Geneſis iv. 26. Iſte cœpit invocare nomen Domini.
[b] Ration. Temp.
[d] 2 Reg. xxiii. 16.
[e] Gen. xviii. 18. Surgens ergo Jacob manè tulit lapidem quem ſuppoſuerat capiti ſuo, & erexit titulum infundens oleum deſuper.
[f] Ovid is of the ſame Opinion in his third Book of Faſti, and ſays, Nomine ab authoris ducunt Libamina nomen.

THESE kinds of Sacrifices which at firſt were inſtituted only in honour of the Gods, ſoon had a Place in their Feaſts and Carouſals. [a] They there made profane Libations, and Wine was pour'd in a ceremonious Manner, which probably was always in honour of Bacchus.

THE Doctrine of the Tranſmigration of Souls which prevails among the Indians, prevents their offering any bloody Sacrifices to their Gods; and even, according to their Theology, ſome of theſe Gods have liv'd under the Form of ſuch Animals as were fitteſt for Sacrifice; ſo that they offer only the Fruits of the Earth and Incenſe to their Idols.

THEY alſo pour Oil before them, but not ſatisfied with this, they ſmear them over with it every Time they make any Oblations to it; ſo that they are generally black, ſooty, and all over clammy with Oil. Arnobius tells us the ſame of the Idols in his Time. [b] I uſed to flatter, ſays he, a Stone that was ſmear'd all over with Oil, as tho' it had contain'd ſome mighty Power.

IF we except Sacrifices, we ſhall find that the Indians agree in ſeveral Particulars with the Jews and antient Heathens in their manner of honouring their Divinities, and praying to them in Pagods. They have Drums, Trumpets, and Chorus's, who ſing Hymns in their Honour. They ſometimes carry their Idols in Proceſſion through all the Streets of their Cities; and have always, in theſe public Ceremonies, Women who ſing and dance before them to the Sound of the Inſtruments of the Country, as [c] David formerly play'd on his Harp before the Ark.

THESE female Dancers among the Indians are always Proſtitutes, and though they generally dance in their Pagods, and before their Gods, they yet are not chaſter, nor is their Reputation leſs unſullied upon that Account.

WE find that ſuch as were employ'd in the ſame Ceremony among the Jews, were not had in greater Eſteem, but had generally no better Reſpect ſhewn them, than our common Dancers meet with from us; for Michael told David, that he had acted the Part of a Buffoon when he ſtripp'd himſelf in public [d].

As to David's uncovering himſelf to dance before the Ark, for which Michal reproach'd him, we are to obſerve, that it was uſual for the Jews, in order to prevent their being encumber'd in dancing, and to be more free and diſengag'd, to take off their Cloaks, and keep on their under Garments only, which made them lighter, and conſequently more fit for that Exerciſe. However, this was no way ſuitable to that Gravity which the Jews, and all the Eaſterns, ſo much boaſt of to this Day.

THE Indian Women-Dancers do the ſame: Theſe, whenever they are going to that Exerciſe, throw off a kind of large Veil which covers their Heads, and have nothing on but a Petticoat, and a ſmall kind of Linnen Waiſtcoat.

SUCH Indians as embrace the Chriſtian Religion uſe likewiſe ſmall Trumpets, a kind of Hautboys, and Drums, in their Churches, and ſing ſpiritual Songs to the Sound of theſe Inſtruments; at leaſt this is obſerv'd in Pondicheri.

VI. Of the Places where they paid their Devotions to the Deity, and the Manner in which they build their Temples.

MEN have always made choice of [a] gloomy Places, and Shades made by lofty Trees, to pay their Devotions to the Deity. When the Jews put an Oak into the Sanctuary, under which [b] Joshua plac'd the Stone on which the Promise they made of never abandoning the Worship of the true God was engrav'd, 'twas purely in Imitation of other Nations. Nevertheless this was against the express Commandment of God, who had forbid the [c] planting of any Wood or Tree near his Altar. But notwithstanding this Prohibition, they yet kept up this Custom, and worshipp'd false Gods in Groves, for which they are reproach'd in [d] Scripture. When Hosea censures them for this Crime, he says, That they sought on this Occasion for such Trees as projected the greatest Shade [e].

BEFORE God had commanded Solomon to build a Temple to him, it was usual for pious People to sacrifice to the true God upon Hills, and even under the Shadow of high Trees, as Gideon did under the Oak, where the Angel touching the Sacrifice of this famous Jew with his Wand, drew down Fire from Heaven upon it.

ONE would be apt to conclude, that in those Ages Men were allow'd to sacrifice in any Place whatsoever. Nevertheless we must except those Spots which were cover'd with Trees, and in general whatever might bear any Affinity with the sacred Groves of the Heathens, agreeable to that Prohibition in Deuteronomy xvi. 21. by which every one was forbid to plant any Tree near the Altar of the true God, as was just now observ'd. Further, we may ground this Conjecture on the Example of some Jews, who, at the same Time that they adher'd strictly to the Rules of the Jewish Doctrine, did nevertheless offer, as was said before, Sacrifices in all Places whatsoever. However, I believe, they did not strictly observe the Precepts of the Jewish Religion in that Particular, since it expressly enjoin'd the contrary; so that it would be impossible to make an Apology for them, but by saying, that the Custom of sacrificing to God in all Places, though in direct Opposition to the Law, became as it were lawful, by the great Number of those who practis'd it; but it was far from being so in itself, since a Dispute broke out upon that Account, even in Joshua's Time [f]. All the Israelites were offended to see the Tribes of Reuben, of Gad, and the half Tribe of Manasseh, raise a Monument of their Piety on the Banks of Jordan, where Moses had fix'd their Habitation. The rest of the Jews took this Monument for an Altar; and the warmest among them were of Opinion, that they ought to go Sword-in-Hand, and ravage all the Lands of their Brethren, to punish the Crime they had been guilty of; but the more Prudent Thought it would be better to send Deputies to them, to enquire the Reason of their erecting an Altar, in opposition to the express Prohibition of the Law. The last Opinion prevail'd, so that People were sent to enquire into the Motives of that Action; all the Excuse they made to their Brethren, was, that they did not thereby intend to erect an Altar, but only a Monument, as a Memorial to their Descendants of their being real Jews, and consequently obedient to the Laws of God which had been left them by Moses.

AFTER

AFTER they had built the Temple of Jeruſalem, they were then more expreſly forbid to ſacrifice Victims in any other Place. Moſes himſelf warn'd them againſt it in the Deſart, and gave them Rules for their Conduct, after God ſhould put them in Poſſeſſion of the Land of Promiſe. [a] Take heed, ſays he to them, that thou offer not thy Burnt-Offerings in every Place that thou ſeeſt, but in the Place which the Lord ſhall chuſe in one of thy Tribes, there thou ſhalt offer thy Burnt-Offerings.

SOME Jews however ſtill preſerv'd the antient Cuſtom of offering Sacrifices to God on Mountains, or under Trees. Thus where Mention is made of ſome Kings of Judah, as Jehoſhaphat and ſeveral others, who did not take away the High-Places [b] where Worſhip was offer'd up, we are not always to ſuppoſe that theſe were Altars erected in honour of the falſe Gods; for they were often raiſed to the true one, according to that Paſſage in the Chronicles [c], Nevertheleſs the People did ſacrifice ſtill in the High-Places, yet unto the Lord their God only. In fine, the ſacrificing in any Place whatſoever was criminal only upon this Account, becauſe God had forbid them to ſacrifice any where but in Jeruſalem.

[d] THE Indians have a great Number of Idols diſperſed up and down the Fields, and theſe are generally lodg'd in little tufted Woods, or at the Foot of ſome very ſhady Tree. 'Tis here that Travellers ſend up their Prayers, and the Devout their Offerings, to beſeech their Gods to indulge them a proſperous Voyage.

THE Jews alſo erected Altars in the Fields for the Service of Travellers, where they uſed to ſacrifice Victims to God; but this was forbid after the Temple of Jeruſalem was built, and we may affirm that one of the fineſt Incidents in Aſa's Life, is his demoliſhing thoſe Altars [e].

THE heathen Indians love to this Day to have their Pagods, or Temples, dark and gloomy. They obſerve not to let the Light enter in but by the Door, which is generally very low and narrow, except through ſome little Loovers, which ſerve as Windows. However in ſome Pagods the Light comes in only at the Door.

'TWAS thus that the Patriarch Abraham ſought for Obſcurity, when he went and addreſs'd himſelf in Prayer to God. The Scripture takes notice that he planted a Wood at Beerſheba, there [f] to call upon the Name of the Lord the everlaſting God. The Jews had afterwards much the ſame Idea of the divine Being, and thought he delighted in gloomy Places, in thick Clouds, and generally in Darkneſs. Thus when Solomon cauſed the Ark of the Covenant to be carried into the Temple which he had built, and ſaw it fill'd with ſo thick a Cloud, that the Prieſts could not ſee to perform divine Service, he cry'd out, [g] That the Lord ſaid that he would dwell in the thick Darkneſs. David enumerating in the ſeventeenth Pſalm the ſeveral Things which attend on the divine Majeſty, ſays, That he made Darkneſs his ſecret Place; [h] his Pavilion round about him were dark Waters, and thick Clouds of the Skies. In fine, moſt Nations of Antiquity had the ſame Opinion on that Head, which poſſibly might have been founded on the Tradition they received from the Inhabitants of the Infant World, viz. that God inhabited the terreſtrial Paradiſe, a Place fill'd with Trees, and conſequently [a] gloomy.

[d] 'Tis obſerv'd, that in thoſe Countries where the Romiſh Religion prevails, there are ſtill ſome Cuſtoms among them, which bear a great Affinity to thoſe of the Indians and antient Jews; for 'tis very common to meet with Croſſes, Images of the Virgin, and little Crucifixes in a kind of Chapels built on Eminences; and alſo a great Number of devout People, who, with their Beads in their Hands, ſay their Prayers, and mumble over a certain Number of Paters and Ave-Marias. We often meet with fine Fruit at the Feet of theſe Images of the Virgin, which is offer'd them from a religious Principle.

WERE we to enquire into the phyſical Cauſe of the Care which moſt Nations have taken to chuſe gloomy Places for worſhipping the Deity, I believe the following Reaſons might be given, viz. That Darkneſs and Gloom ſuit naturally to that Recollection and Modeſty, which ought always to be obſerv'd in Temples, in Preſence of the Supreme Being; for of all the Senſes, the Sight is moſt apt to diſtract the Mind, but Darkneſs prevents our Eyes from receiving the Impreſſion of any Object which might be capable of drawing off our Attention; ſo that it ſuits perfectly all ſuch Places as are appointed for Prayer and Devotion.

MOREOVER, Darkneſs and Gloom raiſe involuntarily in the Mind a kind of Awe and Terror, which is very near a-kin to that Veneration we owe to the Divinity; and it is, I believe, for this Reaſon that the Romans call'd God by a Name which properly ſignifies Fear or Horror; for the Latin Word [b] Deus, is manifeſtly borrow'd from the Greek Deos, Formido; whence the Greeks may alſo have borrowed their Theos; though ſome derive its Etymology from Théein, [c] currere; becauſe ſeveral had formerly a Notion that the Stars, which run, as it were, perpetually, are ſo many Deities.

VII. Of the Temples dedicated to PRIAPUS.

THE Indians have Temples dedicated to Priapus, though under different Names; and it may be affirm'd that they have very much improv'd the infamous Poſtures in which the Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans had repreſented him: Several even wear a little Priapus about their Necks, but cover'd with a little Silver, and aſſert that it endues them with Strength and Fruitfulneſs.

'Tis well known that ſome Jews formerly worſhipp'd this abominable Idol. The Scripture tells us, that Aſa baniſh'd his Mother Maachah from Court, becauſe ſhe had erected an Altar to [d] Priapus; this he cauſed to be broke [e] down, and had it burnt at the Brook Kedron.

'Tis very probable that the Jews had learn'd from the Egyptians to pay divine Honours to Priapus, and erected Statues in his Honour; for poſſibly this pretended Deity had greater Veneration paid him in Egypt than in any other Place. He was there conſider'd as the Principle of Mankind, which is the moſt noble Thing in the World. There were few public Edifices but had the true Figures which were moſt ſuitable to that Deity placed over them; and theſe were conſider'd as the Hieroglyphics or Symbols of the greateſt and moſt perfect Things that could be wiſh'd for in Nature; ſuch as Preferment, Abundance, Fruitfulneſs, Union, Strength, Vigour, and Health.

IN like Manner the Romans uſed to invoke Priapus, not only for Propagation, but alſo to make the Earth fruitful. Every one had generally a Statue of Priapus in his Garden, which at worſt ſerv'd for a Scare-Crow, and was at leaſt of Service in fright-ing away the Birds, in caſe it could not contribute to fulfil their Wiſhes, and procure them a plentiful Harveſt.

[a] 'TIS manifeſt from a Paſſage in Horace, what Liberties the Romans, and particularly their Men of Wit, and Poets, took with their Gods, and how familiarly they treated them.

VIII. The Penates, or Houſhold-Gods of the INDIANS, and the Origin of the Tutelary Divinities.

BESIDES the Gods above-mention'd, which the Indians have in their Temples, they alſo have thoſe to which the Antients gave the Names of Lares, Manes, and Penates: Theſe are little Figures ſet by them in different Parts of their Houſes, which they rub over very carefully with Oil, and ſurround with Flowers, and imagine they ſhall obtain their Favour by this Means. Some have ſaid, that the Manes were infernal Deities, which they diſtinguiſh'd from the Penates and Lares; but moſt Authors uſe any of theſe three Words indifferently to ſignify the Souls departed; ſo that I ſhall not enquire into the Difference which thoſe of a contrary Opinion pretend to find between them.

THESE tutelary Divinities are of great Antiquity. They had been introduced long before the Greeks, who probably might have borrow'd them, as well as the firſt Foundations of their fabulous Hiſtory, from thoſe who began to form the Empire of the Aſſyrians. Herein I agree with thoſe who ſuppoſe this Monarchy to have had its Riſe in the City of Niniveh, and that it laſted thirteen hundred Years; for were we to follow the Opinion of Herodotus, and ſuppoſe that it exiſted only five hundred and twenty Years, we then ſhould fix its Beginning at the Time when Deborah judg'd the Iſraelites; by which means the Aſſyrians would be poſterior to the Greeks, and conſequently the Greeks could not have borrowed their fabulous Hiſtory from them; for the moſt antient Grecian King that we read of in Hiſtory is Inachus, King of Argos, who, according to the Computation of the Septuagint, was contemporary with Moſes; though [b] Euſebius would make that great Legiſlator contemporary with Cecrops, who liv'd above three hundred Years after, and laid the Foundation of the twelve Towns which form'd the little Kingdom of Athens; and that thoſe who are of this Opinion, make Inachus and Abraham Contemporaries, which has begun to create ſome Confuſion in antient Chronology.

BUT

BUT to return. We meet with the Penates long before Moſes's Time, and conſequently before the Greeks. 'Tis probable that Laban's [c] Teraphins, which Rachel his Daughter, who was afterwards Jacob's Wife, had ſtole from her Father, and hid in the Camel's Furniture, when he went into Rachel's Tent to look for them, were tutelary Gods and Penates, whence we may conclude they were not large Statues. Laban in ſo doing had done no more than follow a Cuſtom, which was practiſed long before his Time; for Terah, Abraham's Father, alſo made Statues among the Chaldeans, which could be no other than public Idols, or tutelary Divinities.

THESE Idols were not applied to any ill Uſe in the Beginning; for they were at firſt but ſo many Figures by which Men repreſented their deceaſed Fathers, or ſuch of their Sovereigns as they had not an Opportunity of honouring in Perſon, by their living at a great Diſtance from them. In this Manner they endeavour'd to compenſate by Art for what Nature had taken from them, or which the Diſtance of Place prevented their having a Sight of. 'Twas therefore no more than a Teſtimony of the Love and Reſpect which good Children owe to their Parents, or that Submiſſion and Homage which loyal Subjects pay to thoſe whom Heaven has ſet over them.

THE fourteenth Book of Wiſdom furniſhes us with one of thoſe Incidents which might have given Riſe to that ſuperſtitious Cuſtom with regard to ſuch Statues as were made in honour of deceaſed Parents. The wiſe Man aſcribes it to the Love which a Son has for his Father. So far would have been well, had the Son kept his Grief within due Bounds, and not carried it to that Exceſs as to worſhip as a God in the midſt of his Family, him, whoſe Loſs he ought to have regretted as a Man only.

[b] PLATO gives the Name of Omogeneioi Theoi to the Penates. 'Tis certain that when the Antients mention'd theſe Gods as their Kindred, they meant no more than their deceaſed Relations, who in the Infancy of the World were had in great Veneration by their Poſterity, or in general ſuch of their Family as had been dear to them in their Life-Time.

WE may ſuppoſe that at firſt Mankind only teſtified a great Reſpect and Veneration for theſe Statues, and that they conſider'd them merely as we in theſe Days ſhould the Picture of a deceaſed Father who had been dear to us. However they exceeded by inſenſible Degrees the Bounds of ſuch a Tenderneſs as is juſt and lawful, and fell into Idolatry. But we may probably ſuppoſe that the Notion they had in thoſe remote Ages of the Immortality of the Soul, was the firſt and chief Source of Idolatry.

THOSE who were afterwards inform'd that their Anceſtors had invoked the chief Men of their Family, and affirm'd that they had liſten'd to their Prayers, were ſoon perſuaded it was fitting they ſhould imitate ſo uſeful and glorious a Worſhip. The Virtues of theſe firſt Chiefs were often the Subject of their Diſcourſe, and were by that Means tranſmitted to Poſterity. They had their Statues continually before their Eyes, and preſerv'd them with Care. 'Tis very probable that Idolatry might thus have taken deep Root in the Minds of their Poſterity, and poſſibly grew to a very great Height from the Idea which Mankind have generally entertain'd with regard to preceding Ages. They fancy that every Thing in thoſe Times was great and virtuous, and that their Predeceſſors were free from thoſe Frailties and Imperfections which they ſo willingly point out in their Contemporaries.

[a] Or Images.

[b] Plato de legibus. The proper Signification of this is, thoſe Gods who are of the ſame Family; for Omogeneia ſignifies Relation or Kindred.

THE

THE tutelary Divinities were lodg'd in different Parts of the Houſe, but were generally ſet in little Nitches made near the [a] Hearth, that being the Place where the whole Family moſt frequently met together. As the Indians have no Chimneys in their Houſes, they lodge their Penates in any Part of it.

IX. Of the Holy-Water of the INDIANS.

THE Jews had their Holy-Water, with which they uſed to ſprinkle unclean Perſons, the third Day after their having been declared ſuch, and the ſeventh, on which they were purified.

THIS was no more than clear Water mix'd with the Aſhes of a red Cow, which was burnt out of the Camp with its Entrails. The Prieſt, while they were burning it, always threw into the Fire, Cedar-Wood, Hyſſop, and a little Scarlet.

THE heathen Indians have alſo their Holy-Water, which is no more than Cow's Piſs; but as they think it would be a capital Crime to burn the Beaſt, they therefore uſe only its Urine, and with this their Devotees ſprinkle the Ground before their Doors every Morning. They are of Opinion, that this Luſtration will drive away every kind of Evil from their Houſes, and alſo draw down the peculiar Protection of the Gods upon themſelves; they looking upon every Thing which comes from that Beaſt as holy and divine.

THE great Veneration they pay to Cows, is, in my Opinion, owing to ſome other Reaſon than the pretended Metempſychoſes of Phoe, or what they relate of Parmeſer. They tell us, that when the latter liv'd upon Earth, he willingly undertook to look after them. But farther, they pretend to juſtify the Affection they have for thoſe Animals, by affirming that they are the beſt and moſt perfect of all Beaſts; ſo that thoſe People revered Cows, independant from the Honour which accrued to them by their receiving Phoe's Soul, or their having been the Care of one of their Gods. It were eaſy to prove, that the Indians were not the only People who look'd upon the Bull, the Ox, and the Cow, as Deities. The Egyptians worſhipp'd the Ox under the Names of Apis and Serapis, which ſignify the ſame Thing. Some have pretended that Apis was nothing more than an Hieroglyphic of Joſeph, who procured the Egyptians a happy Abundance at the Time of a great Dearth. The Ox indeed was conſider'd as an Emblem of Fruitfulneſs and Abundance by theſe and all other heathen Nations. Others relate, that Apis reign'd firſt in Argos, and afterwards in Egypt; that he taught the Egyptians to dreſs the Vine; and that theſe out of Gratitude for this Favour, worſhipp'd him after his Death under the Figure of an Ox. We are told that this King aſſum'd the Name of Oſiris in that Place, which if true, Apis, Serapis, and Oſiris, muſt conſequently ſignify the ſame Thing.

VOSSIUS aſſerts, that there were three Oſiris's in Egypt, and that Ham, or his Son Mizraim, was the firſt. The Word [b] Mizraim has indeed continued in Egypt, and it is thus called in the Hebrew Text. The ſecond, according to that Author, is Joſeph, and the third Moſes; but there is hardly Room to ſuppoſe his Conjecture probable with regard to the laſt. Be that as it will, 'tis certain that the Egyptians worſhipp'd an Ox

[a] This was the Reaſon of their ſometimes uſing the Word Eſtea, Focus, to ſignify the Penates or Houſhold-Gods; and vice verſa, the Word Penates to ſignify the Hearth, or even the whole Houſe.

under the Name of Apis, Serapis and Oſiris; and this Animal was probably look'd upon as the Hieroglyphic of one of thoſe [a] whom we juſt now mentioned.

THE Jews, in imitation of the Egyptians, made a Golden Calf in the Deſart, and fell down and worſhipped it. In the Diviſion of the Kingdom of Judah and Iſrael Jereboam erected two, the one at Dan, and the other at Bethel, and theſe the Iſraelite worſhipped as Gods, who had brought them out of the Land of Egypt. Jupiter was ador'd under the Figure of a Bull, which Shape the Poets tell us he borrowed, in order to carry off Europa. This Fiction is of great Antiquity, ſince [b] Anacreon mentions it in one of his Odes. In fine, ſeveral antient Nations paid divine Worſhip to the Ox, or at leaſt honoured that Beaſt as the Emblem of Fruitfulneſs and Abundance.

[c] DIODORUS SICULUS relates, that the Troglodytes uſed to ſtrangle with an Ox-Tail all ſuch old Men as were paſt their Labour, or were no longer able to look after their Flocks; and in general all weak and feeble People, and thoſe who were troubled with any incurable Diſeaſe: Nay, farther, they imagined they did them a great Piece of Service in not ſuffering them to continue long in a languiſhing Condition, and diſpatching them quickly into the other World. Not to mention that they thought they did them a ſingular Honour, when they ſtrangled them with the Tail of ſo noble a Beaſt as the Ox or Cow.

THE Indians indeed do not carry their Charity to ſo great a Length; however they think it a great Honour, and fancy themſelves ſure of eternal Happineſs, whenever they expire with a Cow-Tail in their Hands.

THE Egyptians worſhipped an Ox under the Name of Apis, and Serapis, as has been already obſerv'd; hence we may conclude, that they never kill'd that Beaſt, eſpecially ſince when Pharaoh commanded the Children of Iſrael to offer Sacrifices to their God and not leave Egypt, Moſes reply'd, That that could not be done, ſince the [d] Egyptians would ſtone them, were they to ſee them ſacrifice any Beaſt they worſhipp'd. If therefore the Egyptians could not behold without Horror, the Jews ſacrificing thoſe Beaſts which were the Object of their Worſhip, we may conclude from thence, that they themſelves never killed them. Moreover Juvenal relates, that the Egyptians abſtain'd from eating all [e] woolly Beaſts, and that this People thought it a Crime to kill a Kid.

IN caſe the Egyptians were not allowed to kill Sheep or Kids, we may naturally ſuppoſe they did not kill Oxen, a Beaſt they had in ſo great Veneration; however [f] they allow'd the Jews to kill and eat them. Plutarch relates, That they themſelves uſed to ſacrifice red Oxen in honour of Typhon. The Iſraelites eat Lambs in that Country, notwithſtanding that Juvenal affirms the Egyptians never fed upon any woolly Animals,

[a] The Body of this Ox was to be black, that Part of the Head which is over the Eyes white, and a white Spot on its Back. This quadrupede Deity had a peculiar Way of pronouncing his Oracles, which at the ſame Time was very ſimple, as well as conformable to the Dictates of Nature. The Perſon who conſulted the Beaſt, ſet ſomething to eat before him, which if he refuſed, 'twas a bad Omen, and he was to expect nothing but ill Luck; but in caſe he accepted what was offered him, they were poſitive that every Thing would be propitious.

Menſa, nefas illic fœtum jugulare capellæ.

[f] This Reaſon would almoſt perſuade us, that the Egyptians did not really worſhip an Ox, or at moſt that they paid him a ſymbolical Worſhip only. 'Tis alſo probable, that the Ox Apis, was not a God till after his Conſecration, which is pretty manifeſt from antient Hiſtory. Beſides, 'twas impoſſible for every Ox to be a God, ſince it was neceſſary for them to have certain Marks before they could be entitled to that Honour.

whence we may conclude, that they did not oblige the Jews to adhere ſtrictly to all their Cuſtoms in particular, but were ſatisfy'd, provided they did not do any Thing in public, which claſhed with their Religion and Ceremonies.

POSSIBLY the almoſt univerſal Veneration which Idolaters had for the Ox, might have been wholly owing to the great Service they afford to Man. As for inſtance, great Numbers of People, even after the Deluge, ſubſiſted chiefly on Milk and the Fruits of the Earth: So that the Cow furniſh'd them their principal Diet. The Ox was employ'd in ploughing the Ground, in carrying the Baggage of Travellers, and in drawing of Chariots. In Deſarts, where no Wood was to be found, Men uſed to make Firing of its Dung mix'd with a little Straw, which was afterwards dry'd in the Sun; and this is the Practice of the Indians to this Day, in all thoſe Places where there is a Scarcity of Wood.

MANKIND accuſtom'd themſelves therefore inſenſibly to take very great care of a Beaſt, to whom they were ſo much indebted, and who was even in ſome meaſure neceſſary to them. By Degrees he was rank'd above all other Animals, as he juſtly deſerv'd to be; but this Care and Gratitude at laſt became Veneration, and this latter ſoon after degenerated into Adoration: So true is it that Mankind are ſeldom ſatisfy'd with a Medium, and generally run into Extremes.

THE [a] Indians likewiſe ſet on a Pillar a little Cow of Wood or Stone, in a great many Places. I enquir'd, tho' to no Purpoſe, whether they look'd upon theſe Images as Idols or Taliſmans. I had obſerv'd ſomething of this Nature before I went into India, for I ſaw in the Iſle of Mocli, inhabited by Mahometans who are an Arabian Colony, the Bones of an Ox's Head fill'd with Arabic Characters, which were almoſt effac'd; and I was perſuaded that they look upon that Head as a Taliſman, and imagine they owe to it the Preſervation and Fruitfulneſs of their Cattle; for the Arabians give very much into theſe kind of Myſteries.

NEITHER were the Jews wholly free from the Superſtition with regard to Taliſmans, nor ſhall we be too bold in our Aſſertions, if we affirm that they honoured the brazen Serpent which Moſes had raiſed in the Wilderneſs as a Taliſman; for Incenſe was ſeldom offered up in their Honour, they being often laid in the Foundations of ſuch Edifices or Cities as were put under their Protection, or elſe were ſet upon Towers and [b] Pyramids. Nevertheleſs ſome of theſe were lodg'd in little private Temples, and were kept from public View. The Scriptures relate, that the Jews offer'd Incenſe to the Brazen Serpent till [c] Hezekiah's Time, who cauſed it to be broke to Pieces. The Palladium of the Trojans was alſo a Taliſman, and there were few Cities but had antiently ſome thing peculiar to them, [d] on which they imagined their Fate depended.

X. Of

[a] On the Frontiers of Bengal is an Ox of a prodigious Size, which ſtands in the high Road, and has two Carbuncles or Rubies for its Eyes. The Indians of that Country ſeldom ſet out upon a Journey without firſt invoking that Animal. Thoſe of the Kingdom of Var anoint or daub their Houſes over with the Fat of a new-ſlain Ox. Thoſe of Meliapur carry ſome Bull's Hair along with them, and tie it to the Necks of their Horſes, thinking it to be an excellent Preſervative. Others, who alſo worſhip Oxen, firſt kill them, then break their Bones to Pieces, and therewith make a kind of Ointment to rub themſelves withal, as Marcus Paulus aſſures us.

[b] As the Author has mention'd the Pyramids of Egypt in this Place, it may not be improper to obſerve, that there is ſome Conformity between the Egyptians and Chineſe on this Head. The latter have Towers in the Shape of Pyramids, at the Top of which they ſet an Idol. They have a great Veneration both for the Tower and the Idol. Now, whether they look upon it as a Taliſman, or that the Tower conceals ſome other ſuperſtitious Thing, capable of exciting the Devotion of the Chineſe, 'tis certain that there is ſome Reſemblance between theſe Towers and Pyramids. The Egyptians had them alſo in great Veneration, and we are aſſur'd, that they worſhipp'd the Point or Top of thoſe Edifices.

X. Of the River GANGES, and the Countries which it waters.

THE Antients have ſpoken of the River Ganges. St. Jerom when he writes to Ruſticus the Monk, agrees with the Scriptures when he ſays, that the Ganges or Piſon, by which Name 'tis call'd by Moſes in the Book of Geneſis, compaſſeth the whole Land of Havilah. He obſerves that the Emerald and the Carbuncle grow in that Country; that it abounds with Mountains of Gold, which it is impoſſible to come near becauſe of the great Number of Griffins, Dragons, and other [a] Monſters.

WHEN the Scripture mentions Ganges, or, if you will, Piſon, in my Opinion it deſcribes that River as it was before the Flood, and immediately after the Creation of the World; ſince it makes it flow from the ſame Source as the other three: But it is very probable that the Waters which overſpread the Face of the whole Earth quite changed the Courſe of the ſeveral Rivers; and conſequently that thoſe Rivers which are now call'd Tigris, Ganges, and Euphrates, are not thoſe antient Rivers which iſſued out of the terreſtrial Paradiſe, and that they have nothing of them but the Name.

I BELIEVE we may alſo preſume, without running any Risk of claſhing with Scripture, to ſubſtract ſome Things from the Deſcription which St. Jerom has given us of the Ganges, of the Emeralds, the Carbuncles, and the Mountains of Gold; the Country which that River waters, being rich only by the Fruitfulneſs of its Soil, by its Silks and Muſlins, which draw a great Number of Foreigners to it, and almoſt all the Gold of the Indies, a conſiderable Part of which comes from Achim in the Iſland of Sumatra, diſtant upwards of three hundred Leagues from the Ganges.

IT is thought that the City of Achim is the ſame with Ophir mentioned in Scripture, whence Solomon is ſaid to have ſent for Gold; which Conjecture is not altogether improbable: For the Fleet of that mighty King was built at [b] Ezion-geber, a City of Idumæa or Edom, ſituated on the Shore of the Red-Sea. It is very probable, that this City was not far diſtant from the Place where Moca now ſtands; nor does it appear that the Ships which came out of the Red-Sea, could have gone any where for ſo great a Quantity of Gold as into the Iſle of Sumatra, which is nevertheleſs at a great Diſtance from it; whence it is manifeſt that the Voyages to that Place muſt in thoſe Days have taken up a conſiderable Time, and been performed with great Difficulty, as they had not the Uſe of a Sea-Compaſs, and conſequently could not advance far into the Ocean, but on the contrary were generally forced to coaſt it. It is probable that this Voyage is hinted at in [c] Eccleſiaſticus, where the Fame of Solomon is ſaid to have reach'd to the moſt diſtant Iſles.

MONSIEUR Huet ſpeaking of the Canal that joined the Mediterranean to the Red-Sea, by which the Ships of Solomon and Hiram might have returned laden into Judea or Phœnicia, thinks that Ophir was the Eaſtern Coaſt of Africa call'd Zanguebar; but this Country is not near ſo fruitful in Gold as Achim. Beſides, if it be objected, that Su- the Heathens ſeem likewiſe to have imitated on certain Occaſions. 'Tis alſo poſſible that the Heathens might have invented thoſe Superſtitions without having borrow'd them from the Jews.

matra lay at too great a Diſtance for Men who were not very well skill'd in Navigation, this will make much ſtronger againſt Zanguebar. The learned Prelate abovementioned, makes them undertake a longer and more dangerous Voyage, when he brings them from into Spain into the Red-Sea, and conſequently obliges them to ſail quite round Afric. He then ſpeaks of thoſe who returned back from Tarſus.

WE neither meet with Dragons or Griffins on the Banks of the Ganges: But as for Crocodiles, Rhinoceros's, and Tygers, they are pretty numerous in thoſe Parts, the laſt of which make dreadful Havock. Some of theſe have taken Children out of the very Houſes; and was a Man to go but a little way into the Woods, he would run the hazard of being devoured by them. I myſelf ſaw, in a Party of hunting on the Banks of the Ganges, the freſh Print of the Feet of thoſe Beaſts, which, without exaggerating, were about ſeven Inches over.

THERE are alſo a prodigious Number of Crocodiles. Theſe generally live in the Water, and even haunt the little Rivulets which run into the Ganges, becauſe they there meet with a greater Quantity of Food than in the main River; but when they come out of the Water, they ſeldom go far from Shore. The moſt ſurpriſing Accounts have been told me of the prodigious Strength of theſe Animals, and I have been frequently aſſur'd by the Inhabitants of the Country, that they would often ſeize an Ox by the Muzzle, when it was going to drink, and draw it to the Bottom of the River without any manner of Difficulty; and indeed it was very dangerous to waſh in it.

[a] THE Indians have alſo a peculiar Veneration for the Ganges, and look upon it as a God, and therefore daily offer Sacrifices to it; for which Purpoſe, they ſet little Lamps on its Banks, and theſe being carried away by the Stream, look very pretty in the Night.

SEVERAL who inhabit near the Ganges, when they find themſelves very ill, beg to be carried on the Banks of it, there to reſign their Breath; for they think that all thoſe are happy who die on its Waters, and fancy that it has the Virtue of waſhing away their Sins [b].

WHEN once a ſick Perſon has deſired to be carried thither, he cannot recede from it. Being come there, they firſt put his Feet into the River, and afterwards force him to ſwallow down a great Quantity of Water, which they exhort him to drink with Devotion and holy Confidence, and to be firmly perſuaded that it will waſh his Soul and wipe away all his Sins. In fine, they plunge him gently into the River, whence he muſt never hope to return alive. Several, whom an indiſcreet Devotion, or ſome Family Diſcontent, had prompted with a Deſire of being carried to the Ganges, have been drowned in it. They were very far from being ſo ill, as to be perſuaded they ſhould be ſo ſoon ſanctified by this Means; and ſincerely repented, but too late, of the Fault they had committed.

SUCH as live at a very great Diſtance from the Ganges, are contented, whenever they can get ſome of that Water, to drink a little before they die, and fancy that this is equally efficacious in cleanſing them from their Sins. People who live at a great Diſtance from it, often go thither, and get a little of its ſacred Water, which they carry [a] The Egyptians had alſo a great Veneration for the Nile, and even deify'd it; for Oſiris, whom we have already mention'd, was the Nile, or at leaſt ſignify'd the Virtue of that River, which is well known to have made the Land of Egypt fruitful.

into their reſpective Countries, to furniſh their chief Pagods therewith, which indeed are ſeldom unprovided of it. I myſelf once ſaw a ſmall Caravan of devout Indians going through Poudicheri (three hundred Leagues diſtant from the River at leaſt) who were carrying great Pots and Veſſels adorned with Rotain, fill'd with the Water of the Ganges. Theſe poor Wretches kept thoſe Pots very carefully, and ſeem'd to have them in the higheſt Veneration, tho' they were at a great Diſtance from their Homes.

I CANNOT forbear reflecting here, on the Darkneſs which has overſpread the Minds of thoſe Idolaters, and obſerving that Truth and Fiction make the ſame Impreſſion on the Minds and Hearts of Men. [a] Mankind are as prone to Error, and adhere as zealouſly to the groſſeſt Superſtitions, as they ought to do to true Religion. It is really ſurpriſing; that what we call the Force of Truth, does not make a greater Impreſſion upon them; that its Light does not ſtrike irreſiſtably on the Blind, and open their Eyes ſo as to give them a Sight of their Errors. But for this we muſt have Recourſe to the Depth of God's Judgments, and to that Abyſs of Prudence which is impenetrable to human Eyes, and is comprehended by God only.

BUT to return to the Ganges. 'Tis probable that the Veneration which the Indians have for that River may be owing to the Tradition received from their Predeceſſors with regard to Piſon, mentioned in Scripture; and that they inſenſibly mix'd the Account they had receiv'd from Mankind in the firſt Ages, with the fabulous Hiſtories of their chimerical Gods.

THEY not only have a great Veneration for the River Ganges, which they conſider as the moſt holy River in the World, and even a God, but alſo pay the utmoſt Reverence to all Floods and Rivers in [b] general. Their Devotees, before they put their Feet into any River, waſh their Hands with a little of its Water, and at the ſame Time offer up a ſhort Prayer to the Gods.

THIS Cuſtom of reſpecting Rivers, and waſhing one's Hands in their Waters, is ſtrongly recommended by [c] Heſiod, one of the moſt antient Poets now extant.

THIS Veneration might be owing to the Opinion the Antients entertain'd, of every Flood and River's having its peculiar Deity, which was ſuppoſed to preſide over its Water.

XI. Of the Metempſychoſis, or Tranſmigration of Souls.

THE Indians believe the Tranſmigration of Souls; a manifeſt Proof of which is, the great Number of Hoſpitals erected in Surat, for the lodging, feeding, and healing of all ſuch Beaſts as are either maimed, crippled, or afflicted with any Diſeaſe. I have not been able to diſcover whence this Doctrine took its Riſe among them, and am of Opinion, that this would be a very difficult Point; for we meet with great Numbers of People who profeſs the ſame Religion, and worſhip God in the ſame Temples, have the ſame Ceremonies among them, and are likewiſe of the ſame Tribe, who yet have very different Notions on this Head. As for Inſtance, there are certain

[a] The Reaſons which are here given for this Turn of Mind have already been made by a great Number of Writers. See Bayle's Reflection on Comets.

[b] The Greeks and Romans alſo worſhipp'd them.

[c] Heſiod. oper. & dier. Lib. II.

[a] Bramins who live only on [b] Herbs, Milk, Butter, and Fruits, while others eat Hens only, and others again the Fleſh of the Roe-Buck. Some Tribes eat Swine's Fleſh, but all in general abſtain from Oxen and Cows. I have already taken notice of the Veneration they have for thoſe Beaſts.

THE Banians, who are a particular Tribe of Merchants, and of whom mention will be made in the Sequel, adhere more ſtrictly to the Doctrine of the Tranſmigration of Souls than the reſt of the Indians, and obey, with the moſt religious Exactneſs, the moſt inconſiderable Injunctions of it. [c] They never kill any kind of Animals, nor eat of any Thing that had Life; ſome of them are ſo ſcrupulouſly exact in this Particular, as to keep Servants purely to fan the Air while they eat, in order to drive away the great Number of Gnats or little Flies with which that Country is infeſted; for fear leſt any of them ſhould unfortunately drop into the Victuals, or that they ſhould ſwallow them down, and ſo kill them.

ONE might, methinks, conclude from this Diverſity of Opinions, with regard to the Tranſmigration of Souls, that at the Time of its being introduc'd among thoſe Indians, they had already an eſtabliſh'd Form of Worſhip, and a Religion independent from that Doctrine; ſo that it was at firſt receiv'd no otherwiſe than as an Opinion, which having no ill Tendency in itſelf, might be either receiv'd or rejected, as every Perſon ſhould judge proper. Some Heads of Families gave afterwards into this new Philoſophy, and adher'd very ſcrupulouſly to all its Principles. Others thinking it impoſſible for the Souls of Men to tranſmigrate into the Bodies of certain Animals, would therefore not abſtain from eating them. Every one afterwards acquainted his Family with the Notion he entertain'd on this Head, and by this means tranſmitted it by inſenſible Degrees to their Poſterity; and theſe have always imbib'd it, and look upon it at this Day as a Law which they are indiſpenſably oblig'd to follow, and that becauſe they pay the utmoſt Deference and Veneration to all the Cuſtoms of their Anceſtors.

HAD the Doctrine of Tranſmigration been at firſt eſtabliſh'd among the Indians as an Article of Religion, we then ſhould not have found ſo great a Variety of Opinions among them upon that Head. They would even have conſider'd all ſuch as Schiſmatics who differ'd from the general Opinion, and would not follow that Doctrine in all its Purity. They would at laſt have ſeparated entirely from one another, and have had different Temples, Prieſts, and even Sacrifices.

THE Reader may poſſibly ask, whether the Indians receiv'd the Doctrine of Tranſmigration from Pythagoras or his Followers; for this Philoſopher is generally ſuppos'd to have firſt ſtarted this Opinion, or at leaſt to have firſt taught it.

WERE we to anſwer this Queſtion agreeably to the Diſcoveries which have been made in our Days in the Empire of China, we then ſhould affirm that the Indians and

[a] We find a great Conformity between the Bramins and the antient Egyptian Prieſts. As for Inſtance, the former waſh themſelves with clear Water twice a-day before they enter into their Pagods, which Cuſtom was alſo obſerv'd by the antient Egyptians. They plunge themſelves into the Ganges out of a Spirit of Devotion, after which they take up Water, and throw towards the Sun, as a Teſtimony of their Veneration. The Egyptians uſed alſo to plunge themſelves in the ſacred Water of the Nile, and never eat of any Thing that has Life, as the Bramins at this Day.

[b] Several eat neither Milk, Cheeſe, Butter, Eggs, nor any Thing that is produc'd from living Animals; for fear, ſay they, leſt they ſhould imprudently ſwallow down the Souls of any of their Heroes, Relations, &c.

[c] Their Charity to Beaſts is ſo very ridiculous, that it would appear altogether improbable, did not ſeveral Travellers aſſure us, that they themſelves had been Eye-Witneſſes to it, and among the reſt Mr. Fryer an Engliſh Phyſician: The Banians, ſays he, in his excellent Voyage into Perſia and the Indies, live under the ſame Roof with Oxen and Cows, &c. and ſuffer themſelves to be eat up with Vermin, out of a charitable Principle. Though they are tormented by Gnats and Moſketoes, they yet never dare hurt them. And how grievouſly ſoever theſe Inſects ſting them, they yet imagine they bring the Bleſſings of Heaven along with them. At their Deaths, they purchaſe Liberty to ſome Animals, and free them from all their Labours, &c.

Chineſe

Chineſe had the Doctrine of Tranſmigration five hundred Years at leaſt before that Philoſopher, who, as [a] Tully informs us, liv'd when the Romans drove Tarquinius Superbus out of Rome, and changed their Monarchy into a Commonwealth. In Solomon's Time, an Indian Philoſopher, whoſe Name was [b] Phoe, a Native, as ſome have it, of the Iſland of Ceylan, or, according to others, of the neighbouring Continent, publiſh'd this Doctrine in the Indies.

THIS Man, in order to give the greater Weight and Authority to this new Philoſophy, and that it might be receiv'd with the greater Awe and Veneration, aſſur'd the People he had receiv'd it from Heaven: He cauſed himſelf to be conſider'd as a Prophet, and even went ſo far as to affirm, that he was the beſt Man upon Earth.

HE taught a twofold Doctrine; the one interior, the other exterior. He communicated the interior Doctrine to ſuch of his deareſt Diſciples only, whom he knew were entirely devoted to him, and on whoſe Fidelity he was ſenſible he might ſafely rely. In this Syſtem he aſſerted, that the Soul would be annihilated after Death, and that after its Separation from the Body, it diſſolv'd itſelf in Air, and form'd an ethereal Subſtance; which differs but very little from that Species of [c] Atheiſm which we are told all the learned Chineſe have imbib'd.

WITH regard to the exterior Doctrine, he taught the People the Tranſmigration of Souls, [d] and affirm'd that he himſelf had experienc'd it a numberleſs Multitude of Times, having liv'd on the Earth under the Figure of an Ape, a Calf, an Elephant, and ſeveral other Beaſts. 'Tis on theſe different kinds of Beaſts, in whoſe Bodies he ſaid his Soul had paſs'd, that moſt of the Religions of the Indians are grounded, who probably before that Time had only the Knowledge of ſome Supreme Being, or in general of ſome Deity, to whom they might offer Sacrifices.

NEVERTHELESS, I would not be underſtood to conclude from hence, that this Knowledge which the Indians had of a ſovereign Being, was ſuitable to the divine Majeſty; or, in other Words, that they acknowledg'd the true God only, that the Sacrifices which they made were addreſs'd to no other Being than to him, and that their Religion was free from Superſtition and Idolatry till Fo or Phoe.

'TWOU'D be an odd Paradox were we to advance that (at a Time when a Cloud of Error had overſpread the World, and that God was oblig'd as it were to ſeparate Abraham from the reſt of Mankind, in order to make him the Father of a People who might adore and ſerve him without Superſtition, or dividing his Worſhip between the true God and the falſe ones) to advance, I ſay, that Truth ſhould have ſhelter'd herſelf among the Indians; that it there continued in all its Purity till Solomon's Time; and that the Idea of one ſole God, unſullied with Error, was preſerv'd in India, at the ſame Time that the Jews were continually falling into Idolatry, and that the Indians worſhipp'd the Supreme Being in a manner altogether ſuitable to his divine Perfections.

[b] Fo, or Xechia, a Chineſe Deity, which firſt came from the Indies, where it bears the Name of Ram; at Japan that of Xaca; at Tunquin, that of Chiaga, &c. of whom mention will be made in the Sequel. All we ſhall now obſerve in this Place is, that ſome Authors take this Xaca for Pythagoras, and others for Hermes Triſmegiſtus the Egyptian.

[c] This Opinion is not any way atheiſtical. This diſſolving of the Soul into an ethereal Subſtance is a Notion of great Antiquity, which will admit of a pretty tolerable Interpretation. 'Tis indeed true, that it ſuppoſes the Soul to be a corporeal Being.

[d] The Indians tell us that the Soul of Xaca went through eighty thouſand Metamorphoſes, and at laſt fix'd its Habitation in the Body of a white Elephant. Hence ariſes the Veneration the Indians have for the white Elephant.

PHOE propoſed his new Doctrine to the Indians, and eaſily prevail'd with them to receive it, and heighten it with the wild Chimeras, which they had entertain'd till his Time, with regard to the Deity and the Soul. 'Tis well known that Mankind in general are vaſtly fond of Novelty, and particularly the inferior Sort, eſpecially when they imagine that their Religion will either have the greater Spread, or receive any Improvements by that means.

MOREOVER, the Doctrine of Tranſmigration made its Way more eaſily into the Minds of Men, becauſe the Notion prevail'd univerſally with regard to the Immortality of the Soul, which was thought to go into a certain Place after its Diſſolution from the Body. This has in different Ages given riſe to ſeveral very whimſical Opinions; for ſome fancied that the Souls of the Wicked went immediately after Death into a Place of Torment, where they were puniſh'd according to the Enormity of their Crimes, an Opinion that has been moſt generally receiv'd by all Heathens. Others were ſo ridiculous as to aſſert, that the Gods cauſed Souls to paſs into the Bodies of the dirtieſt and moſt vile Animals. Others thought, that they wander'd up and down the World, and that they were oblig'd to ramble in that manner for many Ages, before they were allow'd to aſcend into Heaven whence they ſprung. [a] Tully was probably of opinion, that Souls roam up and down after this Life, as appears from Scipio's [b] Dream.

PHOE writ forty Volumes, which continued untranſlated, and were wholly confin'd to the Indies, till Anno Dom. 65. when the Diſciples of that Philoſopher carried it to China under the Reign of Hoamti. The Chineſe immediately tranſlated it into their Language. They proved the Age in which his Followers ſaid he liv'd, from the ſeveral Particulars ſcatter'd up and down in his Works, all which bore ſome Relation to ſeveral Circumſtances with which they were acquainted, with regard to the Indians. No ſooner did this Doctrine make its Appearance among them, but it met with a numberleſs Multitude of Followers.

OUR Saviour, to ſhew us in his Goſpel, that every Action we do for his Sake ſhall be rewarded, promiſes a Reward to all thoſe, who in his Name, and from a Deſire of being acceptable to him, ſhall give even ſo much as a Glaſs of Water.

THE Reader poſſibly will ſay, that a Glaſs of Water is a mere Trifle; however the giving even this, is a very meritorious Action on certain Occaſions, and in the Manner as ſeveral Indians do it; for they ſometimes fetch it at a great Diſtance, and boil it, in order to make it the more ſalutary. Theſe People wait all Day long in thoſe Roads where there are no Wells nor Rivulets to be met with, and offer Water to all Paſſengers in honour of their Gods.

'TIS probable that the Jews had formerly this pious Cuſtom, as alſo their neighbour Nations, whoſe Cuſtoms they were acquainted with. Our Saviour alluded to this Cuſtom, when he aſſur'd us that it would meet with its Reward.

[a] Others imagin'd that after their leaving the Body they were to go through Fire, in order to be purg'd from the Uncleanneſs they had contracted in this Life; which Opinion prevails to this Day.

'TIS

'TIS certain that the Eaſterns are much more charitable than the Europeans, with reſpect to ſuch Things as are neceſſary to the Support of Life. They ſcarce ever refuſe Victuals and Drink to poor Paſſengers, unleſs when their Country is oppreſſed with Famine; in which they imitate the Practice of Mankind in the Infancy of the World, who never uſed to ſuffer any Traveller to paſs by, without offering him Something, or giving him ſome little Refreſhment. Thus Abraham cauſed three Angels to [a] reſt themſelves, and ſet Victuals before them, when they, having aſſum'd the human Figure, paſſed through the Valley of Mamre, where he then was, in order to get Lot out of Sodom. At their Arrival in that City, Lot would not ſuffer them to ſtand without, but [b] carried them into his Houſe, though he was an entire Stranger to them. The Stranger who dwelt at Gibeah offer'd, in like Manner, his Houſe to the [c] Levite, and was very much ſurpriz'd that all refuſed him Admittance; for in thoſe Days, every Body kept open Houſe, and uſed to entertain Travellers with great Chearfulneſs and Pleaſure, without expecting the leaſt Reward for it.

XIII. Their Manner of eating Locuſts.

WE read in the Goſpels, that St. John the Baptiſt liv'd on Locuſts and wild Honey. Some Interpreters, who could never believe that any human Creature ever fed on thoſe Inſects, ſay that by the Word Locuſta we are to underſtand the Extremities of Branches of Trees, and affirm it to have been the only Suſtenance this holy Anchorite took; but they did not know that the Indians often [d] eat boil'd Locuſts; and though they are like to thoſe in Europe, they yet never make any of them ſick.

NOR was this Food very uncommon among the Jews, God allowing them to feed upon thoſe Inſects, as we find it expreſſed in Leviticus in manner following: [e] Yet theſe ye may eat of; every flying, creeping Thing, that goeth upon all four, which have Legs above their Feet, to leap withal upon the Earth. —— Even theſe of them ye may eat: The Locuſt after his kind, and the bald Locuſt after his kind, and the Beetle after his kind, and the Graſhopper after his kind.

XIV. Of the fortified Places into which the Shepherds withdraw with their Flocks.

THE Scripture tells us, that [f] Uzziah built Towers in the Deſart, and digged many Wells, becauſe of the great Number of Cattle he had in the Palins.

IN my Opinion theſe Towers are the ſame with thoſe the Indians call Pagods, not thoſe which they uſe as Temples, but certain other large Edifices which they build in Plains, and call Pagods; probably becauſe that over their Gates Pyramids are ſet which are adorn'd with Figures of their Gods, as Witznou, and ſuch like; or elſe becauſe they have a great Number of little Chapels within them, each of which has an Idol.

[c] Judg. xix.

[d] Theſe Locuſts are generally large, red, and ſo weighty, that they cannot riſe from the Ground when they are carried, at certain Seaſons, by Whirlwinds towards Ormuz and Banderabaſſi. The Peaſants in thoſe Countries dry, ſalt, and burn, or parch them, and carry them to Market, like other Proviſions.

[f] 2 Paral. xxvi. 10. Extruxit etiam turres in ſolitudine, & effodit ciſternas plurimas eò quod haberet multa pecorà.

THESE Edifices are generally ſurrounded with ſtrong Walls, and thither they carry their Cattle in Time of Danger; for the People are oblig'd to ſtand always upon their Guard, though their King ſhould be at Peace with all his Neighbours; becauſe, as in thoſe Countries the Soldiers are ill paid, their Commanders, who keep their Pay, allow them therefore to plunder at pleaſure; ſo that they often fall upon the Cattle when they are leaſt expected. Theſe Marauders often forc'd us to take up Arms at Pondicheri, and we even had the ill Fortune to loſe a very brave Officer in one of thoſe Sallies, and another was wounded, and alſo ſeveral of the Natives who were in our Service. But 'twould be to no Purpoſe to ſue for Juſtice from their Commander, or repreſent to him, that his Soldiers have no Right to make any Inroads into other Peoples Territories, at a Time when they are at Peace with the Great Mogul their Maſter: They always promiſe very fair, and as ſurely break it; they being oblig'd either to pay their Soldiers, or give them Leave to plunder. Such as are travelling in India retire into theſe Pagods. In Perſia they withdraw into [a] Caravanſerahs, and in Arabia into their Caravanbeites, or Houſe of Caravans.

IN all Places where there are no Pagods there are uſually other little Edifices, call'd Chaudries, which Travellers may alſo retire to, but not with the ſame Conveniency. There are in India ſeveral Reſervoirs of Water, pretty much like thoſe Ciſterns or Wells which the King of Judah cauſed to be ſunk in the Deſart. Theſe Heathens think that the digging of Wells and Ponds in ſolitary Places, for the Conveniency of Travellers and Beaſts, is a charitable Action; and it often happens, that a Vow made to their Gods, a Deſire of obtaining Children, or of Succeſs in ſome Undertaking, are the Motives of their making them.

XV. Of their Public Edifices.

THE Pagods and other public Edifices of the Heathens are generally built of great black Stones of an extraordinary Length. The Pillars, of which there are always a great Number, are almoſt of one Piece, and ſupport ſtone Rafters that form the Cieling. Theſe Rafters are generally ſeventeen or eighteen Foot long, and about three Foot and an half broad. They are all fix'd to one another, and a little Lime is put between the Joints, to hinder the Water from coming through; ſo that there is not one ſingle Piece of Wood in theſe great Buildings.

THE Scarcity of theſe Stones, the Difficulty of removing them from one Place to another, and of fixing them in Buildings, raiſes their Value prodigiouſly. The Walls of Jeruſalem were built of ſuch Stones, whoſe great Length and [b] Thickneſs made them valuable.

[c] SOLOMON alſo employ'd ſuch Stones in laying the Foundations of his Houſe, and that which he built for Pharaoh's Daughter. 'Tis ſaid in the Book of Kings, That the Foundation was of coſtly Stones, even of great Stones, Stones of ten Cubits, and Stones of eight Cubits. This ſtrong Way of building made them very durable, and enabled them to reſiſt Time and the Inclemencies of the Weather. But Things are now very much

[a] Theſe Caravanſerahs are Edifices rais'd by the Charity of the Eaſterns. Some of theſe in Perſia are dedicated to certain Mahometan Saints, as for Inſtance, to Band-Aly, or Chaſte-Aly. The Caravanſerahs have no kind of Furniture in them. Travellers have Ingreſs and Egreſs, without giving any Thing to the Perſon who looks after them, or his Servants, they being maintain'd by the Bounty of ſeveral charitable People. There is ſome Difference between the Caravanſerahs of Cities and thoſe of the Country; the latter are ſpoken of in this Place.

chang'd in this Particular; for we never conſider whether what we do will be agreeable to Poſterity, and generally labour only for ourſelves, and for the immediate Gratification of our own Taſtes.

SUCH Indians as are in good Circumſtances, build pretty much after the Manner of the Jews. Moſt of their Houſes are flat at Top, like thoſe in Paleſtine, as indeed they generally are to this Day in moſt hot Countries. They have alſo a kind of Gallery at the Entrance of every Houſe, which forms the Front. 'Tis here they receive their Viſits, and make their Entertainments in rainy Seaſons; for in fine Weather they have either Tents or Arbours in their Court-Yards, and in theſe ſhady Places they feaſt and regale themſelves.

THEY never admit any Perſon within their Houſes, which are only for themſelves or their Women. They likewiſe never have any Window next the Street, to prevent Intrigues with their Wives, for they are ſurprizingly jealous in this Country. They not only never viſit the Ladies, but dare not even enquire after them; and there could not be a worſe Compliment made a Man, than to ask him how his Wife does; ſo that no Perſon muſt ever mention their Wives any more than if they never had any. If a Man ſhould out of Civility enquire after their Health, they would immediately reply, That none but themſelves are concern'd in their being well or ill; for as they were made for their Uſe only, no Man breathing but themſelves has a Right to trouble their Heads about their Health, or to intermeddle in any of their Concerns. But this is not all; for theſe Queſtions, though altogether innocent, prove ſometimes fatal to the Women enquired after. From what has been ſaid, we may judge how many People would be idle in thoſe Countries, who are not ſo in Europe. 'Tis true indeed, that the Confinement under which their Women are kept, makes them ſeldom let ſlip any Opportunity that offers itſelf, and that their Men need only ſtand upon the defenſive.

XVI. Of the Black with which the Indian Women heighten the White of their Complexions; and of their Looking-Glaſſes.

EZEKIEL repreſenting the Idolatry of Jeruſalem under the Figure of a leud Woman, reproaches her with painting her Eyes when ſhe expected her Lovers. We alſo read in the ſecond Book of Kings, that [b] Jezabel painted her Face in order to make herſelf agreeable to Jehu, and to eſcape the Death which ſhe knew ſhe juſtly deſerv'd for the great Number of Crimes ſhe had committed. As ſoon as Jezabel heard of Jehu's Arrival, ſhe painted her Eyes, and put her Ornaments on her Head. The Compoſition ſhe uſed gave a black Tincture to the Eye; but this, according to the modern Taſte, would ſcarce make a Woman more killing. Nevertheleſs ſuch Indian Women as are fair complexion'd, have the ſame Cuſtom among them to this Day. Theſe, in order to heighten the Luſtre of their Charms, and give their Eyes a more languiſhing Look, colour them round with a little Black, which has pretty near the ſame Effect with them, as the patching of our European Ladies among us.

As to the Ornaments of their Women, I ſhall, by the way, make ſome mention of their Glaſſes, and of the Manner in which they are made. They are generally very ſmall, and made of Braſs finely poliſh'd, which reflects the Image very exactly. They were formerly uſed by the Jews, and are ſtill to this Day in ſeveral Parts of Europe.

[b] 4 Reg. ix. 30. Porrò Jezabel introitu ejus audito depinxit oculos ſuos ſtibio, & ornavit caput ſuum.

The

The Scripture tells us, that [a] Bezaleel made a Laver of Braſs, and the Foot of it of Braſs, and the Looking-Glaſſes of the Women aſſembling, which aſſembled at the Door of the Tabernacle of the Congregation. I ſhall take the Liberty of making ſome Reflections on thoſe Women who uſed to watch and pray at the Door of the Tabernacle of the Congregation, with regard to the Conſequences which ſome Authors have endeavour'd to draw from the Paſſage above-mention'd. Theſe have pretended to prove from thence, that under the written Law there were Nuns or Virgins devoted to God, who had Cells in the Out-Parts of the Tabernacle. Such as give ſo remote an Antiquity to monaſtic Inſtitutions, ſeem too much prejudic'd in its Favour. 'Tis enough that we allow this religious State to be good in itſelf; that 'tis holy, and has a Sanction given to it by the Church, without endeavouring to prove its Inſtitution upwards of fifteen hundred Years before Chriſt. Not to mention that there muſt have been a prodigious Number of theſe Nuns; that their Looking-Glaſſes muſt have been very large, or that every Recluſe had a great Number of them, otherwiſe 'twould have been impoſſible to have made ſo great a brazen [b] Veſſel out of them. Methinks that the two laſt Articles ſeem very ill ſuited to Nuns, who, though beautiful, ought not ſo much as to remember that they have one handſome Feature; and who, conſequently, have no manner of occaſion for ſo great a Number of Looking-Glaſſes.

IF it were true that the monaſtic Life was inſtituted in Moſes's Time, what would become of the Claim of the pretended Succeſſors of Elias, who ſtrongly aſſert, that they themſelves firſt gave Riſe to that Inſtitution.

THESE Women who uſed to watch at the Door of the Tabernacle were not Nuns, but ſecular Women, whom Devotion prompted to go and ſpend the Night in Prayer near the Houſe of the Lord. This religious Cuſtom was practiſed in the Time of Eli the High-Prieſt, and the debauching of theſe Women was one of the Crimes which his Children had been guilty of. The Scripture does not here employ the Word Excubabant as in Exodus, [c] but that of obſervabant, which I believe ought to be tranſlated to meditate or reflect upon, and not to look after or watch; for there were Levites enough to guard the Tabernacle, ſo that they had no occaſion to employ Women for that Purpoſe.

XVII. The Cuſtom the Indians have of letting their Nails grow.

BOTH Men and Women in India ſuffer their Nails to grow prodigiouſly long, [d] which was alſo the Cuſtom of the antient Heathens; but the Jews, for fear leaſt any Impurity ſhould remain in them, and by that means might mix with their Victuals, uſed to pare them very carefully, and oblig'd all their Family to do the ſame. 'Tis for this Reaſon that the Scripture, when it allows them to marry ſuch Women as they ſhould have taken Priſoners in War, [e] commands them to firſt ſhave their Heads, and likewiſe pare their Nails.

XVIII. The

XVIII. The Marriage-Ceremonies of the Indians.

WE meet with a Parable in [a] St. Matthew, which I believe may be explained by one of the Ceremonies of the Indians.

THAT Evangeliſt ſpeaking of the five fooliſh Virgins who had forgot to provide Oil till the Bridegroom was ready to enter in, ſays, [b] That at Midnight there was a Cry made, Behold the Bridegroom cometh! go ye out to meet him.

THIS Cuſtom for a Man to go out on the Eve of his Wedding-Day, and not to return till Midnight, appears ſo extraordinary to us, that we might ask whether there were no Law which obliged him to it, ſince he came back with great Ceremony; there being Women with Torches in their Hands, who were going to meet him, and a Feaſt prepared againſt his coming.

WE might eaſily anſwer this Enquiry, were we to make it conſonant to the Cuſtoms of the Indians; for among them, the Bride and Bridegroom ride together on their Wedding-Day in the ſame Sedan, the common Vehicle of the Country, which four Men carry upon their Shoulders, and ſet out about ſeven or eight in the Evening, together with all their Friends and Relations, with Trumpets ſounding and Drums beating before them, and are lighted by a great Number of Maſſals, a kind of Torch I ſhall immediately deſcribe.

SEVERAL Women walk behind the Sedan, ſinging Verſes, in which they wiſh the new-married Couple uninterrupted Happineſs, in the ſame Manner as the Greeks and Romans in their Epithalamiums.

'TIS probable that theſe kind of public Singers are hinted at in the laſt Chapter of [c] Eccleſiaſtes. They are likewiſe mention'd by [d] David.

IN this Manner the Bride and Bridegroom in India are carried up and down for ſome Hours; after which they return home, where the Women and Servants wait their Arrival. The whole Houſe is illuminated with little Lamps, and ſeveral Maſſals are ready lighted for their coming, beſides thoſe which go before the Bride and Bridegroom's Sedan.

THESE Maſſals are made of ſeveral Pieces of old Linen, knit very cloſe together circulary, and theſe they thruſt through a Copper Haft or Handle. They who hold a Maſſal in one Hand, have a Bottle made of the ſame Metal with the Haft of their Torches, in the other, and filled with Oil, which they pour from Time to Time on the Linen Cloth above mentioned, which ſerves for the ſame Uſe as the Wick of a Candle among us, ſo that were they not to ſupply it with Oil, it would immediately go out.

As ſoon as the new-married Couple are got into the Houſe, the Bride withdraws with the Women, and the Bridegroom and his Friends lay themſelves down on Carpets or Mats, and Proviſion is immediately brought them. There is always a great Number of People at theſe Weddings, and I queſtion whether the Greeks had ſo many Bride-Folks at their Nuptials as the Indians have.

THERE ſeems to be a conſiderable Conformity between this Cuſtom and the Parable in the Goſpel. It is probable that the Jews, at leaſt thoſe in our Saviour's Time, had ſome ſuch Ceremony among them; otherwiſe I cannot ſee how we can eaſily account for the Return of the Bridegroom at Midnight, and for the Feaſt which was made immediately after it. Nevertheleſs thoſe who have written on the Jewiſh Traditions, do not make the leaſt mention of it.

OUR Saviour might poſſibly have borrowed that Cuſtom from ſuch Nations as border upon Judea, with whoſe Laws and Practices the Jews were probably acquainted.

IT would be to no Purpoſe to object, that it was only ſpoken parabolically, ſince all thoſe which our Saviour made uſe of were either founded on the Cuſtoms of the Jews, or on thoſe of ſuch Nations as lay near to Paleſtine.

XIX. Of the different TRIBES or CASTES among the INDIANS.

THE Heathen Indians are divided into Tribes, in the ſame Manner as the Jews were antiently; but I could never find out the exact Number of them: For every Tribe, beſides the general Diviſion, was ſubdivided into a numberleſs Multitude of others, who all differ among themſelves, either with regard to their Food, or ſome other Circumſtance.

THE Indians have given the Name of Caſtes to what the Jews called Tribes, but there is a much greater Diſproportion between theſe Caſtes, than there was between the Tribes of Iſrael, which however was not equal; for not to mention the Superiority which the Prieſthood gave to that of Levi, there was alſo a Rank or Degree among the reſt. As for inſtance, that of Benjamin was the laſt, as is manifeſt from Saul and Samuel, when the [a] latter ſpoke thus to him with regard to the She-Aſhes he was enquiring after: On whom is all the Deſire of Iſrael? Is it not on thee, and all thy Father's Houſe? Saul replied, Am not I a Benjamite, of the ſmalleſt of the Tribes of Iſrael?

HOWEVER, notwithſtanding this Superiority, yet the Members of the different Tribes uſed to viſit one another, and eat together. They were even allowed to marry into another Tribe, provided the Woman was not an Heireſs; for they were forbid to [b] remove the Inheritance of the Children of Iſrael from Tribe to Tribe. Thus David, tho' of the Tribe of Judah, married Michal, who was of the Tribe of Benjamin, becauſe ſhe had no Inheritance.

BUT the Indians are not allowed that Liberty; for ſome of their Tribes are univerſally deſpiſed; as for inſtance, that of the Parias. Any Family that ſhould marry into ſuch Tribes, would be polluted, as it were. The Members of theſe are employ'd in the moſt ſervile Offices, nor do they dare ſo much as to touch any of the others; and were they known to have the leaſt Familiarity with them, they would immediately be baniſhed from their reſpective Tribes, and be look'd upon as infamous Wretches.

THERE is nothing gives the Miſſionaries ſo much Trouble, or is ſo great an Obſtacle to the Converſion of the Heathen Indians, as the deadly Averſion the latter have for this Tribe of the Parias. They cannot prevail with themſelves to ſubmit to an Injunction which forces them, as it were, to receive the bleſſed Sacrament from the ſame Hand as gives it to the Parias, and conſequently make them run the Riſque of touching with their Lips the ſame Fingers which a Paria may have touched with his; ſo that they are obliged to uſe the utmoſt Precautions in this delicate Affair.

NOR will the Indians aſſemble in the ſame Church with the Parias; which has obliged the Jeſuits, who were willing to indulge them in their Weakneſs, to build a little Chapel near their own Church at Pondichery, for the Conveniency of theſe poor Wretches, who before this were obliged, whenever they aſſiſted at divine Service, to ſtand in the open Air, and be expoſed to the violent Rains, or ſcorching Heat of the Sun.

SOME would, perhaps, diſapprove this Condeſcenſion, and alledge that as Charity is the firſt Effect of Chriſtianity, the Indians ought not to be indulged in that Horror and Averſion they have for the Parias, whom Baptiſm has made their Brethren in Chriſt Jeſus; and that they ſhould leave no Stone unturned to conquer, if poſſible, the natural Antipathy which all the reſt of the Tribes bear to them.

THIS is what the Jeſuits and Capuchins of Pondichery endeavour at, with a truly apoſtolical Zeal. The Gentlemen who are employ'd in foreign Miſſions labour alſo to effect it with equal Application: But ſuch Frailties are not to be rooted out at once. We are bound in Duty to have the utmoſt Tenderneſs for a Church which is but in its Infancy, for a Set of People that are fluctuating, as it were, between Chriſtianity and Idolatry, and whoſe Hands are yet ſmoking with the Incenſe they had but juſt before offered to their falſe Gods: We ought, I ſay, to have a much greater regard on this Occaſion, than one ſhould have in a Place where the Chriſtian Religion had long flouriſh'd, and been eſtabliſh'd from Time immemorial.

As for inſtance, it is manifeſt from the Acts of the Apoſtles, that notwithſtanding the firſt Preachers of the Goſpel, aſſembled at Jeruſalem, had thought proper to oblige no longer all ſuch Heathens as ſhould be converted [a] to Chriſtianity to get themſelves circumciſed; St. Paul nevertheleſs circumciſed [b] Timothy, becauſe of the mortal Averſion which the Jews, to whom he was going to preach the Kingdom of Heaven, had to all the Uncircumciſed.

WE alſo meet with a much greater Inſtance of Indulgence in the old Old Teſtament, than the above-mentioned, and which, I am perſuaded, would not be allowed under the Chriſtian Diſpenſation. It was that of Naaman, Commander of the King of Syria's Armies, whom Eliſha cured of his Leproſy. Naaman promiſed the Prophet that he would wholly relinquiſh the Worſhip of Idols, and acknowledge no other Being than the true God, to whom he owed his Cure, However, as his Employment obliged him to [a] Act. Apoſt. xv. 28. Viſum eſt Spiritui Sancto, & nobis, nihil ultrà imponere vobis oneris, quàm hæc neceſſaria, &c. That is, It ſeemed good to the Holy Ghoſt, and to us, to lay upon you no greater Burthen than theſe neceſſary Things, &c.

[b] Act. Apoſt. xvi. 3. Et aſſumens circumcidit eum propter Judæos, qui erant in illis locis. Sciebant enim omnes, quod pater ejus erat Gentilis. That is, He took and circumciſed him, becauſe of the Jews who were in thoſe Quarters; For they all knew that his Father was a Gentile.

ac-

accompany his Sovereign to the Temple of Rimmon, and to wait upon him as his Eſquire upon that Occaſion, he [a] beſought Eliſha to intreat the Lord to pardon him, in caſe it ſhould ſo happen, that when the King lean'd upon his Shoulder to worſhip the Idol, he alſo ſhould adore it, or bow down before it. By the Anſwer Eliſha made him, one would be apt to think he conſented to it, ſince he reply'd only, Go in Peace; at leaſt we cannot ſay that he condemn'd him for it.

THE only Reaſon of my quoting theſe Inſtances, was to ſhew, that ſome Indulgence may be allowed to the Hardneſs of Mens Hearts; eſpecially when ſuch Things do not ſtrike directly at the Foundation of Religion; but on the contrary, when the not allowing them would be of very dangerous Conſequence. However, Perſons ſo indulged ought not to lay it down as a Maxim that is to be always obſerved; nor conſider that as an expreſs Leave and a poſitive Conſent, which was no more than a mere Indulgence, eſpecially if they had been told ſo beforehand.

As theſe Subjects are of a very nice and delicate Nature, ſo they ought to be handled with the utmoſt Prudence and Judgment. Theſe, perhaps, are the two moſt eſſential Qualifications required in a Miſſionary; but I am perſuaded that thoſe holy Labourers in the Lord's Vineyard, are thoroughly poſſeſs'd of them. We may reaſonably ſuppoſe, that Heaven beſtows on all thoſe, whom he inſpires with the holy Reſolution of labouring at the Converſion of the Heathens in the Indies, all the Virtues requiſite for ſuch a weighty Employment; at leaſt, Charity obliges us to think ſo.

WE are to hope, that ſome Expedient will in Time be found out, to root out, by inſenſible Degrees, the Averſion which all the Tribes of the Indians in general, bear to that of the Parias. It frequently happens, that Time only applies a Remedy to many Things, which might at firſt have been attempted to no Purpoſe, or at leaſt not without great Danger. We are not to doubt, but that when thoſe prudent ſpiritual Directors ſhall meet with the leaſt Opportunity of inſtilling into them the pure and uncorrupted Maxims of the Chriſtian Religion, and Charity, which is its very Eſſence; 'tis not, I ſay, to be doubted, but they will ſet about it with all imaginable Zeal and Fervour.

THIS Diſtinction of Tribes and Families, and the great Care which was taken not to marry into ſtrange Families, gave a Sanction in antient Times to near Relations to marry with one another, which in our Days would be look'd upon as Inceſtuous. As for inſtance, [b] Jacob, rather than marry a Canaaniti∫h Woman, took to Wife Leah and Rachel his Couſin-Germans, who likewiſe were Siſters. Such Marriages were common enough before the written Law, and in Proceſs of Time Things were carried to very great Lengths. Solon allow'd the marrying of Brothers and Siſters together, in Athens, provided they were not born from the ſame Mother: Lycurgus, on the contrary, permitted thoſe who were in the ſame Degree of Conſanguinity to marry together, provided they were not born of the ſame Father: But as for the [c] Egyptians, they allow'd both. The Perſians had Marriages that were ſtill more ſhocking; for a Son was permitted to marry his Mother: According to Philo, all Perſons of Diſtinction among them uſed to marry in this Manner, and the Children that ſprung from theſe Marriages were had in the utmoſt Veneration, and were even thought the moſt worthy of ſucceeding to the Throne. They affirm'd, that a Man boaſted the greater Perfection, the leſs his Blood was mix'd with other Streams.

XX. Of the Heads of each TRIBE or CASTE.

EACH Caſte has a Chief ſet over it, whoſe Buſineſs it is to maintain its Privileges, and to take care that the Laws be obſerved in it; and in general, that every Thing be done in it with Order and Regularity. Whenever any Thing is to be tranſacted which regards the whole Nation in general; as for Inſtance, their Cuſtoms, Rights, Proceſſes, or thoſe of Government in general; theſe Heads aſſemble together to enquire into them, when they give Judgment as they judge proper.

THESE [a] Princes of Tribes were called Heads among the Jews, and the Scripture ſpeaks of them, where it is ſaid, that they were ſitting on twelve Thrones judging the twelve Tribes of Iſrael. They are frequently ſpoken of in [b] Deuteronomy. No conſiderable Affair was tranſacted without their Conſent: And as each Head of a Tribe was impower'd to force all his People to follow the Laws which God had ſet them, as well as to apply a Remedy to thoſe Abuſes which ſtruck at his Divine Majeſty, God always began by puniſhing thoſe Heads, for whatever Evils they had ſuffered to paſs uncenſur'd. We ſee in the Book of Numbers, that when the Iſraelites, ſeduc'd by the Moabitiſh Women, worſhipp'd [c] Baal-Peor, God commanded Moſes to begin by hanging up all the Princes of Iſrael, or Heads of the Tribes.

THE Greeks likewiſe had Perſons of Diſtinction among them, who preſided over the ten Quarters or Wards into which the City of Athens was divided, which the Athenians called Phules. Theſe Phules were exactly the ſame as the Tribes among the Jews, and ſuch as preſided over them were call'd Archipulo's, Phularco's, Auco's, or Archego's.

THE Iſhmaelites alſo divided their Families into Tribes. There were twelve of them; each had its Head or Prince, as we find it in the [d] Scripture.

THE firſt Founders of Monarchies, who afterwards became ſo famous in the World, were no more than Chiefs of Tribes, and aſſumed no other Title than that of Firſt among their Equals: But afterwards abuſing the Reſpect and Deference which the People paid them, they at laſt laid aſide the Quality of Father, and aſſumed that of Emperor and King, and even frequently changed the Title of Protector into that of Tyrant and Uſurper.

XXI. The Excommunicated among the INDIANS.

THE Indians have alſo their excommunicated Perſons, and cut off ſuch Perſons from Society, much after the ſame Manner as the Jews did formerly. This the Indians call, loſing their Caſte, that is, their being no longer numbered among the Members of their Tribes. Such as incur thoſe Cenſures, are look'd upon as infamous Wretches, and univerſally ſhunn'd; nor is this all, for all who keep Company with them are had in as great Deteſtation, and are alſo caſt out of their Tribes. Thoſe are ſo odious to the reſt, that they immediately break to Pieces all ſuch brittle Veſſels as

[b] Deut. v. 23. xxx. 10.

[d] Geneſ. xxv. 16. Iſti ſunt filii Iſmaelis; & hæc nomina per caſtella, & oppida eorum, duodecim principes tribuum ſuarum.

they had made uſe of. The ſame is done when a Stranger or Paria happens to touch any of their Pots; for every Thing thoſe excommunicated Perſons have once touch'd, is thought to be profan'd.

THE moſt uſual Subjects for Excommunication are theſe: The drinking Wine, the feeding on Cows-Fleſh, the eating with Strangers or Paria's, or even the touching any Thing which they had dreſs'd. When once a Man is declared fallen from his Caſte, it coſts him a great Sum of Money to be reſtor'd to it; not to mention a great Number of Ablutions, which they were obliged to obſerve, in order towaſh off that Impurity they pretend he had contracted.

ALL the Heathens of Antiquity had in like Manner their excommunicated Perſons who were not allow'd to approach their Temples, or thoſe ſacred Groves where Sacrifices were made, and Prayers offered up to the Gods. Before the Ceremony began, the [a] Prieſt always gave notice to all ſuch Perſons, whoſe Actions had render'd them unworthy of partaking in thoſe holy Myſteries, to retire at a Diſtance, in order that they might not, by their Preſence, pollute thoſe holy Places which were ſet apart for the worſhipping of the Deity.

Procul ô! procul eſte profani!
All ye profane at Diſtance ſtand!

This was one of the Forms of Speech which their Prieſts made uſe of. By Excommunication we underſtand a ſeparating or cutting off from our Communion, like that of profanus or profane, which among the Antients ſignify a Man who was driven away from the Temples and Sacrifices: For profanus ſignifies as it were procul à fano, or far off from the Temple.

XXII. Their Manner of laying out, and watering their Gardens.

SOLOMON takes pleaſure in relating the ſeveral Diverſions he had given into, in order to paſs Life away in the moſt delightful and agreeable Manner poſſible, [b] and to enjoy what at leaſt had the Appearance of Felicity. He ſays, among other Particulars, that he had made him Pools of Water, to water therewith the Wood that bringeth forth Trees.

I PRESUME that the moſt natural way of explaining this Paſſage according to our Cuſtoms, would be to ſay, that by the Wood which bringeth forth Trees, is meant a Nurſery of Trees, in which the young Plants are generally ſet as thick, as they are in a Foreſt. However, I believe we are thereby to underſtand, all thoſe Gardens in general which Solomon had planted after his being raiſed to the Throne; for the Gardens among the Jews were in reality no other than Foreſts of Fruit-Trees, for which Reaſon they are generally call'd Pomaria or Orchards in Scripture.

[a] The ſame Cuſtom is obſerv'd among the Chriſtians, who excommunicate the Profane in a ſolemn Manner, and forbid them to partake in the Myſteries of the bleſſed Sacrament; this is obſerved both by Proteſtants and Papiſts.

[b] Eccleſ. ii. 6. Et extruxi mihi piſcinas, ut irrigarem ſylvam lignorum germinantium.

THE Gardens of the Indians are laid out much after the ſame Manner, they being made of a confuſed Medley of all kinds of Trees, moſt of them planted without Symmetry or Order, which, however, are pleaſant enough; and I ſhould prefer them in hot Countries to large open Walks, with their ſeveral Parterres; which tho' they are agreeable to the Eye, yet as they do not ſhelter from the ſcorching Rays of the Sun, they therefore ſuit very ill with thoſe Countries.

THE Indians have alſo ſuch Pools or Ponds as Solomon tells us he had made for the watering of this Foreſt or Grove of young Trees. It may not perhaps be improper to give the Reader an Account of the Uſes they are apply'd to in India.

EVERY Garden has generally a great Well or a kind of Pond in it, which is fill'd with Rain-Water. Juſt by it is a Baſon made of Brick, raiſed about two Foot from the Ground. Whenever they have a Mind to water it, they fill it with Water from the Well or Pool, which falls thro' a Hole made in the Bottom of it, into a Canal divided into ſeveral other little ones, by which Means it conveys, as it runs from the Baſon, Water to the Foot of every Tree, or Bed of Roots and Pulſe. When the Gardeners think they have imbib'd enough, they either ſtop, or divert the Canals with Clods of Earth.

THE Romans uſed alſo to water their Gardens and Meadows in the ſame Manner. Virgil ſpeaks of theſe Rivulets or Canals, when he ſays, Claudite jam rivos, pueri, ſat prata biberunt.

THE Italians have alſo retain'd this Cuſtom, which is alſo follow'd by moſt Eaſterns, and is vaſtly more convenient than the Method we make uſe of; for by the Help of theſe Canals, they water a large Garden in leſs Time than we with our Pots can water a ſingle Bed.

XXIII. Of their Averſion to every Thing that is repugnant to Decorum.

THEOPHRASTUS aſſures us in his Characters, that in Athens, which in his Time was the Center of all Politeneſs, ſome Men were ſo ſcrupulous, as not to paſs thro' a Place where they had ſeen a Bird of evil Augury, without firſt throwing three little Stones in the Way, or ſpitting in their Boſoms, in order to divert the ill Conſequences of the Omen.

WE meet with ſeveral People in India who are equally ſcrupulous. As I was one Day at Balaſſor, a Heathen Indian ſtopt ſhort on a ſudden, and look'd for three Stones, which having found, he threw them into a Place thro' which he was to paſs, and where he had ſeen a French Sailer in a very indecent, tho' neceſſary Poſture. They have a particular Averſion to any ſuch Spectacle, and whenever Nature obliges them to evacuate, they always endeavour to do it in the moſt private Manner poſſible.

Now I am mentioning the prodigious Averſion the Indians have to any Thing which claſhes ever ſo little with Decency, I ſhall compare one of their Cuſtoms with a Practice which an antient [a] Greek Poet has recommended in his Works. This Poet willing to inſpire his Countrymen the Greeks with every Thing that might promote Politeneſs in Society, adviſes them not to eaſe Nature in the Highways, nor in any Place whatſoever but in a decent Way, either ſtooping or againſt a Wall. The [a] Jews were full as delicate upon this Article. The Indians ſtoop ſo low on this Occaſion, that one would almoſt think they ſat down. They abhor thoſe who either eaſe Nature ſtanding, in Places expoſed to public View, or with their Faces turned towards the Sun.

XXIV. Of the Preſages they draw from the Noiſe of CROWS, &c.

THOUGH Crows are very common in India, the Heathens nevertheleſs look upon them as Birds of evil Augury, particularly the Banians, who are a particular Tribe, that exerciſe Traffic only, as was before obſerved. They would not undertake any Affair, tho' of the greateſt Conſequence, if they ſhould happen to find a Crow at the Door, at their going out in the Morning.

IT is thus the Antients, when any Crow had open'd his Throat at their Doors in the Morning, look'd on it as a very ill Omen. [b] Heſiod forbids the leaving of any Houſe unfiniſh'd, for fear leſt a Crow ſhould ſet in it, and make a Noiſe.

NOR are the Europeans wholly free from this ſuperſtitious Notion; and I myſelf have heard the ignorant People in France ſay, that when a Crow or Screech-Owl, on the Houſe-Top, was heard before Day, 'twas an infallible Sign that Somebody in it would die. We muſt aſcribe this ſuperſtitious Notion to the Inclination which the common People obſerve theſe Birds have naturally to dead Bodies and all kind of Filth. Add to this, their harſh and mournful Note, which alone is ſufficient to ſtrengthen this ſuperſtiticus Notion. Some affirm that theſe Animals, whenever a Perſon is very much out of Order, know it by the Smell; and as they naturally love Stench and Corruption, they always come as near as poſſible to thoſe whoſe Diſſolution approaches.

XXV. The Averſion which the Indians have to RATS, which nevertheleſs ſome of them feed upon.

THE Indians, as has been already obſerved, abſtain from eating certain Animals, out of a Veneration and Reſpect: But then there are others they never touch becauſe of the great Averſion they have to them, and their conſidering them as unclean. If ever they preſume to eat of them, they render themſelves liable to be ejected from their Tribe; not to mention that it brands them with Ignominy.

OF all Animals, Rats are their greateſt Averſion, tho' ſome eat them publickly; but theſe run no Riſque with regard to their Tribes, becauſe they cannot fall any lower than they are. Such are thoſe who carry the Sedans, and go by the Name of Boes.

[a] We are to take particular Notice of the following Words. Delebo de familia ejus omnem mingentem ad parietem; his verbis indicans mares, quibus ſublatis, & familia tollitur.

IT

IT is well known that this Animal was mortally hated by the Jews, and that they were forbid to eat it, as is manifeſt from Chap. xi. Verſ. 9. of Leviticus [a]. Nevertheleſs we meet with [b] Jews who have violated it, as appears from the laſt Chapter of Iſaiah, where that Prophet threatens all ſuch [c] Jews with divine Vengeance, as ſhould eat Swine, or Mouſe-Fleſh, and ſuch like Abominations. He adds, that they ſhould all be conſumed together.

XXVI. Of the Burials of the Indians.

THE Indians have no ſtated manner of burying their Dead, for ſome throw them into the Ganges, other bury, and others again burn them.

THOSE who inter them, always carry Rice, Fruits, and Flowers to their Graves for ſeveral Days together; which Cuſtom was alſo practiſed by the antient [d] Heathens, and had even crept into the Church for ſeveral Centuries together. This was one of the Reliques of Heatheniſm, for which St. Auguſtin reproached the Chriſtians in his Time.

BUT they take ſtrict Care, whether they bury or burn their Dead, to waſh them very clean firſt, and afterwards rub them with Oil. The Antients uſed to obſerve religiouſly this Cuſtom of waſhing their dead Bodies before they put them into the Graves, by which Means they knew infallibly whether the Perſon interr'd was really dead or in a Lethargy only; for had he ever ſo little Senſation left, the Water drew him out of it; particularly ſince the Water uſed on this Occaſion, was often boiling hot. The Cuſtom of waſhing dead Bodies before they are buried, is ſtill obſerved in ſeveral Parts of Europe; but then the Water is but luke-warm, and is intended only to clean the Corpſe.

THE Jews commonly waſhed their Dead, as we find it practiſed with regard to the Body of [e] Tabitha, which Cuſtom was alſo uſed by the Chriſtians. [f] St. Gregory of Tours relates, that St. Pelagia, in Conformity to this Cuſtom, was waſhed when ſhe was laid in a Coffin, and afterwards carried to Church.

THE Jews not only waſhed the Bodies of their Dead, but alſo embalm'd them and rubb'd them with aromatic Spices, in order to keep them as long as poſſible from rotting, particularly thoſe of their Princes. Thus Joſeph cauſed the Body of his Father Jacob to be embalm'd, as were afterwards the Bodies of the Kings of Iſrael and Judah. Some nevertheleſs were deprived of this Honour, as Jehoram King of Judah, who was buried in the Sepulchre of his Anceſtors, without being embalm'd, or having any of thoſe Honours paid to his Obſequies which are generally obſerved on thoſe Occaſions.

[a] Beſides the Argument which they believe in Favour of this Prohibition, viz. that thoſe Animals delight and feed on unclean Things, we may juſtly aſſert, that God forbid the Jews to eat them, becauſe they were uſed in the religious Myſteries of the Idolaters. Such was Swines Fleſh, &c.

[b] This indeed is true; but then they were Jewiſh Idolaters, who eat Rat's Fleſh from a religious Principle. Theſe Animals were uſed in Luſtrations.

[d] 'Twas a Cuſtom among the Greeks to offer Wine and Honey on the Graves of their Dead. Every deceaſed Perſon among the Athenians paid two Meaſures of Barley and the like Quantity of Wheat, as a Tribute to Minerva's Prieſteſs; not to mention a little Piece of Money which the Deceaſed held in his Mouth, to give to Charon for his Paſſage over the Styx.

[e] Act. ix. 37. Factum eſt autem in diebus illis, ut infirmata moreretur. Quam cum laviſſent, poſuerant eam in cœnaculo.

I BELIEVE this is the only Senſe that can be given to that Paſſage in the Chronicles, where it is ſaid, [a] they did not do the ſame with regard to him, as they had done to his Anceſtors. They were obliged to make the Body paſs through the Fire before they embalm'd it, and it was neceſſary that the ſeveral odoriferous Spices which were employ'd on that Occaſion, ſuch as Myrrh, Frankincenſe, Gum-arabic, Cedar, Water, ſhould be boiling hot, in order to make the Water peirce thro' the Pores of the Body; ſo that the anointing dead Bodies with theſe Drugs, and putting them into the Body, according to the uſual Cuſtom, was burning them.

THE Jews learnt this Cuſtom of embalming from the Egyptians; and thoſe Bodies ſo embalm'd are call'd Mummies. Several of theſe are to be ſeen in our Muſæums in Europe, one of the fineſt of which is in Leyden. It has all its Teeth; its Skin is black, and pretty much wrinkled; and 'tis wrapp'd up in Swathes which are fill'd with Gum: Its Arms are behind, like thoſe of a Child in Swaddling-Clothes. 'Tis very ſurpriſing how theſe aromatic Spices cou'd have preſerv'd theſe Bodies entire for perhaps near three thouſand Years.

HONEY has ſometimes been made uſe of in preſerving Bodies, and to prevent their rotting. Nicephorus [b] relates, that thoſe who accompanied St. Epiphanius, preſerv'd his Body in this Manner, when they were carrying it to Cyprus.

BUT to return to the Indians, they likewiſe have thoſe Perſons at their Burials, who in Scripture are called Tibicines Mortuorum. Theſe are Men who walk a little before the dead Body, [c] and ſound a long Trumpet, whoſe mournful Notes well ſuit this melancholy Ceremony.

BEFORE the Great Mogul had made himſelf Maſter of the Indies, when the Heathens were govern'd by their particular Princes, every Woman at the Death of her Husband, who was always burn'd, was bound in Duty to burn herſelf on the ſame Pile, and to hold the Corpſe upon her Knees; and thus the Fire conſumed the [d] Living with the Dead.

SHE was, I ſay, bound in duty to do it; for though ſhe was not abſolutely oblig'd to burn herſelf, and that the Parents of the Deceaſed had not a Right to force her to it, ſhe yet lay under a pretty great Reſtraint, ſince ſhe might expect to ſpend the remaining Part of her Life in the moſt miſerable Manner, in caſe ſhe refuſed to follow her Huſband; for ſhe became the Slave, as it were, of her late Husband's Relations, who always treated her in ſuch a cruel and contemptuous Manner, as was a thouſand Times more grievous than Death itſelf.

SHE nevertheleſs had one way left to eſcape Death, and at the ſame Time the ill Treatment of the Above-mentioned, which was to turn common Strumpet. For in this caſe her Husband's Relations had no manner of Authority over her, the Laws expreſly forbidding any Perſon to uſe thoſe Women ill.

IT is theſe Women who uſually go in Companies to ſing and dance at Weddings, at public Rejoicings, and in all Places where they may be ſent for. Theſe, ſo long as they have any Charms left, meet with a handſome Reception every where, though every one is acquainted with their Character; but no ſooner is their Beauty gone, than they fall into the moſt miſerable Circumſtances, and think it a great Happineſs when any of the young Fry condeſcend to keep them as Servants.

[c] This Cuſtom was alſo obſerv'd by the Greeks and Romans. May not that of ringing Bells for the Deceaſed, as it is practiſed in Roman Catholic Countries at this Time, be juſtly thought to have ſome Affinity to it?

[d] The Heathen Idolaters obſerve this Cuſtom in our Age, but leſs zealouſly than formerly.

[a] As it reflected a great Diſhonour on the Family of a Man whoſe Wife refuſed to be burnt along with him, they always did their utmoſt to perſuade her to it; to ſucceed the better, they always began to argue with her when her Grief was at the Height, and at a Time when ſhe ſeem'd moſt concern'd at the Death of her Husband. On theſe Occaſions they always expatiated upon the good Qualities of the Deceas'd, ſetting the Love and Tenderneſs he bore to her in the ſtrongeſt Colours poſſible. In a Word, they ſet every Engine at work to melt, if poſſible, the Heart of the afflicted Widow, and by that means they at laſt prevail'd with her to reſolve not to ſurvive her deceaſed Huſband. Whenever ſhe had conſented to it before three or four Perſons, ſhe was not allow'd to recede from her Engagement, no more than thoſe who had promiſed to be buried in the Ganges. But then ſhe had the Conſolation of being applauded to the Skies, was accompanied with Drums and Trumpets, had Garlands made her of all kinds of Flowers, and the Bramins promiſed her an Eternity of Bliſs. Such were the Artifices which they employ'd, in order to make thoſe Women ſubmit to this cruel Cuſtom.

SHE was led in a ceremonious Manner to the funeral Pile; while they were ſetting fire to it, the Drums and Trumpets made a prodigious Noiſe, in order to drown her dying Cries.

THE Ammonites had alſo the ſame Cuſtom in the Worſhip of the Idol [b] Moloch, when making it burning hot, they put a Child in its Arms, where it conſum'd in the Flames. The Noiſe which the Drums made, in order to drown the Groans of the dying Children, made them give the Name of Thophet, which in Hebrew ſignifies a Drum, to the Valley where thoſe abominable Sacrifices were perform'd.

BUT this horrid Cuſtom has been very much oppos'd ever ſince the Mahometan Religion has prevail'd in a great Part of India. They have even laid a great Tax on the Relations of all thoſe Women that ſhould be burnt; ſo that they don't burn them ſo much as they uſed to do formerly.

I HAVE endeavour'd to diſcover the Riſe of this cruel Cuſtom, but with no great Succeſs. All the Indians ſay, is, that Women uſed formerly to poiſon their Husbands upon the leaſt Subject of Diſcontent; for which Reaſon, the Men, in order not only to prevent Wives ſhortening their Husbands Days, but on the contrary, to engage them to do their utmoſt to prolong them, had made it very ignominious for any Woman to ſurvive her Husband; ſo that ſeeing themſelves either bound in honour to die with their Husbands, or be forc'd by Cuſtom to ſpend the reſt of their Days miſerably, they were oblig'd to exert themſelves for their Preſervation, whatever might be their Reſolution. Many a Woman who ſeem'd to be very careful of her Husband's Welfare, might in reality have herſelf only in view; and others, whoſe Tears might ſeem to flow for the Loſs of a dear Husband, might perhaps bewail themſelves only.

[a] The Reader will obſerve, that the Author always ſpeaks of this Cuſtom as though it were generally aboliſh'd; notwithſtanding which, 'tis only ſo in ſome Places.

[b] The Author might have found a better Example among the Antients, to put in parallel with that of theſe Indian Women. He here would have met with Women who ſacrificed themſelves in this Manner to the Manes of their Husbands, and would have read of Thracian Women in Herodotus, who eagerly ſtrove to be burnt with their Husbands.

THE

THE Inhabitants of Guinea have pretty near the ſame Cuſtom, where, when any great Man dies, they not only put his beſt-beloved Wives to Death, but alſo thoſe Servants whom he moſt eſteem'd, in order, ſay they, to keep him Company, and attend upon him in the other World. At that Rate there would be no great Pleaſure in being Miſtreſs to a Negro of Quality; and I am perſuaded, that were our Religion to admit ſuch a Cuſtom, our Nobles would find the Fair more cruel than they are; Celibacy would undoubtedly be infinitely more in vogue; nor would a wedded Life be much courted by the Maidens.

XXVII. Of their Friars, called FAQUIRS.

IT has been ſaid in all Ages that the Devil has his Martyrs, but there are as many of thoſe in India as in any Part of the World. We there ſee Faquirs, who are properly the Monks of this Country, that outdo whatever we read of the antient Anchorets, who ſpent their whole Lives in the moſt ſevere Penance and Mortification.

SEVERAL of theſe Faquirs make a Vow of continuing all their Life-Time in one Poſture, and keep it effectually. Others never lie down, or continue all their Lives in a ſtanding Poſture, ſupported only by a Stick or Rope under their Arm-Pits; and others again ſtand with their Arms always rais'd on high. There are ſome who endeavour to mortify and torture themſelves by Auſterities ſtill infinitely more rigid; theſe mangle their Bodies with Scourges or Knives. They look upon themſelves as no longer of this World, and as they fancy they have triumph'd over every Paſſion, and are in a State of Innocence, many of them either walk up and down, or diſcover their naked Bodies in public; not even concealing thoſe Parts which Modeſty would have hid.

THESE Faquirs are not the only Perſons who have pretended to have conquer'd their Paſſions, and all thoſe Impulſes which may be raiſed by the Sight of a naked Body. We had the Adamites, who ſprung from the Sect of the Carpocratians and Gnoſtics. Theſe, as [a] St. Auſtin informs us, uſed to aſſemble together naked, to hear Lectures, to read, pray, and receive the Communion. St. Epiphanius has been made to ſpeak a little too harſhly of theſe Heretics, and they have made uſe of his [b] Authority to prove, that they committed the moſt infamous Actions in theſe Aſſemblies, and that they abſolutely rejected the Uſe of Prayer. Nevertheleſs 'tis plain, that St. Auſtin ſays expreſly, as we before obſerv'd, that they uſed to pray; and St. Epiphanius himſelf [c] ſays, that they follow'd the Inſtitutions of the Monks, by obſerving Celibacy, and condemning Marriage; ſo that there is no Room to believe they would have committed all thoſe Crimes which are laid to their Charge in the Infancy of their Sect. But ſome Writers tell us, that they afterwards degenerated, and that their Nakedneſs, which they at firſt thought would infallibly reſtore them to the State of Innocence, and make them like Adam before his Fall, was afterwards the Occaſion of their giving into the moſt horrid Exceſſes and Irregularities, which indeed is probable enough.

THE common People are thoroughly perſuaded of the Virtue and Innocence of the Faquirs; but to convince them of it, they muſt appear wholly diſengag'd from all ſuch Things as flatter the Senſes, and lay aſide all Claim to the Things of this World. Moſt of them act their Part very well in public, but then they are accus'd of committing enormous Crimes in private; but perhaps all is not true that is related of them.

WE read in the firſt Book of Kings, the odd Manner in which the Prieſts of Baal uſed to honour their God; how they invok'd him, and endeavour'd to obtain ſome Favour from him, by ſlaſhing themſelves with Knives and Lancets. We are alſo told in [a] Scripture, that the above-mention'd, in order to draw down Fire from Heaven upon their Sacrifices, uſed to make their Bodies run down with Blood. The Auſterities and Mortifications of the Faquirs, may be put in [b] parallel with them. Some of theſe go ſtill farther, and make a Vow, to go and roll themſelves a certain Number of Leagues, over every Thing that comes in their Way, not ſtopping at Stones or Briars, ſo that they tear their Bodies to Pieces; notwithſtanding which, this manner of Mortification is pretty much uſed among the Indians.

THEY have alſo another kind of Faquirs, who don't practiſe ſuch ſevere Auſterities, or rather, who are not quite ſo extravagant: Theſe flock together in Companies, and go from one Village to another, propheſying Abundance, or threatening Barrenneſs, according to the good or bad Reception they meet with. They alſo pretend to tell Fortunes, to promiſe Children to ſuch as have none, and Husbands to all ſuch Virgins as are weary of being ſo any longer; but then they are wicked Villains, whom it would be dangerous for a Man to meet in any lone Place, unleſs he were able to defend himſelf; but notwithſtanding this, the Indian Idolaters have them in the utmoſt Veneration. The Moors have alſo their Faquirs, who, though as worthleſs Wretches as the above-mention'd, 'tis yet a capital Crime to beat them.

WE might in ſome meaſure compare the Manner in which the Faquirs publiſh their fanatical Viſions and their pretended Predictions, with that of the Prophets among the antient Jews, whom the Scripture calls, Filii Prophetarum, Grex, vel Chorus Prophetarum. Such were thoſe whom Saul met with, and in the midſt of whom he propheſied. [c] The Scripture tells us, that they employ'd Trumpets and Drums on theſe Occaſions, and that they always gave out their Prophecies to the Sound of theſe Inſtruments.

IT alſo relates, that when Jehoſhaphat, Jehoram, and the King of Edom, were aſſembled againſt Meſha King of Moab, their Army being reduced to the greateſt Extremity for want of Water, Jehoſhaphat ſent for Eliſha, in order to draw down the Aſſiſtance of Heaven by his Prayers, and that this Prophet demanded a Minſtrel before he conſulted the [d] Lord.

[c] MIGHT we not, in order to juſtify this extraordinary manner of conſulting God, and to explain it in a natural Way, take the Liberty of advancing, that the Mind is more

[b] If there are any Things among the Antients that may juſtly be compar'd to thoſe Puniſhments which the Faquirs inflict upon themſelves from a religious Motive, 'tis the voluntary Caſtration of the Prieſts of Atys and Cybele in honour of thoſe Gods; the devoting of one's ſelf to Death; the ſevere and rigid Life of certain Sects of Philoſophers, particularly the antient Gymnoſophiſts, whom theſe Faquirs reſemble very much; the Sprinkling which the Prieſts of Bellona uſed to perform in honour of that Goddeſs with their own Blood; the devout Scourgings which they oblig'd certain young Men in Lacedemonia to undergo, &c. But we meet with greater Inſtances of this among the Moderns; and not to mention the Capuchins and the Monks of La Trape, Saint Roſe will for ever be an aſtoniſhing Example of the Tortures which certain Devotees inflict upon their own Bodies.

[c] 'Tis impoſſible to produce any certain or ſatisfactory Arguments on that Head. 'Tis undoubtedly very ſurprizing to think, that Muſic ſhould call down the Spirit of God upon the Prophets. And might we not ſuppoſe, that the Aſſembly of Prophets, ſuch as thoſe among whom King Saul was, were not true Prophets, but a Set of People who ſung Hymns, and prais'd God to the Sounds of Inſtruments of Muſic, and that the Scripture might call this propheſying?

more apt to receive the Commands of the divine Being, and liſtens more attentively to his Voice, in theſe Seaſons when it has leſs Communication as it were with the Body; or when the Body is leſs capable of ſetting ſuch Objects before it, as may call off its Attention. All ſuch Things as had the Power of throwing the Senſes into a kind of Lethargy, or that took off their Attention from all thoſe Objects which were capable of diſturbing them, prepared the Minds of the Prophets for receiving the Spirit of God; and 'tis certain, that nothing was better adapted to that Purpoſe than Voices, Inſtruments, and all kinds of Muſic, whoſe Sounds ſuſpend, as it were, all the Faculties of the Soul, and raiſe it to Extaſy [a].

'TIS in this manner that the Indian Faquirs in queſtion, employ Drums, Trumpets, and other muſical Inſtruments, to rouze their Souls, and enable them the better to publiſh their pretended Prophecies, in an artificial or voluntary Extaſy. We always meet with one of theſe, who ſeems to be inſpired with a kind of Fury, the violent Agitations of whoſe Body correſpond with the ſudden and irregular Cadence of thoſe Inſtruments. No ſooner have they work'd themſelves out of Breath, but they pronounce certain Sentences, which the Heathens conſider as ſo many Oracles and Prophecies.

THE Jews were ſo much uſed to ſee their Prophets in theſe Extaſies, whenever they were going to pronounce their Prophecies, that they generally gave the [b] Name of Prophet to the Frantic, and uſed to cry out, when the Fit came upon them, that they propheſied. The Scripture uſes this very Expreſſion in a Paſſage where Saul is mention'd; for, in order to denote his becoming frantic, and that his Body writh'd in a Variety of violent Poſtures, it expreſſes it thus: [c] He propheſied.

WHETHER what we read in the Poets and in Lactantius concerning the Sybils, be really genuine, or only a Fiction, as ſeveral very learned Men have ſuppos'd, 'tis certain the Antients were of Opinion, that a Man, in order to his being fill'd with the Spirit of a God, muſt become frantic; muſt have his Hair ſtand erect; have a trembling in

But if we underſtand this Expreſſion, as ſignifying an inward Emotion, which diſpoſes the devout Soul to a more ſtrict Intimacy with its God; to converſe with him in deep Meditation, and by that means fit itſelf for the receiving the Gift of Inſpiration, 'tis certain that inſtrumental Muſic, when it accompanies the ſinging of Hymns, is capable of diſpoſing it for all theſe Things. The Buſineſs is to determine the Qualities of this Muſic, in order to its being lawful, juſt, and applicable to true Inſpiration. For 'tis very certain, that Muſic had the ſame Effect on the Minds of the Prieſts and Prophets of the antient Heathens, as it had on thoſe of the antient Jews; but 'tis this Difference that we are now ignorant of. Nor have we a better Idea of the Relation which might have been between Muſic and the Interceſſion of Eliſha. Was it that he ſtood in need of Muſic to raiſe his Soul to Prayer? was it that he requir'd vocal and inſtrumental, to keep his Senſes in a State of Extaſy, and fix his Soul on God only? or rather, was it not a Ceremony which had been inſtituted merely to fix the Attention of the Auditors? and was it not expedient for them to act thus on this Occaſion, ſince they were before an idolatrous and ſuperſtitious King of Iſrael, who, as he had been uſed to this Practice in the Worſhip of his Gods, would therefore probably have deſpiſed Eliſha's Prayers, had they not been accompanied with the ſame Ceremonies as were uſed in his Religion? But theſe are mere Conjectures; however, be this as it will, God has very often graciouſly condeſcended to adapt himſelf to theſe Prejudices, which the Splendor of ſuperſtitious Cuſtoms inſpire.

[a] Although Muſic acts immediately on the Organ of hearing only, nevertheleſs there is a ſtrong Relation between that and the other Senſes, from that very Relation which all the Senſes have with each other. Daily Experience ſhews, that when one of the Senſes is ſtrongly affected, all the reſt ſeem to ſuſpend their Functions. Thus, whenever we feel any acute Pain, not one ſingle Object ſtrikes the Eye diſtinctly, and our Ears are ſtruck with nothing but a confus'd Aſſemblage of Sounds. The ſame may be ſaid of the other Senſes.

[b] 'Tis true, indeed, that the Heathens gave the Name of Fury to the Enthuſiaſm of their Prophets. The Greek and Latin Poets expreſs Enthuſiaſm and Inſpiration by the Word Fury; but without quoting Paſſages to that Purpoſe, we ſhall only refer the Reader to Virgil's Sybil, in the 6th Book of the Æneis. Nevertheleſs, we defy the Author of this Diſſertation to prove, that either the inſpir'd Writers, or the heathen Poets, gave the Name of Prophets to furious or frantic Perſons. The Scripture indeed obſerves, that when the evil Spirit came upon Saul, he had all the Agitations of the Prophets, but ſtill does not ſay that he propheſied The Signification of the Word Prophet would be ſtrangely abus'd, were it to be apply'd to all Perſons in general, who ſhould be ſeiz'd with Madneſs; and we believe it would be impoſſible to quote one Inſtance where a Metaphor is more ſtrain'd than in this Place.

all his Limbs, and pronounce a Set of inarticulate Words. This, at leaſt, was the vulgar Opinion; which, indeed, can hardly excite our Wonder.

MEN who ſpend their Lives without any ſettled Principle, or the Aſſiſtance of any other Light but that of Nature, and their irregular Imaginations, are always in ſearch of ſuch Things as appea moſt wonderful, and have the higheſt Idea of whatever they don't underſtand. One would even imagine, that theſe People find a kind of Pleaſure in every Thing that fills them with Dread; in which they reſemble Children, who delight to hear ſurprizing or melancholy Stories; and who take a Pleaſure in hearing old Womens Tales of Hobgoblins and Witches, though they are frighted at the ſame Time.

MANKIND uſed formerly to ſwallow greedily all the Stories which their Prieſts told them, and to pay the higheſt Deference to the Predictions of their Soothſayers; but there were at that Time, as in our Days, ſome Perſons of good Senſe, who, ſo far from giving into thoſe Extravagancies, were, on the contrary, bold enough to laugh at them publicly. Among theſe was the Poet Ennius, who having occaſion to mention the Soothſayers and pretended Prophets of his Time, treats them very bluntly. [a] He does not ſcruple to call them ſuperſtitious, impudent, mad Men, and beggarly Wretches. He tells us, that they are not able to guide themſelves, though they pretend to point out the Way to others, and that at the ſame Time that they promiſe Riches, they beg a Drachma from the very ſame Perſons.

XXVIII. Of the Inchantment of the INDIANS.

WE are told in Exodus, that Pharaoh had Magicians at his Court, who had the Art of counterfeiting the Miracles which Moſes perform'd in Preſence of that Prince. But thoſe Prodigies are now no more, ſo that we muſt no longer expect to meet with any Thing like thoſe of the above-mention'd great Prophet. And if any one ſhould happen to ſee ſuch Miracles in our Days, our Opinion is, that ſuch Perſons would do well not to publiſh them to the World. The Truth is, Stories of this kind are very much ſuſpected, particularly if they come from far, and are not ſtamp'd with thoſe Characters which are inſeparable from true Miracles [b]. Nevertheleſs, as I am fully determin'd to take notice of the moſt minute Circumſtances wherein I could obſerve any Conformity between the Indians and the Antients, I hope the Reader will give me leave to make a few Reflections on their Conjurers.

THEIR Inchantments, or at leaſt ſuch as I have had any Knowledge of, have not very much in them, and extend no farther than in taking of Adders, and making them dance to the Muſic of a Flute. They have ſeveral kinds of Adders, which they keep in Baskets: Theſe they carry from Houſe to Houſe, and make them dance, whenever any Body will give them Money. When any of theſe Reptiles get into the Houſes or

Aut inertes, aut inſani, quibus egeſtas imperat;
Qui ſibi ſemitam non ſapiunt, aliis monſtrant viam,
Quibus divitias pollicentur, ab his drachmas ipſi petunt.

[b] 'Tis probable that the Reader may except thoſe Miracles which are regularly perfom'd every Year; ſuch as, for Inſtance, the liquifying Blood of St. Januarius of Naples, &c. and the perpetual Miracles, ſuch as the Candle of Arras, which has burnt continually, in honour of the Virgin Mary, for upwards of eight hundred Years, without being at all diminiſh'd; the holy Vial at Rheims, which never decreaſes in Quantity; the Periwig of the Crucifix of Colen, the Hair of which is never diminiſh'd, though the Devotees are continually plucking ſome of it away.

Gardens,

Gardens, they [a] get theſe Indians to drive them out: Theſe have the Art to bring them at their Feet by the Sound of their Flutes, and by ſinging certain Songs; after which they take them up by Handfuls, without receiving the leaſt Hurt; but they take great Care not to kill them; and whenever they drive them out of a Garden, they take them into the Country along with them, and there keep them, in order to make them dance upon Occaſion.

IT happened in a Place where I was, that an Indian ſeeing an Adder, which was hid in the Guard-Houſe, one of the Soldiers kill'd it; this threw the pretended Conjurer into a prodigious Conſternation, when taking it up immediately, he went and interr'd it with great Ceremony and Veneration; he put a little Rice and Milk into the Hole in which he had buried it, as it were to expiate the Injury which had been done to the whole Progeny of Adders.

THE Egyptians, the Phœnicians, the Greeks, and Romans, uſed antiently to worſhip the [b] Serpent. This Animal, when ſtamp'd on Money, and repreſented in Painting, was an Hieroglyphic of Health and good Fortune; when drawn with the Tail in its Mouth, 'twas an Emblem of Eternity, becauſe a Circle has neither Beginning nor Ending; and at the ſame Time an Emblem of the World, becauſe all Men are, by the Laws of Nature, obliged to return from whence they came. 'Tis probable that Moſes, in order to oblige the Jews to addreſs themſelves to God, and to expect from him Health and the Cure of their Diſeaſes, which they wanted, might therefore have ſet up the brazen Serpent, which in Egypt was the Hieroglyphic of both.

'TWOU'D be pretty difficult to aſſign any Reaſon for this almoſt univerſal Veneration, which ſo many People have had for Serpents, thoſe frightful and noxious Animals. 'Tis for this Reaſon that the Negroes of Guinea ſtill continue to ſacrifice to the Devil, to prevent his hurting them, and, if poſſible, to ſoften him by their Submiſſion and Reſpect. 'Tis probable alſo that this Worſhip might have been borrow'd from the Story of Adam, of Eve, and the Serpent, to whom Moſes gives a Voice in Geneſis, and which was known to other Nations. Whatever might have been the View, or in whatever Manner this Worſhip may have been eſtabliſh'd, 'tis certain that it became very general, there being ſcarce any Nation but what receiv'd it at one Time or other.

I HAVE heard ſome very ſurprizing Particulars concerning theſe Indian Conjurers; but as I gave but little Credit to what I myſelf was not an Eye-Witneſs of, I have not thought proper to be more diffuſive on the Article of thoſe Prodigies. I ſhall only add, that 'tis very probable ſuch kind of People were antiently the firſt, and the only En-

[a] They alſo aſcribe to themſelves the Power of charming Tygers and Alligators, or Crocodiles, and to prevent their hurting any Body. However, in ſpite of all theſe Charms, theſe Animals ſometimes devour People, and even in the ſacred River of Ganges. Mr. Fryar relates an Inſtance to this Purpoſe in his Voyages, and adds at the ſame Time, that the Bramins juſtified this Accident, by ſaying, that the Perſon who had been devour'd could not have expiated his Sins any other Way. The Truth is, that theſe Animals never ſeize upon any Body, unleſs they are hungry. As to Serpents, 'tis very probable they may be delighted with muſical Sounds, and that the whole Inchantment of the Bramins may center there. Baldeus, Author of the Deſcription of Coromandel in Dutch, relates, that he himſelf was an Eye-Witneſs to this Conjuration with Serpents. He adds, that when theſe Indians make any Perſon take an Oath, they oblige him to thruſt his Hand into a Pot, in which is a Serpent. If he takes it out unhurt, he is judg'd to have ſworn the Truth, but if it has been bit, he is look'd upon as forſworn. Let us not omit, that the Pſylli and the Theſſalians, &c. among the Antients, pretended alſo to enchant Serpents, and to handle them without receiving any Hurt.

[b] Eſculapius was worſhipp'd under that Shape at Epidaurus, and continued under it when he left that City to go to Rome. The Inhabitants of Meſopotamia uſed formerly to worſhip Serpents, undoubtedly in order to prevent their hurting them. But then on the other Side, Serpents did not ſhew the leaſt Complaiſance to ſuch Strangers as came to ſettle in the Country. The Genii were alſo worſhipp'd under the Shape of Serpents. We alſo aſcribe to theſe antient Practices, the Taliſmans, repreſented by Serpents.

chanters; and that the Hurt which the Serpents or other Creatures did them, might have given them Occaſion, and made them deſirous of ſearching out proper Means to deliver them from them. It has even been found, that Egypt, which abounded with Reptiles more than any other Country, was alſo the moſt fam'd for theſe ſort of Cuſtoms.

I SHALL not take upon me to determine, whether this might have been perform'd by the Aſſiſtance of the Devil, or merely by ſome Secrets of Nature; for in what Manner ſoever I might give my Opinion, I ſhould be ſure to meet with a great Number of Oppoſers.

ALL I ſhall obſerve, is, that the Name of Incantator, and that of [a] Epodos, which are ſynonimous Terms, and which the Antients gave to thoſe who perform'd ſurprizing Prodigies, pretty nearly juſtify the Suppoſition I made with regard to the firſt Inchanters; both of them ſignifying a Man who ſings on Something, or becauſe of Something, as the Indians do when they are deſirous of charming Adders, or about making them dance.

THE Jews, who lived many Years among the Egyptians, borrow'd from them the Impoſtures or juggling Tricks which are ſo often mention'd in Scripture; and whether they made uſe of them, or no, 'tis certain they were acquainted with them, and knew in what manner they were practis'd by other Nations; for [b] David compares the Fury of the Wicked to that of a Serpent; or to that of an Adder, which will not liſten to the Voice of the Charmer, charm he never ſo wiſely.

'TIS alſo certain, that ſome Perſons have in all Ages been fam'd for the Power they had over Reptiles, and that Writers have mention'd certain People who either drew Serpents to them, or kill'd them by the Power of their Song. Virgil, ſpeaking of the Virtues of Poeſy, (which was the ordinary Language of Soothſayers and Enchanters, whence it is that the Name of Vates is indifferently given to both,) tells us, that it has the Power of drawing down the Moon from Heaven; that Circe, by the ſinging of certain Verſes, chang'd the Companions of Ulyſſes into Swine; and that they, by the ſame Power, uſed to kill Adders in the [c] Meadows. [d] Ovid ſpeaks to the ſame Purpoſe in his Amorum. [e] Silius Italicus alſo relates the ſame Thing, ſpeaking of the Marmarides, a People of Africa, whoſe Power he admires, ſaying, that they by their Songs, had the Art of charming the Venom of the Serpent. In fine, all the Antients have agreed, that ſome People have perform'd very ſurprizing Things by the Help of certain Verſes or Words. According to [f] Ovid, ſome had even the Power to deſtroy the Harveſt, to dry up Springs, to make the Fruit fall from the Trees, and that only by repeating a few Verſes, or by ſinging certain Songs.

XXIX. Of the Bramins.

AS we have already taken notice of the antient Brachmans, we believe ourſelves indiſpenſably oblig'd to be a little more diffuſive on that Head, and to make ſome mention of the Succeſſors of thoſe Indians, ſo famous in Antiquity, whom People uſed antiently to go to hear, with at leaſt as much Eagerneſs as the Queen of Sheba went to hear the Wiſdom of Soiomon.

[a] St. JEROM writing to St. Paulinus, and telling him of thoſe learned Men, who from a Thirſt after Knowledge had travelled over ſeveral Countries, and gone to the Extremities of the Earth in ſearch of famous Perſons, to improve by their Wiſdom and Knowledge, relates, that the celebrated Apollonius went quite through the Country of the Scythians and Maſſagetes, croſs'd the renown'd River Piſon, which is the Ganges, and arriv'd at laſt among the Brachmans. 'Twas there the learned Hiarchas, ſitting on his golden Throne, inſtructed ſome choſen Diſciples in the Secrets of Nature, the Motions of the Stars, and the Revolution of Years.

As to the golden Throne, the Reader will give us leave to obſerve once more, that it is ſurprizing St. Jerom ſhould expatiate ſo much on the prodigious Quantity of Gold that is found about the Ganges, and towards the Coaſt of Coromandel; that Quintus Curtius ſhould relate much more of thoſe Countries which are water'd by the River Indus, and that there ſhould be ſo little in our Days, in compariſon of what was ſaid to be antiently; the greateſt Riches of the Indies, reckoning from the Ganges to the Perſian Gulph, conſiſting in the Diamond Mines of the Kingdom of Golconda. They have no Silver but what is brought by Foreigners, and the greateſt Part of their Gold comes from the Iſland of Sumatra, or even from China, Japan, &c.

BUT to trace Matters a little higher, with regard to Apollonius; we ſhall obſerve with ſome Authors, that he, after having paſs'd the River Indus, enter'd into the Country which was formerly govern'd by the famous Porus, whom Alexander the Great conquer'd, and that he went to the capital City call'd Taxilis, which ſome, though without any manner of Foundation, have taken for Cambaia, a City of Guzurat. This Kingdom was at that Time govern'd by Pharaates, a very affable Prince, and very dear to his Subjects; and indeed he relied entirely on their Fidelity and Love, ſo that he never had any Guards about his Perſon. He avoided that Pomp and Grandeur which are made inſeparable from a magnificent and numerous Train; and his Court, though a very pretty one, boaſted nothing more than a beautiful Simplicity. Near his Palace ſtood a ſplendid Temple, which was dedicated to the Sun, and 'twas this pompous Edifice that firſt ſtruck the Eye of the admiring Spectator. Every Thing there was in the utmoſt Order. A Foreigner would not have miſtaken the King's Palace for the Houſe of a God, nor a Temple for the Habitation of a Mortal; their Temples having all the Magnificence ſuitable to the Habitation of a God, and their Palaces all the Simplicity ſuitable to Creatures who live in a State of Dependance.

APOLLONIUS, after ſome Days Stay at the Court of King Pharaates, went towards the River Hyſpaſis, near which he found a Monument rais'd by Alexander the Great, on which the following Inſcription in the Greek Tongue was engrav'd.

[a] Why ſhould St Jerom have been quoted on this Occaſion, ſince he had better have cited Philoſtratus, who writ the Life of Apollonius Tyaneus, of whom mention is made in this Place.

He croſſed the River, and after having travell'd four Days, arrived at the City of the Wiſe-Men, where Hiarchas, of whom mention has been already made, preſided. He here converſed with the Bramins on the Tranſmigration of Souls, and afterwards on the Formation of the World.

THESE learned Indians admitted five Elements, to which, they ſaid, all Things owe their Original. The firſt Element, according to them, was a kind of æthereal Subſtance, but very thin and ſubtil. 'Tis of this, they pretend, thoſe Beings were formed, to whom they gave the Name of Gods and heavenly Genii. This Doctrine has a great Conformity to the Theology of the Chineſe Literati, if it be true, as ſeveral aſſure it is, that they are Atheiſts in their Hearts, and hold that the Soul, after Death, will diſſolve into an æthereal Subſtance. In a word, this, properly ſpeaking, would be the very Philoſophy of the celebrated Foe, whom we have already mentioned in the Chapter of the Tranſmigration of Souls. As to the four other Elements, they allowed them to be Fire, Air, Water, and Earth, and imagin'd that all corruptible Creatures were compoſed of the Mixtures of them all.

I SHALL not ſpend any Time in making random Reflections on the Etymology of the Name of the Brachmans, who are at this Day call'd Bramins. Some are for making them the Poſterity of Abraham; ſo that, according to theſe, Bramins, is as much as to ſay, Abrahamites. Neither ſhall I take any Notice of the three Magi or Wiſe-Men, who came from the Eaſt into Judea, to worſhip our Saviour, and whom ſome Writers [a] pretend to have been Brachmans. All theſe Conjectures are founded only on the Affinities between certain Words, or on ſome Reſemblance in the Manners, but are far from ſatisfying the Underſtanding. A Man who is deſirous of arguing juſtly, and of drawing ſuch Conſequences only as are true, is indiſpenſably obliged to lay down good Principles, and to employ more ſolid Proofs: So that, without examining whence the Bramins are deſcended, and what was their Original, I ſhall go no further than to compare the Bramins of antient Times with thoſe of our Days, at leaſt as far as I was able to dive into that Matter.

[a] THE modern Bramins have preſerved ſome noble Fragments of the Knowledge of the antient Brachmans. They are skilful Arithmeticians, and calculate the Eclipſes of the Sun and Moon as exactly as the beſt Mathematicians in Europe. They work the moſt difficult Queſtions in Arithmetic, without either Pen or Pencil, and that with a ſurpriſing Facility. They have moreover ſeveral Treatiſes of Morality, and ſome others containing the fabulous Hiſtories of their Gods. Their Study extends no farther than this; for as to Chronology they are utterly ignorant of it. Even an Age with them is of ſuch Antiquity, that 'tis impoſſible for them to trace it. All their Books which treat of paſt Ages, are only a Mixture of Stories relating to their Deities and antient Kings, in which there is not one fixed Æra. But to ſpeak the Truth, the Bramins of our Days imitate exactly the moſt learned Men of all Nations of Antiquity, who, unhappily for Hiſtory, neglected the Study of Chronology, not conſidering what Confuſion it would be to Poſterity.

THE Chaldeans applied themſelves wholly to the Study of the Stars, and the Interpretation of Dreams. The Overflowing of the Nile in Egypt firſt gave Riſe to Geometry. The Aſſyrians and Perſians ſtudied Nature, and her Secrets. The Greeks wrote but little at firſt, or only as Inclination dictated. They ſeldom wrote on any Subject but the amorous Intrigues of their Deities, the better to excite them to their Pleaſures. If we except ſome Pieces of Morality, or ſome Maxims or Perſuaſives to a virtuous and happy Life, (ſuch as Heſiod has given us, who yet treats in the greateſt Part of his Works, of the Genealogy of the Gods, which muſt conſequently be a confuſed Medly of all kinds of Fictions) nothing remarkable concerning thoſe antient Times has been tranſmitted to us, which yet are the beſt and the moſt authentic Pieces with regard to the Origin of Greece: Beſides, what little we have is wholly grounded upon Conjecture, which poſſibly might have been ſupported only by ſome antient Monuments.

WHEN Men, after the Revolution of ſeveral Ages, had begun to apply themſelves ſeriouſly to Hiſtory, they found it neceſſary for them either to omit a great many Particulars, or to invent and draw, as it were, a Series of Chronology out of their own Imaginations; there being almoſt as many Opinions with regard to the firſt Ages of the World, as there are Hiſtorians. Thus Poſterity would be at a great Loſs with reſpect to our Times, were all other Nations as negligent in this Caſe as the Indians are. The chief, or rather the only College the Bramins have, is at Banares, a City ſeated on the Ganges.

I HAVE already obſerv'd, that the Indians are very credulous with regard to their Taliſmans, and that they ſtudy very diligently the hidden Properties of the heavenly Bodies, of Figures and Numbers. The Bramins, who are ſtill conſidered as Men of great Learning and Experience, are the Depoſitaries of theſe pretended Myſteries, for the common People do not trouble their Heads about them. We are told that the antient Brachmans had great Skill in the occult Sciences; and indeed all ſuch as apply'd themſelves to the ſtudy of thoſe dark, and, as we may ſay, enigmatical Sciences, went to the In-

[a] To give the Reader an Idea of this Conformity, let us ſee what the Antients have written concerning the Brachmans. They tell us, that they firſt profeſs'd themſelves to be Followers of the Tenets and Inſtructions of Pythagoras. They were much addicted to Magic. They lay on the Ground, and lived only on Herbs. They worſhipp'd the Sun, and were very careful of keeping in thoſe Fires which were lighted with his Rays. They made a thouſand Prayers, and obſerved a thouſand Ceremonies to procure its Favour. They uſed to waſh themſelves in the clear Stream, &c. There is very little, or rather no Difference, between theſe Cuſtoms of the antient Brachmans and thoſe of the modern Bramins. The latter are as great Sticklers for the Tranſmigration of Souls; they are look'd upon as Inchanters, lie on the Ground, live only on Herbs; they waſh themſelves with the utmoſt Care, take Water and throw it up towards the Sun, as an Homage that is due to him. The antient Brachmans were divided into two Orders or Claſſes, one of which were the Brachmans, properly ſo call'd, and the other no Gymnoſophiſts. Such among the Bramins as have the greateſt Conformity to thoſe antient Gymnoſophiſts are the Janguis; a Sect who are but one Remove from Savages, and who, like the Gymnoſophiſts of old, obſerve a prodigious ſevere Diſcipline, and at the ſame Time are equally proud and hypocritical.

dies to learn of the Brachmans, and to dive into the Secrets of natural Magic in all their Purity, and in the whole Compaſs of them. Such, for inſtance, were the Combinations of certain Numbers, of certain Letters, and ſome odd groteſque Figures, by whoſe Aſſiſtance they imagin'd they ſhould be able to pry into Futurity.

IT is pretended that the [a] Cabala have borrow'd a great Part of their idle Fancies from the Philoſophy of Foe, of whom mention has been made in the Chapter of the Tranſmigration of Souls. We alſo meet in this Rhapſody of Rabbiniſm and Magic, Something that bears a great Affinity to the Doctrine of the Chineſe Literati, concerning Heaven and the ætherial Subſtance, into which, Foe ſaid, the Soul diſſolved itſelf after its Separation from the Body. The Notions which this Indian Philoſopher had form'd concerning the diſſolving of the Soul into Air, of whoſe Subſtance, according to him, they are a Part, are not more extraordinary than thoſe which the Members of the Cabala have of the Subſtance of which Heaven was made. They imagine that this Matter is animated, and that the Queen of Heaven, Regina Cæli, of whom mention is made in the forty fourth Chapter of the Prophet Jeremiah, is the Soul of the material Heaven which we ſee when we look upwards. It is alſo thought that the Cabala has borrow'd ſeveral Things from Plato's Philoſophy, which is only a Sequel of that of [b] Foe.

IF we were to form a Judgment of the pretended Magic and occult Knowledge of all the Indians in general, from that of an old Bramin, whom I have ſeen at Pondichery, I ſhould not have a very great Opinion of it. This Perſon, who was look'd upon as one of the moſt learned, and at the ſame Time one of the moſt formidable Men in the Country, becauſe of the great Miſchief which they ſaid he was able to do by his Art, came ſeveral Times to ſee me. He promiſed to ſhew me ſeveral ſurprizing Things, and to inſtruct me in ſome wonderful Secrets; telling me at the ſame Time, that he muſt kill a Cock for that Purpoſe, but that he was obliged to perform the Sacrifices privately. For, as I have elſewhere obſerved, they were forbid to offer bloody Sacrifices to their Gods. I was nevertheleſs firmly reſolved to ſtop him, in caſe I found him reſolved to have recourſe to Invocations, or had perceived that Nature no longer bore a Part in what he was going about. All I deſired, was to ſee how far he might rely upon his Art, and whether the Prelude to his Work might bear any Affinity to that of the antient Heathens. But he ſpared me that Trouble; for whether it were that he perceiv'd I did not give Credit to all that he told me concerning his Inchantments, or that he only had the Reputation of a very skilful Man without being ſo in Reality, I could never prevail with him to bring his Matters to a Concluſion, but always found him trumping up a thouſand Excuſes. For he ſometimes would ſay the Time was improper; at other Times he could not meet with a Cock for his Purpoſe, and ſuch an one as was proper for the Sacrifice. In a word, there was always ſome Remora in his way. Perhaps it was becauſe he would not debaſe his exalted Knowledge ſo far, as to communicate it to a profane Wretch, who was not initiated in the Myſteries of the Bramins. In fine, he went no farther, but contented himſelf with having made me thoſe great Promiſes, all which confirmed me in my firſt Opinion, and the Notion I had ever entertained with regard to thoſe idle Conceits.

[a] Cabala ſignifies a ſecret Expoſition of the divine Law given by the Mouth of God to Moſes, and by him reveal'd to the Jews. The ſecret Theology of the Scriptures, to which ſome Jews adhere. The myſtical Interpretation of the Words of the Scripture by a certain Calculation, and by the Tranſpoſition of Letters.

[b] We are not to call it a Sequel, it being impoſſible that Plato ſhould have borrow'd any Thing from Foe, who liv'd after him.

XXX. Of the Averſion the Indians have to WINE.

I Know not to what we can aſcribe the Averſion which the Indians have to all ſorts of Wine: We cannot ſay they borrowed it from the Mahometans, ſince it is not many Years ſince their Religion has prevail'd in the Indies; not to mention that it is manifeſt the Indians abſtain'd from Wine long before Mahomet, who did not begin to promulgate his Doctrine till the Beginning of the ſeventh Century.

WE dare not on this Occaſion trace ſo far backwards as the Deluge, or pretend to ſay that in thoſe early Ages, ſome Men being deſirous of imitating the Antediluvians, who for want of knowing the Uſe of Wine had never drank any, abſtain'd altogether from that Liquor: Probably the indecent Poſture into which it threw Noah, might be the Reaſon of their abſtaining from it; but this would be to ſuppoſe a Thing, for which we have no Manner of Authority; not to mention that this Hypotheſis would interfere with the Teſtimonies of ſome Authors we ſhall now cite.

I BELIEVE the moſt probable Reaſon that could be given on that Head, is the Virtue of ſome antient Brachmans. It is manifeſt that they had the ſtrongſt Averſion to every Thing that might any way contribute to the plunging them into Irregularities, or diſordering their Senſes. This it was that made them conſider that Liquor as very pernicious, which was capable of extinguiſhing a Man's Reaſon, that is to ſay, his moſt valuable Faculty [a]. In fine, they found themſelves obliged to inſpire the People whom they govern'd with theſe Sentiments.

THE Jews and Nazarenes abſtain'd alſo from Wine; not only thoſe who were born ſuch, as Samſon and St. John Baptiſt, but even all ſuch as made a Vow to follow the Laws of the Nazarites for a certain Term of Years, were oblig'd to abſtain from Wine, from every intoxicating Liquor, and from Grapes. It is thus we find it enjoin'd in the Book of [b] Numbers: We have likewiſe in Scripture the Example of the Rechabites, the Poſterity of Jonadab the Son of Rechab, who abſtained from all kinds of Wine. We know that the Mahometans do not drink this Liquor; but then as for Grapes, they make no Scruple of eating them.

WE cannot ſay that the Indians abſtain from Wine becauſe they have none to drink; for I am perſuaded they might have had it among them, ſince the Vines which the Europeans plant in thoſe Countries thrive well enough: I myſelf have eat very good Grapes there; and have been aſſured that there are a great many Vines about Golconda, which is not very far up in the Country.

THE Bramins drink a great Quantity of melted Butter, and I have even been aſſured that it makes them run into the moſt extravagant Exceſſes, and that this Butter gets up into their Heads, and fuddles them. This appears very extraordinary, and I ſhould have been glad to have ſeen an Experiment of it, had it been poſſible; but they take their Meaſures ſo artfully, and do every Thing with ſo much Secrecy, that it is impoſſible to come upon them at unawares.

[a] Theſe Cuſtoms owe their Original either to Uſe or Neceſſity: Wine and all ſtrong Liquors in general are pernicious in hot Countries, becauſe of their waſting the Spirits ſo much. Experience taught them that the abſtaining from theſe Liquors would be uſeful, and People of Judgment, ſuch as the antient Brachmans, &c. thought it would be neceſſary, in order to gain the Love of the People, and to make the greater Merit of their Abſtinence, to eſtabliſh it as an Article of their Religion, and to inculcate it as ſuch.

THE Romans had always the Uſe of Wine among them; but in the Infancy of the Republic Women were prohibited from drinking it, for fear, as [a] Valerius Maximus relates, of its prompting them to indulge in ſome Irregularity. They were ſo very exact and rigorous in the having this Law punctually obſerved, that Egnatius Mecenius being inform'd that his Wife had drank Wine, he kill'd her, and was not puniſhed for [b] it. This happened under the Reign of Romulus. Such a Severity was owing to the Jealouſy of Husbands, who thought that a Woman in Liquor is uncapable of defending her Heart, and reſiſting the Attacks of her Gallants; in which they were certainly in the right. Ovid, who had a perfect Taſte of Gallantry, knew very well that Wine is apt to inſpire Luſt; but he ſeems to preſcribe a Remedy againſt the Paſſions of Love, which is almoſt as pernicious as the Diſeaſe he pretends to cure; and that [c] is, drinking Wine to Exceſs.

THE Egyptian Prieſts continued a long Time without the uſe of Wine; and as their Kings were Prieſts, they were obliged to obſerve the ſame Abſtinence. It has been obſerved that Pſammetichus was the firſt Egyptian King that ever drank any, which was about 640 Years before Chriſt, in which he probably might have imitated the Syrians, among whom he had taken Refuge, at the Time that Sabachus King of Ethiopia entered Egypt. But notwithſtanding this Liquor was drunk under his Reign, and that of his Succeſſors, they nevertheleſs drank it but moderately, and they had even Laws which ſettled the Quantity of Wine their Kings and Prieſts were to drink. The Egyptians not only abſtained from Wine before the Reign of this Prince, but they did not even dare to preſent any in the Sacrifices of the Gods, as was the Cuſtom in ſeveral other Nations; becauſe the above-mentioned People imagined that this Liquor was hated by the Gods, and that it owed its Original to the Blood of thoſe wicked Men, who had formerly rebelled againſt Heaven. This is quoted from Plutarch, who himſelf had borrow'd it from Hecataeus: The Verſion of the Latin Tranſlator may be ſeen in the following Note. [d]

I HAVE already ſaid that it is certain the Indians do not drink Wine, and that the Bramins eſpecially have the utmoſt Averſion to that Liquor. Notwithſtanding which, I have read the very reverſe in [e] Athenæus, who tells us from Chares Mitylenæus, that the Indians were great Drinkers: It is upon occaſion of a Drinking-Match, which Alexander eſtabliſhed among the Indians after the Death of Calanus, one of the wiſe Men of the City of Taxilis or Taxala, who followed that Prince into Perſia, where he burnt himſelf in public, and with great Pomp, purely to free himſelf from the Inconveniencies of old Age, which was beginning to ſteal upon him.

WE do not meet with the Story of Calanus in Quintus Curtius; it is only in the [f] Supplement to it; but there is no mention made of thoſe famous Drinkers, nor of the Prize which Alexander gave to the Victor, which I very much wonder at. Such an Incident was remarkable enough to merit a Place among a numberleſs Multitude of other Circumſtances, which that Author relates of his Hero, and which are not half ſo ſurpriſing as that juſt mentioned: He nevertheleſs tells us in one Place, that all the Indians had a great Love for Wine, and that they [a] drank vaſt Quantities of it; this is where he ſpeaks of thoſe Concubines, who uſed to fill the Wine to the Indian King, and always carried him to Bed after he had drank heartily. I am alſo ſurpriſed that Arrian, who has given us a pretty long Detail of the Death of Calanus, does not mention a Word of that celebrated Drinking-Bout, when the Conqueror drank four Congii of Wine, which makes one hundred ninety-two Pints; and indeed he died a few Days after his Victory.

I MUST own I do not know how to reconcile theſe two Paſſages of Quintus Curtius and Athenæus with the way of Life which the modern Indians lead. If that of Quintus Curtius was in leſs general Terms, we might alledge, that ſome of thoſe who bord'er upon Perſia were given to drinking Wine, for the Perſians were great Drinkers; but this Author tells us expreſly, that all the Indians in general were addicted to that Vice —— Vinum —— cujus omnibus Indis largus eſt uſus, as I have juſt now obſerved. This ſurpriſes me ſo much the more, as they even at that Time followed the Maxims of the celebrated Foe, which prevail among them to this Day; and that the Brachmans, who govern'd them at that Time, were look'd upon as the moſt virtuous, as well as the moſt learned Men upon Earth. I therefore cannot poſſibly comprehend how they could give a Sanction to ſuch Irregularities: What made Alexander kill ſo many Men with Drinking, and that too in order to celebrate the Funeral Obſequies of ſo virtuous and abſtemious a Man as Calanus is repreſented? What made that Monarch employ Fools, in the Honours which he paid to the Memory of ſo wiſe a Man? The Inference that might be drawn from what has been obſerved, is, that if thoſe People were really antiently what thoſe two Authors have repreſented them to be, they muſt be greatly changed ſince that Time; ſince from great Drinkers they are become very ſober Men, and have Wine in the utmoſt Abhorrence.

THE Reader may probably ask when that Change happen'd, for ſo remarkable an Æra would very well merit Obſervation; but this I believe is a Queſtion that no Body could anſwer, becauſe the Averſion which the Indians have for Wine ſeems to be innate as it were; and that, as has been already obſerved, one can ſcarce think it could ever have been poſſible for them to live in a different Manner from what they do now. Beſides, if ſuch a Change did really ever happen, it muſt abſolutely have been introduced by ſome famous Legiſlator, who reigned over all India with a deſpotic Sway. We do not hear of one ſingle Perſon of that Character in the Indies, ever ſince the Time of Alexander the Great: But I am ſenſible, that at the ſame Time I am alledging theſe Reaſons, in order to inſinuate that the Indians were never great Drinkers, or at leaſt to ſtart Difficulties againſt this Opinion, I expoſe myſelf to being reproached with having publickly oppoſed the Teſtimony of Chares of Mitylene, and that of Quintus Curtius. I muſt confeſs that I can ſcarce give Credit to all the Particulars they relate concerning the Indians, and if I do not wholly reject every Thing they have advanced upon that Head, I cannot at leaſt forbear ſaying, that my Opinion is, that the Paſſage in Quintus Curtius is writ in too general Terms, and that the Vice with which he reproaches them, was confined only to certain particular Parts of India, which, as I juſt now obſerved, might probably have been thoſe that lay contiguous to Perſia. We are even to obſerve, that all the Time Alexander continued in the Indies, he removed but at a very little Diſtance from the Rivers of Indus and Hydaſpis; and that conſequently he might, without any great Difficulty, have procured the Wines of Per- ſia; and among the reſt, that of Shyras, which is not far from that Country: This Wine is famous all over India, and is that which is moſt commonly drank there. They freight a great Number of Veſſels with this Liquor, and carry it to all thoſe Places where the Europeans are ſettled.

XXXI. Of their Traffic and Inſincerity.

THE Indians apply themſelves very much to Traffic, in which they ſucceed tolerably well; but a Man muſt be upon his guard when he has any Dealings with them, for they never fail to over-reach, whenever they meet with an Opportunity for ſo doing. How unreaſonable ſoever they may be in their Bargaining for any Thing, and tho' they ask double the Value of a Thing, they yet do it with ſo much Coolneſs and Gravity, as often puzzles an European. 'Twould be to no Purpoſe to be angry with them, for they never fail to anſwer only in the moſt obliging Terms; and while the Buyer is railing at them, they liſten with the utmoſt Patience and Attention, and do not let drop one diſobliging Word. On the other Side, was a Man to offer them but a Teſter for a Thing that was worth ten Piſtoles, they would not be at all diſobliged at it, nor would make any angry Comment on the unreaſonable Offer that had been made them. But they are always ſure to get their Ends; they chuſe rather to deal with haſty People, than with ſuch as have a great deal of Phlegm; for theſe they ſay they cannot ſo eaſily bring into their Meaſures as the former, in which they are certainly in the Right.

THEY are alſo great Uſurers, particularly when they have to do with Foreigners: Perhaps this might have been one of the Articles of their Religion, or at leaſt a Thing that was lawful, which ſeems to have been formerly the caſe among the [a] Jews. Be that as it will, it is certain the [b] Indians have carried it to as great an Exceſs as ever the Jews did.

XXXII. The Idea the Indians have of the Arts, and the Knowledge the Antients had of Silk.

THE Indians eſteem the ſeveral Arts in proportion to their immediate Uſefulneſs in common Life; ſo that among them, the Profeſſion of a [c] Ploughman, and that of a Shepherd, are placed in the firſt Rank, while that of Goldſmith is look'd upon as the meaneſt and moſt contemptible of all Arts.

THEY have very little Notion of Sculpture and Deſigning, but their Skill in manufacturing Silks and Cottons is known to all, and they have been renowned for many Ages for their Skill in theſe Works.

[a] Deuter. xxiii. 19, 20. Non fœnerabis fratri tuo ad uſuram pecuniam, nec fruges, nec quamlibet aliam rem; ſed alieno. Fratri autem tuo, abſque uſurâ id quo indiget commodabis. But we are not therefore to imagine from thence, that God gives a Sanction to the taking of exorbitant Intereſt.

[b] See the Travels of Tavernier, Chardin, Bernier, &c. upon this Article.

[c] In this they agree with the Idea our Forefathers had of Husbandry, which juſtly deſerves to be conſidered as ſuperior to ſuch Arts as are leſs neceſſary to the World.

[a] FATHER Petau relates, after ſeveral other Authors, that about the twenty-fifth Year of Juſtinian, that is about Anno Domini 552. certain Monks brought ſome Silk-Worms Eggs from the Indies to Conſtantinople, and taught the Manner of manufacturing it.

THIS learned Chronologer, and all thoſe Writers who have mentioned the ſame Circumſtance, means no more by it than this, viz. That no Silk had been made in the Empire of the Eaſt till Juſtinian's Time, but not that it was not uſed there till that Period; for it was known in theſe Parts long before the Reign of that Emperor.

As for inſtance, [b] Ezekiel, when he is deploring the miſerable State to which the famous City of Tyre ſhould be reduced, after having related ever Circumſtance which contributed to its Grandeur, adds, that it traded with the Syrians, and that among other Things it drew Silk from their Country. The Syrians might eaſily have got this Commodity from India, by going down into the Gulph of Balſora by the River Euphrates.

THE Perſians uſed antiently to wear Silk, which among them was a Token of Dignity. We are not to omit, that among the ſeveral Honours which Ahaſuerus paid [c] Mordecai, that of giving him a ſilken Garment was one.

WE are therefore not to imagine that the Diſtance which lay between the Nations bordering on Paleſtine and the Indies, prevented their trading with each other. The Author of the Book of Job was not ignorant of the Manner of working in painted Callicoes, and generally in all kinds of Dyes in India: For when he is for ſhewing that Wiſdom is ſuperior to all worldly Poſſeſſions, how valuable ſoever they may be, he goes on with ſaying, that the [d] Indian Dyes are not to be compared to it. It may perhaps be objected, that what the Antients call'd Sericum is not the ſame with our Silk; and conſequently, that the Monks who return'd from the Indies to Conſtantinople, not only taught the Manner of manufacturing it, but were alſo the firſt who brought any from thence; and that before their Time, there was not any Silk uſed like that of the Moderns. Several Authors are likewiſe of this Opinion, and pretend that there was a great Difference between the Sericum of the [e] Antients and the Silk of our Days: But I do not find that their Opinion is ſupported by any ſolid Reaſon, ſince it is founded only on what ſome have told us concerning the Manner in which Sericum was formerly made, which has no manner of Affinity with the modern Manner of drawing Silk: So that in my Opinion, this does no way prove their being different from one another. It is highly probable, that the Jews, the Greeks, and the Romans, had the ſame Silk that is uſed in our Days, and that the Reaſon of their aſcribing it to another Original, was owing to their Ignorance of the way of manufacturing it, and whence it came; they living at ſo great a Diſtance from the Place where it was wrought.

[d] Job. xxviii. 16. Non conferetur tinctis Indiæ coloribus, according to the vulgar Tranſlation of the Bible, but it is in the Original fine Gold of Ophir.

[e] It is certain, that Silk was known to the Antients ſeveral Centuries before Juſtinian; but as Men had not the Art of making their Advantage of the Labours of the Silk-Worm, it was much ſcarcer at that Time than it became afterwards, and particularly within theſe 250 Years. As for inſtance, all the modern Manufactures of Silk Stuffs were entirely unknown to the Greeks and Romans. They however had Stuffs made of Silk and Wool, tho' we do not meet with any Thing among them that anſwers truly to our Damask, which originally came from Damaſcus; to our ſlorn or bare Cloth without Wool, which came firſt from Morocco; to the Armuſins, that came from Ormuz, &c. Be that as it will, it is plain that Silk was known formerly, from ſeveral Paſſages in the Antients; and the only Conſequence that can be drawn from what may be ſaid to the contrary, is, that it was very ſcarce and extremely dear in thoſe Ages.

SE-

SEVERAL, for inſtance, fancied that it was taken from the Bark of a Tree, after which it was comb'd and ſpun, as we find in [a] Strabo and [b] Pauſanias. Pliny and ſeveral other antient Writers relate, that it was made of a kind of Wool, which came from the Trees in India. This at firſt ſeems to have been advanc'd at random, and without the leaſt Probability; however, if we will but give ourſelves the Trouble to ſearch into the Bottom of it, we ſhall perhaps find that Pliny and thoſe who followed his Opinion, have not been quite ſo miſtaken as People have imagin'd, or at leaſt that they did not advance their Aſſertions without ſome Foundation. 'Tis very probable, that before Mankind underſtood the Method of feeding Silk-Worms, and of making them work, there might be great Numbers of them in the Woods; that they made choice of thoſe Trees whoſe Leaves were moſt tender, and ſpun their Silk round the little Branches, as the Caterpillars (which are very like Silk-Worms) do in our Days. Men finding theſe little Knots or Cluſters of Worms, which were almoſt in the Shape of a Bean, upon Trees; imagin'd that thoſe kind of Trees produc'd both of them naturally, and that this was the only Original of theſe Bottoms. This Opinion, though a falſe one, had at leaſt ſome Foundation, and is much more feaſible than that which aſcribes the Origin of Silk to the Barks of Trees.

[c] OVID ſpeaks in his Metamorphoſes of certain Worms that uſed to work Threads about the Branches of Trees, which afterwards were chang'd into Butterflies.

THE Poet may poſſibly mean Caterpillars, which weave a kind of Silk, and are afterwards chang'd into Butterflies. Probably alſo he might ſpeak of Silk-Worms, which in thoſe Days uſed to be diſpers'd up and down the Woods, as the Caterpillars at this Day. The Reaſon which we may aſſign for their not taking any Care of them, was becauſe they were not of any manner of Uſe. It may be objected, that the Threads mention'd by Ovid were white, Canis Filis, which does not ſeem to agree with the Silk which our Silk-Worms generally produce, it being generally yellow; but I believe we might anſwer, that the Dew, and the open Air in which they lived, might have given them that Colour. However, I would not inſiſt upon this as Fact, and propoſe it only as a Conjecture.

MOST Authors are agreed upon the Etymology of the Word Sericum, which they derive from a People call'd [d] Seres; but as ſeveral Nations have been call'd by that Name, it would be a very difficult Matter to know exactly from which of all thoſe Silk might have borrow'd its Name.

THERE was a Nation which inhabited the higher Ethiopia, towards the Source of the Nile, who were call'd [e] Seres. Another inhabited thoſe Parts that lie between the Ganges, Hydaſpes, and Indus, which at this Time make a Part of the Dominions of the Great Mogul, and Part of thoſe of the Sophi of Perſia. In fine, the third People of this Name liv'd to the North of China, and their [f] Country had the eaſtern Ocean to the Eaſt, and Scythia to the Weſt. Their Country compoſes the Kingdoms of Tanguth and Niuche, which are a Part of great Tartary. The Name of the capital City was Iſſedon-Serica, which many believe to be ſame with that which in our Days is call'd [g] Suchur.

[d] The Chineſe are thought to have been the Seres, which Opinion is not altogether without ſome Foundation. The Empire of China produces a prodigious Quantity of Silk, and 'tis manifeſt from the Annals of China, that it was wrought there eight hundred Years before our Saviour.

[g] 'Tis a City in the Province of Tanguth.

IF we were abſolutely reſolv'd to ſearch for the Etymology of the Word Sericum in the Name of one of thoſe three Nations, I believe the ſureſt Way would be to take it from that which lay between the Ganges, the Hydaſpes, and the Indus; as that Country is very fruitful in Silk, and that a Trade might have been eaſily carried on between that Country and Paleſtine, by the Perſian Gulph and the Euphrates. But without going ſo far for an Etymology, I am of opinion, that we may juſtly deduce the Word Sericum from the Syrians, who, as was juſt before obſerv'd, traded for Silk with the Merchants of the City of Tyre, which they afterwards ſpread over all Paleſtine. Be that as it will, moſt of the Eaſtern Nations have agreed in the Name which they have given to Silk. The Hebrews call'd it Sericot, the Syrians Seriaca, the Greeks call'd a ſilk Suit of Clothes Sericos. Some Authors have pretended that the Word Sericos came from the Arabic Sarac, which ſignifies, to be ſhining.

XXXIII. The Indian Manner of Writing, and the Subſtance they uſe inſtead of Paper.

THE Indians write upon the Leaf of a Tree, which is call'd Latanier. 'Tis a kind of Palm-Tree, the Leaves of which are not ſo long as thoſe of the common Palm-Tree, but are very thick and ſtrong. They write with a Bodkin. Some, as ſoon as they have form'd the Letters, black the Leaf all over, and thus fill up the Letters; but the greateſt Part go no further than tracing out the Letters as above. Theſe Leaves require no great Preparation; they have no more to do than to dry them, and to ſeparate them from one another, they being made like a Fan. When thoroughly dry'd, they are of a ſtraw Colour, but Time gives them a very brown Hue.

THE Antients have mention'd thoſe Leaves which the Indians made uſe of for Writing, and call'd the Tree that bears them Talos. 'Tis probable they had miſtaken the Word Talos for Latos, and there is no great Difference between Latos and Latanier. 'Tis true indeed, that this Word has not an Indian Termination, but as it was brought from far, we may ſuppoſe that they thought proper to dreſs it after the Greek Mode, and make it end in os. Perhaps alſo, that the Greeks, to whom it was known, gave it ſuch a Termination as was adapted to the Genius of their Language. Nevertheleſs, 'tis plain from the Deſcription they have given of that Tree, that they were not at all acquainted with it; for they tell us, that its Leaves were ſix Cubits long, in which they were greatly miſtaken; for the Leaves of the Latanier are ſeldom two Cubits long. But 'tis very probable that they may have taken the Bananier for the Latanier. The Leaves of the former are often ten, nay even twelve Foot long, but then they are ſo thin, that the ſmalleſt Puff of Wind tears them to Pieces, ſo that it would be impoſſible to write upon them.

WE may naturally ſuppoſe, that Writing in its Infancy was not ſo common as it became afterwards; and indeed it was not employ'd in every trifling Particular, but only in ſuch Works as deſerv'd to be tranſmitted to lateſt Poſterity.

WRITING was therefore ſeldom uſed, and whenever it was employ'd, 'twas for [a] Ages. We may reaſonably ſuppoſe, that Stones were firſt uſed for tranſmitting Events to future Ages. We are told that Enoch engrav'd the Story of the Creation of the Univerſe upon two Obelisks. The firſt and ſecond Tables, on which the Commandments of the Law were writ, and which God gave to his People by the Hand of Moſes, were of the ſame Matter. Joſhua, after having taken the City of Ai, [a] writ all Deuteronomy and a Copy of the Law round a ſtone Altar, which he built to the Lord. We are not to wonder that he writ all Deuteronomy in ſo ſmall a Compaſs. 'Tis well known that it contains thirty four long Chapters, and as the Stones were not ſmooth, no iron Tool having been upon them; the Letters muſt neceſſarily have been larger than they would otherwiſe have been; but then we are to conſider, that they commonly made uſe of Abbreviations in their Writing, even generally in [b] Hieroglyphics. 'Tis in this manner that all Homer's Iliads were written on a Serpent's Skin, and that all the Acts of the Martyrs have been collected, and [c] even their laſt Words written. By the Help of theſe Abbreviations, Men uſed to write ſurprizingly faſt. Auſonius relates, that ſome Men writ faſter than any one could ſpeak, and uſed to write down whatever was dictated to them, before the Words were quite out of the Speaker's Mouth. Martial had told us the ſame Thing [d].

IN Proceſs of Time Men uſed to write upon Metal, and [e] Job cried out in his Afflictions, Oh that my Words —— were graven with an iron Pen and Lead, in the Lead for ever. When Judas Machabæus ſent an Ambaſſador to the Romans, the offenſive and defenſive League which that People made with the Jews, was engrav'd [f] on Tables of Braſs, and ſent to Jeruſalem. When thoſe of Sparta heard that Jonathan was dead, and that his Brother Simon had ſucceeded him in the Dignity of High-Prieſt and Governor of Judea, they alſo wrote to him on [g] brazen Tables. In fine, all Treaties, Leagues, and all public Records, were generally writ on this Metal.

THEY alſo made uſe of Tables of Wood on theſe Occaſions. Some of theſe were cover'd with Wax, but they generally uſed to write only on the Wood. They ſometimes uſed Tables made of the Cedar-Tree for that Purpoſe, which therefore were very durable. Sometimes they would take any kind of Wood, and only rub it over with a certain Water that runs from the Cedar, which preſerv'd it from Worms. [h] Pliny relates, that the Egyptians uſed to employ this Cedar-Water in order to preſerve Bodies from Putrefaction.

THE Arabians uſed antiently to write upon the Shoulder-Bones of Sheep and Camels, ſeveral of which tied together made up a Book; whence we may naturally ſuppoſe, that they did not write much, ſince a great Number of thoſe Bones muſt go to the making up of a Volume of an indifferent Size. But this Nation was not look'd upon as learned, at the Time of the firſt eſtabliſhing of Mahometaniſm, and a long Time before. [i] Pocock relates, that Ottoman, and the firſt Followers of Mahomet, employ'd the Shoulder-Bones of Sheep and Camels, for writing down the idle Conceits of their falſe Prophet. This gives us an Idea of their Ruſticity, which continued till they began to carry on a Correſpondence with the Inhabitants of Medina, who were a much more polite People than the Inhabitants of Mecca, the laſt of whom are now hinted at.

[b] There is no doubt but that the Jews borrow'd the Hieroglyphics from the Egyptians, ſince the latter inſtructed them in ſeveral other Cuſtoms, both civil and religious; but without having Recourſe to Hieroglyphics, the Altar might be large enough to contain the whole Book of Deuteronomy. We have ſeen the whole Goſpel of St. John writ ſo very ſmall, as to be contain'd in a Nut-Shell, &c.

THE Egyptians invented Papyrus, which was a kind of Ruſh, whoſe Skin they uſed to take off, and make very ſtiff with Gum, after having beat it very well. All Nations uſed to fetch this Papyrus from Egypt. From this Period the Number of Books increas'd very much, as this Plant did not require ſo much Preparation, and lay in a much ſmaller Compaſs than the Tables which were before uſed for writing. But afterwards the Egyptians, growing jealous of the great Number of Books which Foreigners made, and vex'd to find that they were as great Maſters in that Art as they themſelves, forbid the exporting of Papyrus out of Egypt. This Prohibition gave occaſion to the Inhabitants of Pergamus to prepare Sheep-Skins, with which they made what is now call'd Parchment, and call'd it Charta Pergamena upon that Account. However, [a] Herodotus pretends, that the Ionians had invented it long before thoſe of Pergamus.

'TWOULD be almoſt impoſſible to ſay expreſly who firſt invented Letters, and the Manner of expreſſing one's Thoughts by Characters; for we meet with nothing certain on that Head. The Phœnicians flatter'd themſelves with having been the Inventors of it, and [b] Lucan tells us in his Pharſalia, that this was the moſt receiv'd Opinion.

BUT if it were true, as has been already ſaid, that Enoch writ the Hiſtory of the Creation of the World on two Pillars, it might be alledg'd, that the Phœnicians were not the firſt Inventors of Writing. However, they might nevertheleſs have firſt invented Letters, though Men might have rais'd Monuments before their Time, and have engrav'd ſeveral memorable Incidents on Stone or Metal. This might have been done by [c] Hieroglyphics inſtead of Letters, which of themſelves have no manner of Relation with the Thing they repreſent. Such were in After-Ages the Letters which the Phœnicians employ'd, and which are uſed by us at this Day. Thus Mankind in the Infancy of the World found out the Art of expreſſing their Thoughts by Hieroglyphics, and the Phœnicians by Letters, which, though they took up more Space than [d] Hieroglyphics, they yet were made with leſs Difficulty, and expreſs'd a Thought in a much clearer Manner; for 'tis well known that Hieroglyphics were compos'd of the Figures of

C'eſt de lui que nous vient cet art ingenieux,
De peindre la parole & de parler aux yeux,
Et par les traits divers de figures tracées

In Engliſh thus:

Hence did the wondrous myſtic Art ariſe,
Of painting Speech, and ſpeaking to the Eyes.
Thus we by wondrous magic Lines are taught,
How both to colour and embody Thought.

[c] It may alſo have happen'd, that our Forefathers had at firſt neither Hieroglyphics nor Letters; and that the only Thing they might make uſe of for the tranſmitting of Tranſactions to Poſterity, might be Tradition, the Knots of the Americans, and other Inventions of the like Nature. That afterwards finding thoſe to be but imperfect Helps, they might have invented Hieroglyphics, which were uſed by ſeveral Eaſtern Nations, by the Mexicans, and even by the Inhabitants of Canada, if La Hontan is to be credited, who calls them the Coats of Arms of the Savages. This Writer has hit upon the true Name of the Hieroglyphics, which bore, in ſome meaſure, an Affinity with the Coats of Arms of the Moderns, but with this Difference, that thoſe Nations who made uſe of Hieroglyphics, were oblig'd to it from Neceſſity, or perhaps in order to expreſs any Thing with greater Force and Energy, whereas we only uſe them out of Vanity.

[d] An Hieroglyphic might have ſupplied the Place of a great Number of Terms, but then the Thought would have been obſcure and enigmatical. 'Twou'd have been a very difficult Matter to have carried Arts and Sciences to any great Height, by the Aſſiſtance only of ſuch weak Helps.

Plants and Animals, ſo that no one in that Caſe could be ſaid to write well, but who had a pretty good Hand at [a] Drawing.

WHEN Men began to uſe Writing inſtead of Hieroglyphics, the laſt were wholly confin'd to Seals and Coats of Arms; and though [b] Clemens Alexandrinus advis'd the Chriſtians of his Time to make uſe of ſuch Figures for their Emblem as bore ſome Affinity to Chriſtianity, he yet ſuffer'd them to make uſe of ſeveral others which the Heathens employ'd.

THE Greeks alſo maintain, but without any manner of Foundation, that they firſt invented Writing. 'Tis univerſally agreed, that Cadmus brought it out of Phœnicia into Greece. 'Tis true indeed that the Greeks invented Characters which were different from thoſe of the Phœnicians, but then it was not till many Ages after they had borrow'd thoſe of the People above-mention'd; nor did they for a very long Time employ the new ones, but in writing Scholiums and Annotations, which they uſed to note down either at the Bottom of the Page, or in the Margin. Nevertheleſs, as the capital Letters took up too much Room, and being moſt of them ſquare they therefore required an exact Hand, they at laſt laid them aſide, and made uſe of the ſmall, and employ'd the former only in public Inſcriptions, Titles, and the Beginnings of Chapters. In Proceſs of Time the old Letters were call'd initial. 'Tis well known that the Rabbi's have alſo their ſmall Letters, in which they write their Commentaries.

THE Papyrus of Egypt has given Name to our Paper, which is one of the moſt uſeful and moſt commodious Things that was ever found out by Man. Nevertheleſs, though there be nothing more common among us than Paper, we yet neither know the Time when, nor who invented it. Some have pretended that it was uſed in Livy's Time, who died the fourth of Tiberius; but they probably might have been miſtaken, ſince when that celebrated Hiſtorian mentions Tela Lintea, he poſſibly might have underſtood of it Cloth, on which they uſed to paint. 'Tis certain that Paper is far from boaſting ſo antient a Date.

MELCHIOR INCHOFFER, a German Jeſuit, who liv'd in the Middle of the laſt Century, has carried Things to another Extreme, by maintaining that 'tis not above two Centuries ſince Paper was firſt invented; but 'tis very ſurprizing how a Man of his Character, who certainly had ſome Knowledge of Antiquity, could be ignorant that we have ſeveral Manuſcripts at this Day, that are upwards of three hundred Years old, and which nevertheleſs are written on Paper like that which is now uſed. [c] Father Mabillon relates, that M. d'Herouval communicated to him a Letter, written by M. de Joinville to St. Lewis on common Paper; whence he conjectures, that we may ſafely ſuppoſe, that Paper has been invented theſe five hundred Years.

'Tis a ſurprizing Circumſtance as well as Unhappineſs, that Things of this Nature ſhould continue hid in Obſcurity, and that one can argue upon them but by Conjecture only.

[a] Such as have ſeen the Hieroglyphics of the Egyptians, Mexicans, &c. will eaſily allow, that the deſigning Part is not executed according to the Rules of Art. We are juſtly of opinion, that theſe Hieroglyphics were the firſt Rudiments of deſigning If there be any Thing that is worthy our Admiration in Hieroglyphics, 'tis the Wit and Invention, not the Drawing.

XXXIV. Their Armies, and Manner of making War.

I WAS no longer ſurpriz'd at the Accounts which Hiſtorians give us of the numerous Armies of Xerxes and Darius, after I had ſeen the Camp of the Moors near Balaſſor. Theſe kinds of Aſſemblies merit rather the Name of a Crowd or Rabble, than that of an Army. 'Tis an Aſſembly of Men without Order; in ſhort, a confus'd Multitude of all kinds of People.

IN the firſt Place, every Horſeman has always two or three Servants at leaſt, and the ſame Number of Women, along with him. The Omrahs, who are their Commanders and general Officers, have a proportionable Number; ſo that in an Army compos'd of an hundred thouſand Perſons, there will hardly be found ten thouſand [a] fighting Men. From whence we may judge what a Confuſion the weakeſt Side muſt neceſſarily be thrown into, when they are oblig'd to retire, and the great Trouble their Wives, their Children, and a great Quantity of uſeleſs Baggage muſt put them to; and indeed they ſeldom make a judicious Retreat.

THOUGH the heathen Indians don't carry ſo many Women along with them as the Moors, they yet have as many Servants and uſeleſs People. The Faquirs among the reſt are intolerable upon this Account, and are no leſs ſo in the Great Mogul's Armies, which ſwarm with them, where their only Employment is Begging. They often fix the Benevolence of the Donor, according to his Rank and Quality, and are ſure never to bate him a Penny of it. They will ſtand for four or five Days together at a Tent-Door, crying out all Day and all Night, as loud as ever they can bawl, Give me ſo much, give me ſo much, (naming the Sum) ſo that the ſhorteſt Way is to pay for one's Quiet, by letting them at once have what they ask for.

THE Moors and Indians have no Notion of throwing themſelves into Squadrons when they are engag'd in Battle. They deal their Blows about at all Adventures; ſo that it would be a very eaſy Matter for a ſmall Squadron of Horſe, that ſhould ſtand very cloſe together, to put a great Multitude of them into Diſorder. There are nevertheleſs ſome very brave Soldiers among them; but theſe are few in Number, and even the moſt reſolute among them always drink Opium before they engage, which at the ſame Time that it makes them furious and intrepid, renders them alſo inſenſible to Danger.

THE Indians have a very ſmall Number of Infantry among them, and theſe have as little Notion of the Evolutions as the Horſe. Whenever they happen to be in an Engagement, they always clap themſelves behind a Thicket, whence they fire upon the Enemy. Others, who are for engaging the Enemy Face to Face, have generally no more than a Pair of Drawers on, in order to be encumber'd as little as poſſible. They always put the greateſt Value on thoſe who are the moſt nimble-footed; for we are not to imagine that two Bodies of Men that ſtand cloſe together, and in good Order, ſhould advance towards one another with a Deſign of breaking in upon each other's

[a] 'Tis certain that the Armies of the antient Perſians had the ſame Defect, which ſtill prevails among the Turks, who are the moſt warlike and the beſt diſciplin'd of all the Eaſterns. The Armies of the Chineſe, modern Perſians, &c. have the ſame Defect. So great a Multitude of People may very eaſily occaſion a Revolution in a whole Kingdom, whence we may be leſs ſurpriz'd at that great one which happen'd in China in the laſt Century. 'Tis impoſſible to keep a confus'd Medley of People of all Ranks and Conditions to their Duty, and to unite them in one common Intereſt; not to mention that in too wide-extended Monarchies, the remote Provinces ſcarce look upon themſelves as Branches of it. If the Reader reflects on theſe Circumſtances, he will not find it ſo very ſurprizing that the ſmall Armies of Leonidas and Themiſtocles ſhould have check'd the Progreſs of, and even beat, the Perſian Army; or that the Macedonian Phalanx, led on by Alexander the Great, ſhould have ruin'd the moſt powerful Monarchy of all the Eaſt.

Ranks. They are not for expoſing themſelves to ſo much Danger; each Man lays about him as he thinks proper; ſo that when they are engag'd together, one would often conclude, they were playing at the childiſh Sport of Priſon-Baſe.

I BELIEVE that the Jews us'd antiently to fight pretty much after the ſame Manner, if we may form a Judgment from the Praiſes which are beſtow'd in Scripture on Aſahel the Son of Zeruiah, Joab's Brother, whom Abner kill'd, which ſays, [a] That he was as light of Foot as a wild Roe. This Quality would not be very praiſe-worthy in our Days, and eſpecially in a General's Brother.

'TIS well known that the Jews, in which they are directly the Reverſe of the Moors, had a very ſmall Number of Cavalry. Their whole Strength conſiſted in their Infantry, which might be owing to their Country's lying leſs open than that of the Mogul; and indeed their Enemies ever look'd upon them as very bad Horſemen, and generally uſed to rally them upon that very Account. When Rabſhakeh exhorted Hezekiah to ſubmit himſelf to Sennacherib, and not to lay any manner of Streſs on the Aſſiſtance of the Egyptians, he offer'd that Prince two thouſand Horſe in the King of Aſſyria's Name, provided he would acknowledge him for his Lord, and ſubmit himſelf to him; and he [b] adds, by way of Rallery, I will give thee two thouſand Horſes, if thou be able on thy Part to ſet Riders upon them. They nevertheleſs had a pretty conſiderable Body of Horſe in Solomon's Time, and the [c] Scripture relates, that this Prince kept twelve thouſand Horſe in Pay; but we don't find that the Jews had any either before or ſince his Time; ſo that we may naturally ſuppoſe, this Body of Soldiery ſubſiſted no longer than his Reign. However, I don't believe, but that they had ſome few Horſe, and 'tis even probable that Rabſhakeh might have puſh'd his Rallery a little too far. Be that as it will, 'tis very certain that the Jews were not uſed to Horſes, but uſed to ride on Aſſes [d]; ſo that we are not to wonder at our Saviour's making his Entrance into Jeruſalem upon the laſt mention'd Beaſt, ſince that Nation always employ'd this Animal for that Purpoſe. [e] No Man was look'd upon as rich and great, whoſe Stables were not fill'd with them; and the Scripture, in order to expreſs the Pomp and Riches of Jair [f] the Gileadite, who judg'd the People of Iſrael after Tola, ſays, That he [g] had thirty Sons who rode on thirty Aſs-Colts. It relates much the ſame Thing of [h] Abdon, who was one of the Judges of Iſrael.

[i] THE Indians uſe Elephants in their Armies to this Day, in like manner as the antient Perſians, and almoſt all the eaſtern Nations. Theſe Animals are ſurprizingly furious in Battle; for not to mention that their Bodies are cover'd over with Iron to render them impenetrable to the Showers of Arrows and Musket-Balls, which are pour'd

[a] 2 Reg. ii. 18. Porro Aſael curſor velociſſimus, quaſi unus de capreis quæ morantur in ſylvis. The greateſt Part of the Americans make war by Ambuſcade, and make a running Fight, without any Rule or Order. The antient Parthians uſed to fight flying, till ſuch Time as they had drawn their Enemies into an Ambuſcade; which Cuſtom is obſerv'd by the Tartars to this Day.

[c] Paral. i. 14.

[d] This ſhould make us be leſs ſurpriz'd at the Scripture's ſo often uſing the Aſs by way of Simile and Compariſon; the Idea which the Jews had of this Beaſt being different from that which we have. 'Tis very natural to employ Compariſons, or to borrow Ideas, from the Cuſtoms of one's own Country.

[e] The Indians meaſure the Riches and Power of a Man by the Number of his Elephants. See Fryar's Voyages. And the Arabians, &c. by the Number of Camels.

[h] Judic. xii.

[i] They were formerly uſed in Europe, ſince Pyrrhus King of Epirus employ'd them in his Armies, but 'tis many Centuries ſince.

in upon them from all Quarters, their Trunks are alſo arm'd with a great Chain. With this they lay about with incredible Swiftneſs, and it never fails to make a dreadful Havock wherever it comes, particularly if the Elephants are guided by skilful Riders.

THE Romans formerly felt the Fury of the Elephants, who kill'd a great Number of their Soldiers, and put them into great Diſorder in the firſt Battle. 'Twas not till after having been terribly harraſs'd by them, that they learnt the Art of defending themſelves againſt this Beaſt, and that was by ſhooting in their Trunks, which is the moſt tender Part in all their Body. And the Moment they find themſelves wounded here, they, inſtead of advancing towards thoſe who attack them, turn back upon their own Riders, who after that find it impoſſible to govern them.

THE Cuſtom of employing Elephants in War is of great Antiquity in the Indies, even in the Time of Queen Semiramis. This Queen, who carried her Arms to the furthermoſt Parts of India, obſerving the terrible Havock thoſe Animals made in her Troops, had Recourſe to a Stratagem, [a] as Diodorus Siculus tells us, by carving great Numbers of them in Wood, and ſetting them at the Head of her Army. The Indians, who imagined ſhe had not one, and ſeeing ſo great a Number of them ſtart up of a ſudden, were ſtruck with the utmoſt Surprize. Nor were their Horſes leſs terrified than if they had been living Elephants, for they were made extremely natural; ſo that theſe People at firſt gave Ground, and the Aſſyrians ſeeing them in Diſorder, purſued them very briskly; but the reſt perceiving that the Enemy, inſtead of coming againſt them with real Elephants, had only brought ſo many wooden ones, reſum'd their Courage, rallied, fell upon the Soldiers of Semiramis in their Turn, and gain'd a very complete Victory over them. [b] Diodorus moreover ſpeaks of certain People call'd Gandares, who inhabited the Banks of the Ganges, and againſt whom Alexander did not think fit to turn the Fury of his Arms, becauſe of the great Number of Elephants they poſſeſs'd; or poſſibly, as Quintus Curtius obſerves, becauſe the Greeks might have oppoſed ſuch an Attempt. And to ſay the Truth, they had juſt Reaſon to dread thoſe formidable Animals, who, if there be but a pretty conſiderable Number of them, and that they have but skilful Riders, very often make dreadful Havock in an Army.

'TIS manifeſt from Quintus Curtius, that the Elephants in Porus's Army put the Forces of Alexander to a ſtand, and that the Greeks found it a very difficult Matter at firſt to defend themſelves againſt their prodigious Strength. This celebrated Hiſtorian takes notice alſo of the Love which the Elephant on which King Porus rode on the Day of Battle bore to him; how he took up his Maſter with his Trunk, and ſeated him again on his Back; in ſhort, how he defended him to the laſt Extremity, and till ſuch Time as he was overwhelm'd by the repeated Attacks of the Greeks; whence we may preſume, that if all the Officers and Soldiers of that unfortunate Prince, had adher'd to him with as much Vigour and Reſolution as that poor Beaſt did, Alexander would not, perhaps, have extended his Conqueſts any farther.

THE Indians, with regard to their Pleaſures, have the ſame Taſte that the Antients had for Flowers and Eſſences; and in general, for every Thing that is grateful to the Senſe of Smelling. Whenever a Perſon of ſome Diſtinction viſits another, thoſe who receive the Viſit have long Silver Bottles, which caſt forth [a] Roſe-Water thro' little Holes, much after the Manner of our Watering-Pots.

WITH theſe they ſprinkle the Face and Head of their Gueſts, by way of Compliment. At the ſame Time they preſent a Plate, which is cover'd with Powder of Sandal, a very fragrant Wood; with this they rub the Clothes of the Viſitants; and as this Powder is of a yellowiſh Colour, and that moſt of the Indians are clothed in very fine white Linen, this produces an Effect, which to me was at firſt very odd and ſurpriſing; but recollecting a Moment after, that great Numbers of People in France [b] powder their black Clothes almoſt down to their Pockets, my Surpriſe immediately ceaſed.

THEIR Women of Diſtinction generally employ themſelves in their Retirement (for they lead almoſt as recluſe Lives as the Turkiſh Women) in making Noſegays, Garlands, and Crowns or Chaplets of Flowers, like to thoſe which the Bridegroom wears publickly on his Head on his wedding Day, in which they imitate the antient Greeks, who were very delicate in their Pleaſures. It is manifeſt from moſt of their Epithalamiums, that they, not only on their wedding Day, but alſo during the whole Spring and Summer Seaſons, uſed to be always crowned with Flowers, and thoſe newly gather'd, and the moſt [c] beautiful they could meet with.

XXXVI. Of their Unctions.

MOST Nations have been of Opinion, that Oil is one of thoſe Things which Mankind could leaſt do without, imagining that it would be impoſſible for them to keep themſelves from the Head-ach and all other Pains, unleſs they rubb'd their Heads every Day therewith, and apply'd ſome to that Part where they felt the Pain. This Cuſtom, which had at firſt been introduced from a kind of Neceſſity, became, in Proceſs of Time, one of the chief Inſtruments which Luxury and Effeminacy employ'd, in order to corrupt and deprave the Mind.

THIS Cuſtom, I ſay, took its Riſe from a kind of Neceſſity; for, as was juſt now obſerved, it was look'd upon as a ſovereign Remedy againſt the Head-Ach, and particularly in Hot-Countries. 'Tis certain, that thoſe who rub their Heads with Oil are ſeldom bald.

[a] The Arabians ſprinkle their Beards with it, and even aſcribe ſome ſacred Virtue to it, which might be almoſt compar'd to that of Holy-Water. When Hungary-Water firſt made its Appearance, there was not a Woman, Maid, or Beau, but complained of a Dizzineſs or the Heart Ach. It would have been impoſſible for all the Water in Chriſtendom, to have had the thouſandth Part of the extraordinary Effects this Hungary Water had, and ever ſince that Time, there are few modiſh People but what carry a Bottle of it about them. Tho' Holy-Water has triumph'd for ſo many Ages, ſtill no one has yet thought fit to carry any of it about them. Be this as it will, our Hungary-Water may be put in Parallel with the Roſe-Water uſed by the Indians. Both are proper to chear the Spirits, and no doubt but that is the chief Reaſon why the Indians ſprinkle with Roſe-Water.

[b] The Antients uſed to powder themſelves with Gold-Duſt. There is ſome Probability that this Cuſtom might be alluded to in the 11th Verſe of the 5th Chapter of Solomon's Song. The Head of my Beloved is as the moſt fine Gold, &c.

[c] The antient Greeks uſed alſo to wear Chaplets of Flowers on their Heads in their Feaſts, and were particularly careful to make choice of ſuch as were contrary to Drunkenneſs. They always adorn'd their Heads, their Necks, their Arms with them in their Carouſals, and alſo crown'd their Goblets, &c.

We

We read in Scripture, that the Jewiſh Women uſed to take great Delight in theſe Unctions, and frequently preferr'd them to the Things moſt neceſſary for Life. Thus the Prophet's Widow, who addreſſed herſelf to Eliſha, notwithſtanding her great Poverty and [a] extreme Neceſſity, had yet Oil to anoint herſelf with.

THE Indians, and eſpecially their Women, are no leſs fond of this Cuſtom. They could hardly have a worſe Puniſhment, than to be one Moment without their Heads gliſtening with Oil; but as they have no Olive-Oil, they uſe that of Cocoa.

THE Antients did not only anoint themſelves by way of Preſervative againſt the Head-Ach, and for healing of Wounds, but alſo in ſtrengthening the Nerves, and to make their Limbs ſupple, eſpecially after any laborious Exerciſe. It is thus we find in the Iliad, that Ulyſſes and Diomedes, after their Return from taking a View of the Trojan Army, [b] waſh'd, rubb'd themſelves with Oil, and afterwards went to Breakfaſt.

THE Indians do the ſame at their Return from a Journey, or in general, after having wearied themſelves with any laborious Exerciſe; for on theſe Occaſions they never ſit down to eat or repoſe themſelves, till ſuch Time as they have waſhed and rubb'd themſelves with Oil.

IT was antiently a Cuſtom for all Champions in the gymnaſtic Exerciſes to practiſe the ſame Cuſtom, not only ſuch as wreſtled, to prevent their Antagoniſts from laying hold of them, but all the reſt, in order to make their Bodies more robuſt, and their Limbs more pliant.

MANKIND, who at firſt had reſpect to to the Uſefulneſs only in theſe Unctions, never employ'd ſuch Oils as were ſcented; inſenſibly they were for uniting Pleaſure to Profit, whereupon Oil was heighten'd with Perfumes and aromatic Spices: Thus what at firſt was no more than a Preſervative or Remedy, became at laſt one of the moſt ſenſual Pleaſures. After this, all ſuch as were deſirous of paſſing for Beaux or very pretty Fellows, were obliged to moiſten their Hair with Eſſence, and be ſuch as Bathyllus is repreſented in Anacreon; for in his Advice to a Painter, where he deſcribes to him the Manner in which he would have the beautiful Youth of Samos drawn, he tells him, he muſt make his [c] Hair moiſt.

VIRGIL has deſcrib'd Turnus after the ſame Manner, when he ſays, that his [d] Hairs, which were curl'd with a red-hot Iron, were all moiſt with Myrrh.

NAY, ſo far did they carry their Effeminacy, as not to be aſham'd of having their Bodies rubbed all over with Eſſence by Women. Nor did [e] Telemachus and Piſiſtratus, with all their Wiſdom, ſcruple to have the ſame done to them after their Return from viſiting the Palace of Menelaus, and before they ſat down to eat.

OTHERS uſed to rub every part of their Body with odoriferous Oils before they went to Bed. Several of the primitive Chriſtians obſerved this Cuſtom, which [f] Clemens Alexandrinus cenſur'd in his Cotemporaries.

BUT

BUT they were chiefly uſed by the Fair-Sex. The ſtrongeſt Perfumes of Arabia were too weak for them. It is not very long ſince that the Europeans themſelves were of the ſame Taſte; but as the Mode changed, it was abſolutely neceſſary Taſte ſhould change alſo, and that in order to ſuit one's ſelf to Times and Seaſons, the Woman, who five and twenty Years ago could with Pleaſure have ſpent her Life in the midſt of the moſt odoriferous Perfumes, and who alſo wore ſcented Gloves, ſhould faint at the Sight of certain Flowers, or at the approach of the leaſt Perfume. Altro tempo, altro guſto. Modes change with the Age.

IT was a Cuſtom among the Jews, to preſent every Man who came to viſit another, with Eſſence to perfume his Head; and there could not be a greater Piece of Rudeneſs or Diſreſpect, than not to offer ſomething of this Kind: Thus when the Phariſee, with whom our Saviour eat, was very much offended that a Woman, and, what was much more, a ſinful Woman, ſhould come and anoint his Feet, our Lord reproach'd him with ſaying, that ſhe had performed a Duty which he himſelf ought to have obſerved. For he ſaid to him, [a] Mine Head with Oil thou didſt not anoint: But this Woman hath anointed my Feet with Ointment.

THE Pſalmiſt, to denote his Reſolution not to have any Communication with Sinners, ſays, [b] That he will not anoint his Head with his Oil. The Meaning of which is, That he will not viſit him, and conſequently will not be obliged to receive any of his Civilities.

THE Antients not only uſed perfum'd Oils and Eſſences for themſelves, but alſo ſmear'd Birds with it; an Inſtance of which we meet with in a very pretty Ode of Anacreon, where two Doves are the Interlocutors, one of which carried a Letter from him to his beautiful Bathyllus. [c] Her Companion congratulates her for having her Wings perfum'd, and upon her diffuſing ſo agreeable an Odour around.

THE Indians generally preſent nothing but Roſe-Water to their Viſitants, as was obſerved in the preceding Article; but they always preſent Oil every Morning to ſuch Gueſts as make any Stay with them.

IT may be ſaid that the Indians, in general, are a very neat People; they are very careful of waſhing themſelves, and I am perſuaded, that the moſt rigid Phariſee could not exceed them in this Particular: They alſo agree with them in ſeveral other Points; as for inſtance, in their Prayers, which they affect ſometimes to ſay in public, but chiefly in their ſerious and compoſed Outſide.

THEY look upon a paſſionate Temper as the Indication of a narrow Soul, and ſhew the utmoſt Contempt for all ſuch as cannot command their Paſſions, or ſuffer themſelves to be inflam'd with Anger. Whatever Wrong or Injury a Man may do them, they never fail to keep their Tempers; but this does not hinder their revenging themſelves; and whenever they have made a Reſolution to hurt any Man, they do it ſo much the more effectually, as well as dangerouſly, as it is always done in cold Blood; not to mention that their Revenge engroſſes all their Thoughts. They even conceal their Reſentments ſo well, that tho' they always ſtand upon their guard, eſpecially when they are conſcious of having wrong'd any Perſon, they yet over-reach one another daily, and are frequently attack'd by thoſe whom they thought to be their deareſt and moſt faithful Friends. Whenever they happen to be bit in this Manner, they, without ſo much as once thinking upon the Perſon who has deceiv'd them, vent only their Complaints againſt themſelves, never lay the Blame on any one elſe, and own that they richly deſerved it, for having truſted one whom they had formerly offended: For 'tis a Maxim with them, that Injuries are never forgot. Notwithſtanding they are in private the greateſt Debauchees in the World, they yet are greatly reſerved in Public. One never hears an obſcene Word come out of their Mouths, and they always affect a very modeſt Behaviour outwardly: In fine, they might be propoſed as complete Models of moral Perfection, did their Thoughts and Actions agree with their Expreſſions.

XXXVIII. How the Moguls divide the Day, and their Manner of meaſuring Time.

THE Inhabitants of Mogul divide the natural Day, which conſiſts of twenty-four Hours, into eight Parts, each of which is again ſubdivided into ſeveral others, according to the Length of the Days. As for inſtance, thoſe who inhabit near the Line, and who have almoſt equal Day and Night, have but very little Difference in their Diviſions; however this Difference is greater under the Tropics, and always increaſes in proportion to the Diſtance from the Equinoctial.

THEY meaſure Time by a Water-Clock, which however is very different from our Clepſydra or Hour-Glaſs, which is ſaid to have been invented by Cteſibius of Alexandria, about ſix hundred and thirty four Years after the Foundation of Rome. The Clepſydra was compoſed of two ſmooth Baſons joined cloſe together, one of which was full of Water and the other empty. At the Bottom of the latter was a Piece of Cork, which cover'd it all over, excepting ſo much as was neceſſary for the letting it go up and down with eaſe. On this Cork ſtood a little Figure that held a little Stick in its Hand, with which it pointed out the Hours on the Lines, which were drawn on a little Column that was fixed at the Edge of the Baſon, and which raiſed itſelf above it it. There was a Communication between them by Means of a little Hole, and that which was full, emptied itſelf gently into the other in which the Cork was, which the Water raiſed by Degrees. At the ſame Time that the Cork roſe, the Figure which ſtood upon it roſe alſo, and by that Means pointed out the Hours with its Stick.

THE Clepſydra uſed by the Inhabitants of Mogul, is in their Language call'd Gari or Gadli, and has not ſo much Work in it; but then it requires more Attendance, a Man being obliged to watch continually. It is a Baſon fill'd with Water, in which they put a little Copper Diſh, with a very ſmall Hole in its Bottom. The Water comes by inſenſible Degrees into this Diſh, which when full, and that the Water contained in it begins to mix itſelf with that in the Baſon, it then ſinks to the Bottom. The Time which it takes up in filling is by them call'd a Gari, which, according to the Obſervation I have made, amounts to twenty-two Minutes and thirty Seconds of Time: So that when the Day is exactly twelve Hours in Length, each Part contains eight Garies, that is one hundred and eighty Minutes, or three Hours. As the Days ſhorten, there are leſs Garies in each Part of the Day, and more in thoſe of the Night; for we are always to add to the one, what we ſubſtract from the other, becauſe the Night and the Day together muſt regularly conſiſt of ſixty four Garies, that is one thouſand four hundred and forty Minutes, or twenty four Hours. As ſoon as one Gari is ended, the Perſon who watches the Clock ſtrikes as many Blows upon a Copper Table as there are Garies paſſed; after which he ſtrikes others to ſhew the Part, whether of the Day or Night.

SOME Perſons, according to Aben-Eſra, have pretended that the Teraphims, of which mention is ſo often made in Scripture, were Water-Clocks, pretty like the Garies of the Moors: But they have advanc'd this without one corroborating Proof, or even the leaſt Shew of Probability. The Gods which Rachel ſtole from her Father Laban, are indeed called Teraphims, but there is not one ſingle Reaſon to induce us to believe that 'twas her Father's Clock ſhe run away with. This was not a Thing of ſo much Value, as to have obliged them to run away with it in a clandeſtine Manner, or to have merited ſuch diligent Search as Laban made after it, who ranſacked all Jacob's Tent upon that Account. Theſe Teraphims were Houſhold Gods, and not Clocks. It is alſo an Error to think they ever ſpoke, or that Rachel carry'd them off, purely to prevent her Father's conſulting them about her Flight.

IT was with Reaſon that the Jews conſidered the Temple of Jeruſalem as the Lord's Houſe, as a Place that was truly holy, and in which God deſired particularly to be worſhipp'd.

THE Mahometans have the ſame Idea of Mecca, and the Heathen Indians of the [a] Pagod of Jaguarnat, which is a large Edifice built on the Sea-Shore, pretty near Balaſſor. We are told that this Pagod is very rich, and that among other precious Things, there is a very large Statue in it, with two Emeralds of a prodigious Size for its Eyes; but as I myſelf have never been there, nor have met with any European who could give me a certain Account of it, I therefore cannot pretend to be exact in the Relation I ſhall give of it.

THE Great Mogul has cauſed it to be incloſed, at leaſt I have been told ſo, in order to put a Stop to the numberleſs Multitude of Heathens, who uſed to come thither in Pilgrimage from the remoteſt Parts of the Indies, to the no ſmall Advantage of the Bramins, who by that Means got great Sums of Money.

THESE are the principal Points wherein we have obſerved a Conformity with regard to the Cuſtoms of the Indians and thoſe of the Antients, particularly the Jews. Was a Man to argue upon the Pagan Syſtem, he undoubtedly would find a much greater Affinity between them; as for inſtance, if a Roman who had lived under Titus, and been well acquainted with both, would have undertaken to write their Characters.

WE have drawn a Parallel between the Jews and Indians with regard to their Cuſtoms, religious and civil; we may alſo compare them together with reſpect to Genius and the Prejudices they have imbibed. Both of them are continual Slaves to Prepoſſeſ-

[a] We may compare this Pagod to the Temple of Jupiter Ammon, to that of Diana of Epheſus, that of Apollo at Delphos, or that of Ceres in Sicily, where the Romans uſed to ſend from Time to Time for the acquitting themſelves of their Vows. We hope we ſhall not give any Offence, if we find any Reſemblance between theſe Pilgrimages, and thoſe which the Chriſtians make to our Lady of Loretto, and to St. James in Galicia, &c.

ſion, which triumphs ſo much the more [a] over them, as they love and adore their Captivity: 'Tis their Law which is here hinted at, it being the moſt inſupportable of all Slaveries.

THESE two People adhere ſo very ſcrupulouſly to every Thing that ſavours ever ſo little of [b] Antiquity, that it abſolutely prevents their making any Progreſs in the Sciences, and keeps them in the blind Ignorance of their Forefathers; they being frighted at the leaſt Appearance of Novelty, and think it a Crime to improve ever ſo little on what their Anceſtors have advanced.

[c] The whole Knowledge of theſe People goes no further than in their getting by Heart the ſeveral Things which they ſay that God or the Gods have done for them, together with ſome Books of Morality, whoſe Precepts they learn very carefully, and which they are every Moment repeating with an affected Gravity; an equal Indication of their Ignorance as well as Preſumption.

THEY make War as it were only by Starts, and conquer in the ſame Manner; or rather they are to be conſider'd only as ſo many Machines, which their Prieſts [d] ſet a going, and whom they inſpire with Fear or Intrepidity, according to the Aſſurances they give them of the good or ill Succeſs of the Battle.

[e] THEY ſometimes fight with the utmoſt Obſtinacy for the Defence of their Religion; which, as it is founded on ſome Promiſe of their Soothſayers, muſt neceſſarily be very nearly allied to a Spirit of Fury; and theſe poor Wretches do not perceive that the greater Number of Victories they gain, they only enſlave themſelves the more, and encreaſe the Weight of their Chains, by giving their Prieſts an Opportunity of ſettling the Laws, or rather Tyranny, upon a ſtronger Foundation.

[f] As they look upon all other Nations as profane, and refuſe to have any Familiarity with Foreigners, and univerſally deſpiſe all but their own dear ſelves, we are not to wonder if they are equally contemned in their Turn.

[a] We may ask the Author of this Diſſertation, what Men are not ſubject to theſe Prejudices? Might they not be compared on this Occaſion, with all the People, and all the Religions in the World, not excepting that of the Chriſtians? For we may conſider all ſuch Chriſtians as Slaves, who are not able to give any Reaſon for their Belief. There is no Neceſſity that a Perſon in low Life ſhould examine the Particulars of the ſeveral Articles in the Creed, but then he ought to be able to give good Reaſons why he believes in them. Such as are negligent upon this Head, are not more acceptable in the Sight of God, than a Braſilian who lives up to the Rules of Morality, and does not devour his Fellow-Creatures. Let us therefore conclude, that Mankind in general may be compared to one another with regard to Genius and Prejudice.

[b] He ſhould have ſaid, that both of them adhere zealouſly to Tradition, and then the Parallel would have been juſtly drawn. This Tradition, when too blindly followed, is not only a Shelf on which both Jews and Indians, but even the Chriſtians themſelves ſpilt. We will ſuppoſe that Novelty terrifies an Indian, but we cannot comprehend why it ſhould have the ſame Effect on Chriſtians, when it aims only at inſpiring them with a Spirit of Chriſtianity. We muſt confeſs, that the Minds of Men have ſometimes a very mechanical Turn.

[c] The Knowledge of a numberleſs Multitude of Chriſtians goes no further than this. Several of theſe repeat by Heart the Ten Commandments, to which others add certain Prayers. The Roman Catholics learn the Creed, the Lord's Prayer, and the Ave Maria, with a few Prayers to the Saints; the Heretics learn Spiritual Songs, and ſome of David's Pſalms. In this conſiſts the Devotion of both.

[d] Our Clergy act in the ſame Manner, and the Wars which they foment are always the moſt fatal.

[e] The Parallel might be juſtly drawn with the Chriſtians, to our Shame be it ſpoken. Conſpiracies have been formed, and Wars have been undertaken, barely on theſe Promiſes. There is no Neceſſity of deſcending to Particulars, ſince any one who will give himſelf the Trouble to look into the Hiſtory of our Times, will be plainly convinced of the Truth of this Aſſertion.

[f] We alſo are guilty of the ſame Fault. It muſt be confeſſed that the Chriſtian Religion is excellent in itſelf; but then were it not more laudable to bring over Infidels and Heretics by Gentleneſs and Inſtruction, than to make them more obſtinate by Violence and Contempt?

[a] THE Jews look'd upon their Subordination to the Romans as the greateſt Misfortune that could poſſibly have befallen them: Nevertheleſs, nothing in the World could have been more advantageous; for the Correſpondence they by that Means obtained with the moſt polite and moſt learned Men in the World, having open'd their Eyes a little, it hereby gave them an Opportunity of indulging a Freedom of Thought, and of being no longer tied down to think as their Forefathers. And indeed, ſome of theſe applied themſelves afterwards to the Study of the Hiſtory of other Nations, and the polite Arts, of which they were utterly ignorant before.

THE Indians are as much Slaves as ever, and it will be equally happy for them, ſhould any civiliz'd Nation break their Chains by the Conqueſt of their Country.

THEY were very near being reſcued from their Captivity in the Time of [b] Alexander the Great. Had the Greeks but continued longer in the Indies, they would infallibly have communicated to them both their Politeneſs and Learning. But this Hero was for conquering ſo many Nations, that he could ſcarcely flatter himſelf with the Hopes of bringing ſo much as one under Subjection, or making them ſubmit to the Laws of the Conqueror. He was no ſooner in one Country, but he flew the next Moment into another; like to thoſe Torrents, which the faſter they drive along, the fewer Marks they leave of their Courſe.

ONE who was to declare for the Antients, or a Perſon of a greater Severity of Temper, would expreſs himſelf very differently from this, with regard to the Jews and Indians, though he were not to make any Diſtinction between their Religions, but conſidered them on the ſame Foot. I believe, from the few Remarks which I have made on thoſe two Nations, he might form the following Reflections.

[c] BOTH Jews and Indians, at leaſt a great Part of them, have preſerv'd the Simplicity which prevail'd in the Infancy of the World. This is manifeſt from their Food, their Dreſs, and their Pleaſures, in all which Plainneſs is chiefly conſulted. They are moſt delighted with ſuch Things as preſent themſelves to their Minds with the greateſt Simplicity, and moſt naturally flatter their Imaginations.

THE Fear they are under of falling into Error, makes them adhere very ſcrupulouſly to the Counſels of the moſt wiſe and learned among them, from this Conſideration, that nothing can be more dangerous for Mankind in general, but eſpecially for ſuch as are uninform'd with Experience, than to attempt to walk by no other Rule than ſuch an one as is ſuggeſted by their own Underſtandings.

THE Indians obſerve very punctually the ſeveral Injunctions which the Religion they profeſs preſcribes; and as they know that Mankind cannot be their own Maſters in every Reſpect, but are in ſome Meaſure born to Subjection, they chuſe to worſhip their

[a] There are ſome Nations in Europe, to whom it has been in like manner repreſented by the Correſpondence they might have with certain Iſlanders, who happily poſſeſs a Freedom in Thinking. We don't ſay, that it would be a Happineſs for us to become their Subjects, but we believe it would certainly be ſo, were we to imbibe Part of their Principles. We have for ſeveral Years reap'd great Benefit from their Notions, by the Commerce which we are obliged to carry on with them, and which will be ſtill greater, when we ſhall have ſhook off the Chains of thoſe who would willingly become our Fathers and Maſters.

[b] The Reader may compare theſe Times of Alexander to others much leſs remote.

[c] The Parallel is not juſtly drawn on this Occaſion. The Jews are very far from obſerving any Simplicity on that Head, but are on the contrary great Friends to Pomp and Luxury, and ſet every Engine to work, in order to join Art and Nature together in their Pleaſures.

Gods, and yield a blind Submiſſion to their Law, rather than [a] be Slaves to Caprice and Ambition, like moſt other Nations in the World.

THEY never apply [b] themſelves to any of the Sciences, but ſuch as are of abſolute Neceſſity; looking upon the reſt as Acquiſitions, which though they enlarge the human Faculties, they yet make a Man more unhappy, and uſually ſwell him with Pride.

THEY are ſenſible that Vice is much more apt to inſinuate itſelf into the Mind than Virtue; for which Reaſon they ſhun all Familiarity with Foreigners, for fear of being infected with their ill Cuſtoms and Vices. It was to prevent their being forced to live among them, that they were ſometimes prompted to make ſuch ſtrenuous and ſurprizing Efforts, in order to keep them from entring into their Country, or to drive them out from it.

THEIR Brains are never projecting of Novelties, but are employ'd wholly on Traffic, or the ſeveral Trades which their Fathers had taught them, in which Particular they differ greatly from thoſe Nations to whom we give the Name of polite and civiliz'd, who are never ſatisfied with what their Predeceſſors have left them, but on the contrary are eternally torturing their Imaginations, in order to invent ſomething new, and to force Nature as it were, and whoſe Reputations increaſe in proportion as they deviate from thoſe Paths in which their Anceſtors had trod, and which Nature herſelf had pointed out to them.

XL. Of India in general, and the Cuſtoms of its Inhabitants.

I HOPE the Reader will pardon me, if, notwithſtanding the Reſolution I had made of writing only on the Conformity between the Cuſtoms of the Indians and thoſe of the Antients, I now ſhould wholly lay aſide Antiquity, to give a ſhort Account of the Indies, in the Stile and Manner of other Travellers. However, I don't flatter myſelf ſo far as to imagine that I ſhall write any Thing new, but on the contrary am perſuaded that I ſhall relate nothing but what ſeveral others have ſaid before me; but the Reader may depend I ſhall not be very prolix on this Head, nor would I once have touch'd upon it, had it not been to avoid an Appearance of Singularity, and to ſhew I was not too fond of my firſt Notions.

MOST People who have never ſtirr'd from home, form to themſelves an advantageous Idea of diſtant Countries. They fancy they abound with all Things neceſſary for Life, and imagine them to be exempt from all thoſe Defects, all thoſe diſagreeable Particulars, which are found in their own. They conſider them as Regions moſt exquiſitely delightful, becauſe moſt Travellers have deſcrib'd them as ſuch; and indeed thoſe Gentlemen uſually paint the Countries they have viſited in the moſt agreeable Colours.

I HAD read ſeveral Deſcriptions of foreign Countries before my leaving Europe. In theſe they were generally repreſented as ſo many inchanting Places; every Thing in [a] This Reflection is no ways juſt. The Wars and Revolutions which happen in the Indies, are a Proof that thoſe Nations often make a political, of a purely religious Affair; and that 'tis the ſame in Aſia as in Europe, where thoſe who are the moſt zealous Sticklers for the Deity, are not always his beſt Friends.

[b] As for the Jews, they neglect the Sciences, and apply themſelves to Buſineſs only; but this they do from Judgment and Reflection, well knowing that there is nothing to be got by Learning.

them was beautiful, every Thing lovely, and the moſt innocent Pleaſures preſented themſelves in Crowds. The Inhabitants of thoſe happy Climes wanted nothing to make their Felicity everlaſting, but a Poſſibility of living eternally. I myſelf was of the ſame Opinion, becauſe Travellers aſſur'd me it was ſo; but I undeceiv'd myſelf, by viſiting thoſe Countries which had been deſcrib'd in ſuch glaring Terms. I have generally obſerv'd, that moſt Travellers who had writ upon them, very much heighten'd their Beauties, but had touch'd but very lightly on the Inconveniencies which are found in them, or thoſe diſagreeable Things which Perſons are oblig'd to undergo in them.

THE Author of Nature has diſtributed his Bleſſings pretty equally over the ſeveral Countries of the World. Good and Bad are every where met with, and 'tis a very difficult Matter for a Man, who has ſeen ſeveral Countries, to live a long Time in one, without regretting another, becauſe there is not one Country to be found, in which there is not ſomething wanting, which may eaſily be met with in another. So that we ought to lay aſide all thoſe Prejudices which we may have entertain'd in this Reſpect, and not imagine that there is one ſingle Spot in the whole World, that has all Things deſirable, and in which Pleaſures and Pains do not alternately ſucceed each other.

THE Coaſt of Coromandel is in the Torrid Zone, where Heat rages with the utmoſt Violence. There are certain Winds here which blow continually during ſome Seaſons of the Year, which are call'd Land-Winds, becauſe they blow from the Land; and theſe are prodigiouſly troubleſome: They generally laſt from nine or ten in the Morning, till three or four in the Afternoon. None but the Natives dare ſtir out during that Time; for every Step a Man takes, he ſeems to have ſo much Fire thrown in his Face, eſpecially between the Hours of ten and two. This Land-Wind is ſucceeded by another that blows from Sea, which riſes the Moment the other is laid, and is ſo much the more agreeable, the more the Heat has been violent during the Day. 'Tis then a Man may enjoy all the Pleaſures of Walking.

MEN conſider the Verdure with which the Trees in hot Countries are perpetually cloth'd, as the greateſt Beauty that is to be met with in theſe Regions, but are nevertheleſs miſtaken, ſince Uſe makes it no longer a Pleaſure; and I cannot ſay, whether the Variety of Seaſons which we have in Europe is not ſomething more agreeable; for as India does not feel the Severity of our Winter Seaſon, ſo neither have they any Thing that may be compar'd to the Beauty of our Spring. 'Tis there one perpetual Summer, that burns up the Graſs, and dries up the Fields, which, after the rainy Seaſon, never continue green above two Months.

THE Rains fall regularly in thoſe Seaſons, and laſt generally from the Middle of June to the Middle of September, during which there ſeldom happens the leaſt Interval of fair Weather. They are leſs troubleſome at Pondichery than in other Places, becauſe as 'tis a ſandy Ground, it does not ſpoil the Roads, which, during that Time, are almoſt impaſſable in the Kingdom of Bengal, becauſe of the Richneſs of the Soil. Theſe Rains are abſolutely wanted in the Indies; for whenever they fail to deſcend, as Rice requires a great deal of Moiſture, they are ſure to be afflicted with Famine.

RICE is the common Food of the Inhabitants of the Country. This they firſt boil, and afterwards toſs up with Butter, Saffron, and Herbs. Others eat it with Meat, or Fiſh, and then call it Caris. They ſeaſon it very high with Pepper, which makes theſe Ragoos not altogether ſo agreeable to the Palate as they would otherwiſe be.

THEY

THEY have Game enough, ſuch as wild Boars, Roe-Bucks, Hares, Partridges, Wood-Pigeons, a great Quantity of Snipes, wild Ducks, Teal, and all kinds of Water-Fowl; but I never ſaw any Rabbits there.

THERE is hardly any better Fiſh in the World than at Pondichery, and they have one among the reſt which they call Pamper. 'Tis a flat Fiſh, and may beſt be compar'd to our Turbots, except that 'tis not quite ſo thick; but then the Fleſh is as firm, and taſtes as well. They have alſo very good Mullets.

THEY have a great Quantity of Fruits, but they are all very different from ours. The Mangue is mightily valued there, whoſe Taſte is very much like that of our Peach, which however is much larger, but has not near ſo large a Stone, and its Leaves are very like that of the Peach. Theſe Mangues are excellent when they are of the right Sort, but the others are ſtringy. 'Twould be needleſs to trouble the Reader with an Account of the Variety of Fruits which their Soil produces; for not to mention that this would carry us to too great Lengths, 'twould be almoſt impoſſible to give a juſt Idea of them to ſuch as have never ſeen or taſted them.

BOTH Lemons and Oranges are pretty common in the Indies, but far leſs ſo than in America, which abounds more with thoſe kind of Fruits than any other Country in the World. I nevertheleſs have ſeen a ſmall kind of Orange in the Iſland of Moeli, which I never met with in America. They are no bigger than our Pomme d'Apis, and have a red Peel. 'Tis of a more watry Subſtance than our common Orange; and as they ripen, their Rind, which is ribb'd like that of a Melon, opens like that of a Pomegranate.

THERE are in that Iſland a great Quantity of Caſſia Trees. The manner how the Sticks are made in which that kind of purgative Gum is put, is pretty well known in Europe. They are long and dry when ripe, and whenever the Wind blows, the Sticks with which thoſe Trees are loaded, wave up and down, and ſo ſtrike againſt each other, which makes a very ſtrange Noiſe to ſuch Perſons as don't know what it is owing to, eſpecially if they happen to be in the Midſt of a Foreſt, when they ſometimes hear this claſhing Sound at a great Diſtance from them.

THERE is no Man who has been in the Indies, but muſt have heard of Betel, which, next to Rice, is the Food that is moſt eaten there, and which the Indians, and even a great Number of Europeans, can leaſt live without.

THIS Betel is a Plant that riſes pretty much like our Virgin-Vine. Each of theſe Plants has a Vine-Prop about fifteen Foot high. Its Leaf is pretty much like that of the Lilach, or Arabian-Bean, except that 'tis thinner. The Indians eat this as a great Dainty, but never alone. They firſt rub it with a little Lime made of Shells; after which they take little Slices of Arregua, cut very thin, and wrap them up in the Leaf. This Arregua is a Fruit that is exactly the ſame as the Nutmeg, except that it has no Smell. This Mixture of Betel Leaves, of Lime, and Arregua, is call'd Betel. Such Perſons as are in good Circumſtances, add ſome Cachoo to it, which is an eatable Perfume, well known in Europe, though it comes from the Indies. This Medley of Drugs makes their Lips and Teeth as red as Blood.

IT is certain that the Plant Betel boaſts a great many Virtues. It is very healing to the Stomach, and ſuch as eat of it regularly, are never out of Order, nor are they ever ever afflicted with the Tooth-Ach, it preſerving the Teeth firm and ſtrong, though they turn red.

THE Inhabitants of the Country generally preſent one another with Betel, in the ſame manner as we offer Snuff, and they never go any where without carrying a little of it about them. We are told that 'tis dangerous to take any from the Women, unleſs a Man is perfectly acquainted with them, becauſe they are ſaid to make Philters or Love-Potions of them, and for this Purpoſe they work it up with certain Drugs fit for that Purpoſe.

I CANNOT affirm this to be true, but however will aſſure the Reader, that I ſaw one of our Soldiers, who after refuſing to eat any Thing for two Days together, deſerted, in order to run after a Woman, whom they aſſur'd me had given him Betel; though the Creature certainly was not worth running after, ſhe being both old and ugly, whereas the Soldier was a handſome Fellow about thirty. They ſometimes alſo poiſon their Enemies with this Plant.

I FORGOT to mention, that whenever any Indian is wounded, he chews Betel Leaves, and applies them to the Wound; and this is found to be as efficacious, and to heal as quick, as Balm.

THE greateſt Part of India is a perfect Deſart, ſo that a Man is often oblig'd to go a long Way to find a poor Village, or a few miſerable Cottages, the moſt Part of which are abandon'd. This Devaſtation is owing to the continual Wars of the Great Mogul, who began by ruining the Country of the Indians, in order to make himſelf Maſter of it, and who, from a political View, always oppreſſes the People, and keeps them miſerably poor, for fear they ſhould ſhake off his Yoke; for notwithſtanding the great Havock that has been made of them, they are ſtill much more numerous than the Moors. A Man cannot forbear being touch'd with Compaſſion, when he reflects on the Slavery of theſe People, and the total Ruin of their Country, and when he compares the deplorable State to which they are now reduc'd, with that they were in but an hundred Years ago.

THE Aſiatics have always been look'd upon as a ſoft and effeminate People. This is certainly their juſt Character; for they are utter Enemies to Labour, and great Lovers of Eaſe and Repoſe. Whenever they are oblig'd to work, they go about it with a certain indolent Air, which plainly diſcovers they are out of their Sphere. As for my Part, I aſcribe this Indolence to the violent Heat of the Climate; for I have ſeen ſeveral Europeans there, who had contracted the ſame ill Habit in a very little Time.

THIS Indolence and Love of Eaſe makes them ſet every Engine at work, in order to procure the ſeveral Conveniencies of Life; and they are ſure of ſucceeding, if they take but ever ſo little Pains. It is true, indeed, that a Man does not ſee ſuch a Multitude of fine People, nor enjoy the agreeable Company which delights ſo much in Europe; but then it muſt be confeſs'd, that the kind of Independance which one enjoys in thoſe remote Countries, is wonderfully agreeable. People are here leſs Slaves to a pretended Decorum than in other Places. They enjoy the utmoſt Liberty, and every Man lives as he thinks proper. Moreover, a Man may there cut a great Figure at a little Expence, eſpecially with regard to Servants, who in that Country may be had for a ſmall Matter.

THE Indians in general may be divided into Moors, Heathens, and Topas. The Moors, as was already obſerv'd, are the Maſters; the Heathens, the Slaves; and the Topas are, properly ſpeaking, neither the one nor the other.

THESE Topas, or Meſtizos, are the Poſterity of Portugueſe Men and Indian Women. Their uſual Profeſſion is that of bearing Arms, and though they have neither the Riches nor the Complexion of their Forefathers (for they are black beggarly Fellows) they yet have preſerv'd their Gravity. I believe that they were call'd Topas from their wearing Hats, becauſe Topica-Log ſignifies Hat-People in the Mooriſh Language. The Great Mogul has a great Number of theſe Topas in his Armies, where they generally ſerve as Gunners. The French, the Engliſh, and the Dutch, have alſo ſeveral of them in their Pay. They ſpeak broken Portugueſe, which is the Language uſed for Traffic in the Indies, and every one who has Dealings in thoſe Countries, is oblig'd to learn it.

'TIS well known that the Portugueſe were formerly Maſters of the Indies, whoſe Monarchs all trembled at their Nod. Francis d'Almeida, Viceroy for the King of Portugal in the Indies, defeated Campſon the Egyptian Soldan in a Sea-Fight. This was in the Beginning of the ſixteenth Century. And the famous Alphonſo d'Albuquerque, his Succeſſor, acquir'd no leſs Fame by the taking of Goa, and ſeveral other Victories which he gain'd over the Indians. But they are greatly fallen ſince that Time, and moſt of the other Europeans, who are at preſent ſettled in the Indies, have eſtabliſh'd themſelves merely on their Ruins, eſpecially the Dutch, who are at this Time what the Portugueſe were formerly.

THE Europeans were not the only People whom the Portugueſe had to deal with; they alſo had great Squabbles with the Indians: Theſe, wearied with their Tyranny and Oppreſſion, roſe up againſt them in ſeveral Places. Of this Number were the Inhabitants of the Iſland of Moeli, who are all Mahometans, and are ſaid to have come originally from Arabia. Theſe, after having cut all the Portugueſe to Pieces, ſeized upon the Iſland. I have ſeen a Moſque which was formerly a Portugueſe Church.

BESIDES theſe Meſtizos, who are the real Poſterity of the Portugueſe, there are alſo others who take upon themſelves the Name of Topas. Theſe are the Parias, of whom mention has been already made. Theſe, whenever they turn Chriſtians, immediately wear Hats; whereby, from the loweſt and moſt contemptible Rank that is among the Indians, they are rais'd at once to the Quality of Senhor-Soldad, a Dignity of no ſmall Conſideration among the Chriſtians of the Country. They are, however, had in the utmoſt Contempt by the reſt of the Indians, who know very well, that moſt of them who embrace the Chriſtian Religion, are a Set of beggarly Wretches; for which Reaſon they give them the Name of Chriſtianos d'Aros, that is, Rice-Chriſtians, intimating thereby, that the ſole Motive of their changing their Religion, was in order to procure themſelves the Neceſſaries of Life with greater Eaſe, and to be ſure of having ſome Rice to eat, for we never hear of Bread in that Country. To ſpeak the Truth, I don't find that the Indians are ſo much to be blam'd upon that Account; for 'tis certain that thoſe Parias ſeldom ſcruple to do the vileſt Offices; and though they turn Chriſtians, that does not make them honeſter Men. They are very much addicted to Thieving, and when they cannot find an Opportunity of carrying off any Thing with their Hands, they will be ſure not to let it eſcape their Feet, which they employ with great Art and Dexterity. The Reader will undoubtedly be ſurpriz'd at what is here ſaid, nevertheleſs 'tis certainly Fact. If a Perſon happens to let fall a Piece of Silver, a Knife, or a Fork, and does not happen to perceive it immediately, theſe Parias, who generally go bare-footed, take it up very dextrouſly with their Toes; which being done, they lay their Hand behind them, and find out Means, by bending the Leg, to carry up to their Hand whatever they have thus taken up with their Foot. They carry on all this Hocus Pocus without ſtooping their Bodies in the leaſt; nay, they ſhall talk to you at the very Time that the Game is carrying on, eſpecially if 'tis in the Evening. One would imagine they thought it beneath them to work the Moment they turn Chriſtians. I heard a Man of Probity ſay, that happening to ſpeak one Day to a young Woman, who had been catch'd in the Exerciſe of a Trade which is very common in the Indies, and who, in all Likelihood, had done Something elſe, (for they don't puniſh any Body for the reſt) he ask'd her, Why ſhe did not work for her Livelihood? To which the young Woman, prodigiouſly ſurpriz'd at his Queſtion, anſwer'd, Why! I am a Chriſtian. A very pretty Reply!

Piece

Preparing the READER for the Knowledge of the following WORKE.

HAVING, by Gods Prouidence (who ſwayeth vs as it pleaſeth him to our ſeuerall Places of Being) gained a Charge of Soules in the Aduenture of the honourable Company of Merchants trading to the East-Indies, it happened that I was transferr'd from my Charge aboard the Shippe, to reſide in their prime Factorie in Guzzarat, in a Place called Surrat, with the Preſident ouer their Affaires in that Place, Mr. Tho. Kerridge; where according to the buſie Obſeruance of Trauailers, inquiring what Noueltie the Place might produce, a People preſented themſelues to mine Eyes, cloathed in Linnen Garments, ſomewhat low deſcending, of a Geſture and Garbe, as I may ſay, maidenly and well nigh effeminate; of a Countenance ſhy and ſomewhat eſtranged: yet ſmiling out a gloſed and baſhfull Familiarity, whoſe Vſe in the Companies Affaires occaſioned their Preſence there.

Truth to ſay, mine Eyes vnacquainted with ſuch Obiects, tooke up their Wonder and gazed; and this Admiration, the Badge of a freſh Trauailer, bred in me the Importunity of a Queſtioner: I asked what manner of People thoſe were, ſo ſtrangely notable, and ſo notably ſtrange? Reply was made, they were Banians, a People forraigne to the Knowledge of the Chriſtian World; their Religion, Rites, and Cuſtomes, ſparingly treated of by any, and they no leſſe reſerued in the Publication of them: But ſome Opinions they deriued from the Philoſopher Pythagoras, touching Tranſanimation of Soules. It was thought the Nouelty would make the Diſcouery thereof gratefull and acceptable to ſome of our Countrymen, that ſome of my Predeceſſors had beene ſcrutinous to bring this Religion to Light: But whether deterr'd with Fictions and Chymeraes, wherewith Banian Writings abound, that might make it vnworthy of Acceptation, or the Shyneſſe of the Bramanes, who will ſcarce admit a Stranger Conuerſation, the Worke was left to him that would make a Path through theſe Impediments.

A DISCOVERIE OF THE BANIAN RELIGION.

INTRODUCTION.

THE "Banians are a People of Eaſt-India, of whom "there are great Numbers in the Kingdom of Guzu-"rat or Cambaya. They are meanly cloathed, wear-"ing only a kind of Linen Surtout, that deſcends "pretty low; they have a ſimple and effeminate Mien, "and are look'd upon by the Mahometans in thoſe "Countries with pretty near the ſame Eye as the "Jews by the Chriſtians. They profeſs great Probity "and Sincerity, and having a very large Acquaintance "in thoſe Countries, are employed as Brokers, by "the Engliſh and Dutch Merchants, in buying and "ſelling their Commodities. However, we are aſſured, that notwithſtanding their "boaſted Simplicity, a Man muſt be upon his Guard whenever he has any Dealings "with them, and that they never fail to over-reach, whenever they can do it with "Impunity. All who have written on thoſe Countries mention their Religion; but "their Relations on this Head are ſo various, as plainly ſhows they knew very little "of the Matter, and that what little they did know was merely by hear-ſay: "So far were they from having diſcovered the Motives of their Worſhip, or Religious "Ceremonies."

CHAP. I.

Of God, the Creation of the World, the Creation of the firſt Man and Woman, and the Progeny from them deſcending, as it is by the Banians deliuered.

THE great God (ſay the Banians) being alone, bethought himſelfe how hee might make his Excellency and Power manifeſt to others; for his great Vertue had beene obſcured and hid, if it had not beene communicated to his Creatures. What Meanes might then bee better to giue Euidence of both theſe, than the Creation of a World, and Creatures therein?

FOR this Cauſe the Almighty conſulted with himſelfe, about the making of this great Worke, which Men call the World or Vniuerſe; and, as the Ancients (ſay they) haue deliuer'd, the Lord made foure Elements as the Ground-Worke of this mighty Frame; to wit, Earth, Aire, Fire, and Water: Which four Elements were at firſt all mingled together in a Confuſion, but the Almighty ſeparated them in the manner following.

FIRST, it is deliuered, that by ſome great Cane, or like Inſtrument, hee blew vpon the Waters, which aroſe into a Bubble, of a round Forme like an Egge, which ſpreading it ſelfe further and further, made the Firmament ſo cleare and tranſparent, which now compaſſeth the whole World about.

AFTER this, there remaining the Earth, as the Sediment of the Waters, and ſome liquid Subſtance with the ſame, the Lord made of both theſe together, a Thing round like a Ball, which he called the lower World, the more ſolid Part whereof became the Earth, the more liquid the Seas; both which making one Globe, he by a great Noyſe or humming Sound, placed them in the middeſt of the Firmament, which became æquidiſtant from it on euery Side.

THEN he created a Sunne and Moone in the Firmament, to diſtinguiſh the Times and Seaſons: And thus theſe foure Elements that were at firſt mixt together, became ſeparate, and aſſigned to their ſeuerall Places; the Aire to his Place, the Earth to his Place, the Water to his Place, and the Fire to his Place.

THESE Elements thus diſpoſed, each of them diſcharged his ſeueral Parts; the Aire filled vp whatſoeuer was emptie; the Fire began to nouriſh with his Heate; the Earth brought forth his liuing Creatures, and the Sea his. And the Lord conuey'd to theſe a ſeminall Virtue, that they might be fruitful in their ſeuerall Operations; and thus the great World was created.

THIS World, as it had its Beginning from foure Elements, ſo it was meaſured by foure main Points of the Compaſſe, Eaſt, Weſt, North, and South, and was to be continued for foure Ages, and to be peopled by foure Caſts or ſorts of Men, which were married to foure Women appointed for them, of which we ſhall ſpeake as Order may giue Occaſion.

GOD hauing thus made the World, and the Creatures thereto belonging, then God created Man, as a Creature more worthy than the reſt, and one that might be moſt capable pable of the Works of God. The Earth then did at God's Voyce and Command render this Creature from his Bowels, his Head firſt appearing; and after that his Body, with all the Parts and Members of the ſame, into whom God conuey'd Life; which as ſoone as he had received witneſſed it ſelfe: For Colour began to ſhew it ſelfe red in his Lippes, his Eye-Liddes began to diſcloſe the two Lights of Nature, the Parts of his Body bewray'd their Motion, and his Underſtanding being informed, hee acknowledged his Maker, and gaue him Worſhip.

THAT this Creature might not bee alone, who was made by Nature ſociable, God ſeconded him with a Companion, which was Woman; to whom not ſo much the outward Shape, as the Likeneſſe of the Minde and Diſpoſition, ſeemed agreeing: And the firſt Mans Name was Pourous, and the Womans Name was Parcoutee; and they liued conjoyned together as Man and Wife, feeding on the Fruites of the Earth, without the Deſtruction of any living Creature.

THESE two liuing in this Conjunction had four Sonnes; the firſt was called Brammon, the ſecond Cuttery, the third Shuddery, the fourth Wyſe. Theſe foure Brethren were of Natures diſtinct each from the other; the foure Elements claiming in each of them a different Predominance: For Brammon was of an earthly Conſtitution, and therefore Melancholly; and Cuttery was of a fiery Conſtitution, and therefore of a martiall Spirit. Shuddery was of a flegmaticke Conſtitution, and therefore of a peaceable or conuerſable Diſpoſition. Wyſe was of on ayery Temper, and therefore full of Contriuements and Inventions.

AND becauſe Brammon was of a melancholly Conſtitution, and ingenious, God indued him with Knowledge, and appointed him to impart his Precepts and Lawes vnto the People; his graue and ſerious Looke, beſt fitting him for ſuch a Purpoſe: For which Cauſe he gaue him a Booke, containing the Forme of Diuine Worſhippe and Religion.

AND becauſe Cuttery was of a martiall Temper, God gaue him Power to ſway Kingdomes with the Scepter, and to bring Men into Order, that the Weale Publicke might thriue by vnited Indeavours for the common Good: As an Embleme of which the Almighty put a Sword into his Hand, the Inſtrument of Victory and Domination.

AND becauſe Shuddery was of a Nature mild and conuerſeable, it was thought meete that he ſhould bee a Merchant, to inrich the Common-wealth by Trafficke, that ſo euery Place might abound with all Things, by the Vſe of Shipping and Navigation: As a Monitour to put him in Minde of which Courſe of Life, he had a Paire of Ballances put into his Hand, and a Bagge of Waights hung at his Girdle, Inſtruments moſt accommodate to his Profeſſion.

LASTLY, becauſe Wyſe was of an ayrey Temper, whoſe Conceipts vſe to be more ſubtle and apprehenſiue, he was indued with admirable Inventions, and was able by his firſt Thoughts, to forme any Thing that belonged to the Mechanicke or Handycrafts Man: For which Purpoſe hee had a Bagge of Tooles or Inſtruments, conſiſting of ſuch Variety, as were neceſſary to effectuate the Workes of Fancy or Conceipt.

THUS you haue the firſt Man and Woman, and the Progeny from them deſcending, according to the Banians Tradition; and a World to be raiſed of ſo few, the Perſons (as they thinke) could not be better fitted to the ſame, the whole World being, well conſidered, conſiſting of, and ſubſiſting by, ſuch four kinds of Men.

. THE World being in this Mayden Puritie, that the Generations of Men might not be deriued from a polluted Beginning of Mankinde, the Almighty gaue not Pourous and Parcoutee any Daughters, leaſt ſome of theſe foure Sonnes, preferring the Needs of Propagation before Piety and Religion, ſhould have defloured their Siſters, and haue blemiſh'd the World with Impurity: But providing a better for the Holineſſe and Sanctity of our Anceſtors, that the Worke of Generation might be agreeable to the Worke of Creation, God made foure Women, for theſe four Men, and placed them at the foure Windes, one at the Eaſt, another at the Weſt, a third at the North, and a fourth at the South; that thus being diuided, there might be a better Meanes for the ſpreading of their Generations ouer the Face of the Earth; with which foure Women how the foure Sonnes of the firſt Man met, ſhall be vnderſtood in the Sequeale of their ſeuerall Stories in the Chapters following.

CHAP. II.

Of BRAMMON the eldeſt Sonne of POUROUS; his Trauaile towards the Eaſt; he meeteth with the Woman appointed for him; the Paſſages that happened in their Accoaſt; their Marriage, and peopling the Eaſt.

THIS eldeſt Sonne of the firſt Man called Brammon, grewe in Stature, and had the Preheminence of his Birth, both in Place and in reſpect, aboue the reſt of his Brethren; as alſo in regard of his neere Relations to God in religious Scruices, was highly honoured of his Brethren, and was an Inſtructor vnto them; and the Almighty communicated himſelfe to him, in Preſence, and Viſion; he gaue himſelfe therefore much to Reading, and conuerſed with the Booke that God gaue him, containing the Platforme of diuine Worſhippe.

BEING therefore growne to Man's Age, and (as it ſhould appeare in Circumſtances) Man being created in the middeſt of the Earth, in ſome pleaſant Place, where the Sunne at high Noone depriued Subſtances of their Shadowes, (for it was fit that Man ſhould be produced out of ſuch a Place, as might be the Nauell of the World) God, who would now diſperſe the Brethren from the Center, as it were, to the Circumference, for Propagation, commanded Brammon to take his Booke in his Hand, wherein was written the diuine Law, and to direct his Journey towards the Riſing of the Sunne in the Eaſt.

As ſoone as that glorious Light of Heauen had diſcouered his Splendor from the Toppes of the Mountaines, he tooke his Iourney that way (for the Eaſt being the moſt noble Part of the World, it was likely that had the Preheminence in Plantation) vntil he arriued at a goodly Mountaine, before the proud Face whereof lay proſtrate a Valley, through which there paſſed a Brooke, in the Deſcent of which there appeared a Woman ſatisfying her Thirſt from the Streames of the Riuer; and they were both naked, Innocence not being then aſhamed to publiſh her Retyrements and Priuacies, nor hauing faulted ſo much with thoſe immodeſt Parts, as to neede a Shrowd to veile them from the Sight. This Woman was of Hair blacke, of Complexion yealowiſh, or ſaffrony, as on whoſe Face the Sunne had too freely caſt his Beames, the Remembrance of whoſe Heate, Heate, was too ſurely conſerued in her Countenance: She was indifferently ſized, whoſe Pitch could neither challenge the Name of Lowneſſe or high Stature; modeſt was her Aſpect, and her Eyes Indices of ſo melancholly Soberneſſe, and compoſed Lookes, as if ſhee ſeemed to be ſampled for him that met her.

BVT her Eyes vnaccuſtomed to view ſuch an Obiect, as was before her, hauing neuer ſeene a Creature of Proportion like her ſelfe, betwixt Wonder and Shame ſhee was vncertain whether ſhee ſhould flye, or pleaſe her Sight with ſuch a Viſion. But Brammon no leſſe abaſhed at ſuch Intruſion, which by retyring he could not well ſhunne, with a downe-caſt Countenance ſuppreſſed with Shame, they both aboad one another's Preſence, with tongue tyed Silence; whoſe Backwardneſs gaue Incouragement to the Woman to queſtion the Cauſe of his coming thither: Who anſwered, That by the Command of him who had made the World, him, her, and all Creatures viſible, together with the Light that gaue them the Comfort of their Meeting, he was ſent thither. The Woman, to whom God had given that Vnderſtanding, to be capable of the Properneſſe of his Speech, and inquiring further into this Accident, ſaid that there was an Agreement in their Likeneſſe, and Compoſition, that declared they had one Maker; that it may be, he that had made them, and had his Ends in their Diſpoſall, had thus brought them together, that ſome neerer Bond might make them inſeparable from each other's Society: And caſting her Eye vpon the Booke that Brammon bare in his Hand, asked what it was; who acquainting her with the Contents thereof, was deſired to ſit down, and communicate the religious Counſels of the ſame vnto her; whereunto he condeſcended; and being both perſwaded that God had a Hand in this their Meeting, they tooke Counſell from this Booke, to binde themſelues together in the inuoilable Bond of Marriage, and with the Courteſies interceding betwixt Man and Wife, were lodged in one another's Boſom: for ioy whereof, the Sunne put on his nuptiall Luſtre, and looked brighter than Ordinary, cauſing the Seaſon to ſhine vpon them with golden Ioy; and the ſiluer Moon welcomed the Euening of their Repoſe, whilſt Muſicke from Heaven (as if God's Purpoſe in them had been determinate) ſent forth a pleaſing Sound; ſuch as vſeth to fleete from the loud Trumpet, together with the Noyſe of the triumphant Drumme. Thus prooving the Effects of Generation together, they had fruitful Iſſue, and ſo peopled the Eaſt; and the Woman's Name was Sauatree.

CHAP. III.

Of CVTTERY the ſecond Sonne of POVROVS, his Trauaile, and the meeting hee had with the Woman appointed for him; their Conflict, Appeaſement, Conjunction, and the peopling of the Weſt by them.

SVCCESSIVELY the ſecond Brother Cuttery, was by the Almighty conſigned to the Weſt, about the Charge of making Men; ſo taking the Sword in his Hand, that God had giuen him, the Inſtrument, on whoſe Edge lay the Hopes of a Kingdome, rowſing vp his Courage, which hitherto wanted Occaſion of Exerciſe, from the Heart and Boſome of the Earth, in which his Youth had converſed, he turned his Backe on the Riſing Sunne euery Morning, whoſe ſwifter Courſe ouertook him, and euery Day in his Decline preſented himſelf in his Setting Glory before him. As he thus tratrauailed towards the Weſt, he chafed with himſelf as he paſſed along, that no Aduenture preſented it ſelf, that might prouoke him to giue a Probate of his Courage; wiſhing that an Army of Men, or a Troope of wild Beaſts, would oppoſe him, that hee might ſtrowe the Surface of the Earth with dead Carkeyſes, and give the Fowles of Heaven Fleſh to feede on. And not knowing to what Purpoſe God had directed him to bend his Courſe that way, as only ſenſible of his owne heroicke Stomacke, hee ſaid, To what End hath God infuſed ſuch Magnanimity into my Breaſt, if it ſhall want a Subject whereon to worke my Glory and Renowne? Shall I loſe the End of my Creation? God forbid.

THUS carried on with the Hopes of ſome Aduenture, he intended that whatſoeuer ſhould firſt cope with him, ſhould haue Senſe of his Fury; when being come to a Mountaine, whoſe Height might make Things far diſtant viſible to the Eye, he might perceiue a Creature of goodly Perſonage, like himſelf, ſtalking forward with a martiall Steppe, no leſſe ſlowe then maieſticke in Pace; which two approaching, as deſirous to make Experiment of each other's Fortitude vpon their meeting together, it appeared to bee a Woman, whoſe Treſſes in a comely Fertility hung downe by her Shoulders, which by Motion of the Ayre, turned into a careleſſe Diſorder; euery Blaſt that made an Alteration in the ſame, gaue a new Grace to her excellent Perſon, and made her Preſence more full of Majeſty. In her Right Hand ſhee bare a Chuckerey, which is an Inſtrument of a round Forme, and ſharpe edged in the Superficies thereof, ſo accommodate for Offence, that by a Hole in the middeſt thereof, being whirld about the Finger, and flung off, in the Quickneſſe of his Motion, it is able to deliuer or conuey Death to a farre remote Enemy. Courage diſplayed his Banner in her Countenance, and maieſticke Fury ſparkled in her Eyes, bearing Witneſſe how much ſhe thirſted after Conqueſt; and the Woman's Name was Toddicaſtree.

IN the firſt Encounter ſhe made her Chuckerey beare the Meſſage of her Diſpleaſure, giuing Entertainement with the Inſtrument of Battell, which was ſuch as Cuttery expected; and no kinder Behauiour did he intend to proffer, as preferring the harſh Effects of Violence, before the mollifying Power of Beauty. With this hard Greetingdid they paſſe the firſt Day, giuing Wounds on each Side, ſhee with her Chuckerey, he with his Sword; both being much ſpent in the Conflict, and often breathing when Extreamity of Exerciſe had languiſhed their Powers, they renewed their Battell by freſh Aggreſſion and Onſet, till Darkneſſe did prohibit the Vſe of Armes, leaving the firſt Day as an indifferent Arbiter of the Battell, neither of them able to boaſt of Aduantage.

THE Light of the next Day inuiting them to a new Experiment of Valour, they accoaſt one another, renewing the Remembrance of their Iniuries with ſecond Attempts of Violence: The Day well neere ſpent in Fight, Cuttery gaining ſome Aduantage, with his Sword hewed her Chuckerey in two Pieces; but fauourable Darkneſſe looking with a partiall Eye on the Battell, and patronizing the Diſaduantaged, ſhaded the Woman with her broken Inſtrument from the Purſuer; by the Benefit of which Intermiſſion, ſhe conuerted her broken Chuckerey into a Bowe, hauing prouided Arrowes to requite the Force of the Aduerſary, by this newe Stratageme, who was now bigge with the Hopes of her Ouerthrow.

THE Light being the beſt Herauld they had to call them to Battell, a third Time they met, hopefull to conclude this ſtrange Duelle or ſingle Combat, which vrged on her Side by her new inuented Inſtrument, and on his by the Thought of former Aduantage gained, made the Aſſault more vehement; making therefore her Enemy the Butte into whom ſhe meant to transfix her pointed Shafts, ſhe freſhly encountered him. But he perceiuing her Aduantage, whoſe Power was to wound farre off, and his Iniuries were moſt forceable in little Diſtance, expoſing himſelfe to greater Perill, that he might be Owner of of a greater Aduantage, drew neerer, and in a Cloze, exchanging the Loſſe of Weapons for Hand Violence, they thus proued their Forces together, Wearineſſe hauing abated their Vigours ſo equally, that neither of them was ſo ſtrong to ouercome, nor ſo weak to yeeld; the Ballance of Victory ſo juſtly poyſed betweene them, as inclined with Partiality to neither, it was fit the Tongue ſhould conclude that Warre, that the Power of the Hand was no longer able to proſecute.

HEREUPON, in this doubtfull Strife, Cuttery hauing ſeazed her by the Treſſes of her Haire to bring her to Bondage, and Exerciſe hauing put a freſh and liuely colour in her Cheekes, ſuch as in Cuttery's Eyes, made her rather ſeeme louely, than one to be iniured, he ſaid, O thou Wonder of liuing Creatures for Strength and Beauty, why ſhould Fury manage ſo ſtrange a Contention betweene vs two? If I ſhould in this Combate haue ſlaine thee, I ſhould haue curſt this Right Hand, for bearing an Inſtrument to ruine ſo goodly a Proportion; and if thou hadſt ſlaine me, thou ſhouldſt but haue laboured with Anguiſh of Soule for thine owne Diſcontent, and Diſcomfort, who knoweſt not what Pleaſure thou mayſt reape by my Society. Why ſhould one excellent Creature ſeek the Ruine of another? Will there not be one the Leſs? And thy Being will bee nothing augmented by my Diſannulment. Did God to this End conferre Boldneſſe on vs, to make it the Cauſe of one anothers Perdition, who are both worthy of Preſeruation? Surely Courage in thee ſhall bee nothing impaired by my Friendſhippe and Ayde, but vnited Vertues make moſt powerfull Aſſaults, and are beſt Muniments againſt Injurie. Beſides, the World, now an Infant, and of ſhort ſtanding, ought rather by all Meanes to haue her Iſſue multiplyed, than impayred or diminiſhed: Eſpecially Selfeloue binds vs to ſtudy our owne Preſeruations. To which ſince Vnity did beſt conferre, he would not follow the Humour of his high Spirit to ſeeke Glory ſo wickedly and unworthily, if hee might purchaſe that Peace hee ſought by any reaſonable Conceſſion.

THE Woman attentiue to the Motion, proſecuted with ſo faire a Carriage, after ſome Pauſe of Silence, and Deiection of Countenance, that gaue conſent to Baſhfulneſſe, replyed, that though the Markes of his Violence were before her Eyes, whoſe Anguiſh were ſufficient to maintaine the Fuell of further Paſſion, yet in that he which had felt Tryall of like Rage, had firſt broke of Violence, ſhee gaue ſo good an Eare to the Motion as the ſhort Time of deſiſting might permit; affirming, that ſhee was ſo farre content to ſuſpend ſuch Paſſages, as he continuing that peaceable Treaty, ſhould make his Company acceptable, otherwiſe to renew the ſame Violence as ſhee found iuſt Occaſion of Provocation.

THUS with plighted Hands, the Forme of their new made Amity, they became of inteſtine Enemies, reconciled and amourous Friends; till prompt and intelligible Nature, apprehenſiue of her owne Ends, through ſome longer Conuerſation together, made them proue the Difference of their Sexe, from whom plentifull Generations were deſcended, indued with the Fortitude of ſuch as are truly warlike. And thus the Weſt came to be peopled from theſe two, from whoſe Enmities Loue wrought ſo perfect and unexpected Agreement.

CHAP. IV.

Of SHUDDERY the third Sonne of POUROUS, his Travaile; he findeth a Mine of Diamonds, meeteth the Woman appointed for him; they become conioyned together, and by their Iſſue the North is peopled.

THE third Sonne Shuddery, which was the Merchant Man, according to his Time and Age, was ſent to the North, who taking his Ballance and Waights with him, the Inſtruments by whoſe Iuſtice he was to buy and ſell, tended thither whither the Almighty had directed him. Hauing paſſed on ſome Part of his Way, (as buſie Nature loues to be in Imployment) hee deſired he might meete with ſome Affaire or Buſineſſe, ſuiting with his trafficking Diſpoſition.

AND being come to a goodly Mountaine, called Stachalla, there fell immoderate and exceſſive Raines, he ſheltring himſelfe in ſome hollow Place of the Mountaine, till the foule Weather was paſt, vpon which there followed a Cleareneſſe of the Skies, but ſuch a Deluge ſucceed vpon the fall of thoſe Waters, that his Iourney was prohibited; for the Riuers not able to containe the Streames that had in rowling Currents from the Tops of the ſteepe Mountaines, deuolued into their Channels belowe, began to make Breaches in their Bankes; and returning their Burthen into the lower Grounds, had turned the Valley of Stachalla into a broad Riuer vnpaſſable. Shuddery therefore reſted in the Hollow of this Mountaine, till the Weather might be more propitious to his Trauaile intended: When in ſome Days the faire Weather had made the thirſty Earth to drinke vp Part of the Waters, the Sunne to dry vp the other Part, and ſome were left to inherit the lower Grounds, ſo that the Way being free for him ouer the Valley, he paſſed on; but in the Bottome of the Valley, he found certaine Pearle Sheles, that had their pretious Treaſure within, which diuiding to bee made capable of their Contents, he found in them, that which contented his Eyes with their ſhining, and promiſed in their Beauties ſomething worth the Prizing and Preſeruation (though he was as yet altogether ignorant of their Worth and Value:) ſo folding them vp he renewed his Trauaile, till he come to a Mountaine on the other Side of the Valley, where the Mountaine, hee, and darke Night, mett all together.

BUT as if the Pearles had but borne the Meſſage to him of a greater Fortune, a Rocke or Mine of Diamonds diſcouered it ſelfe to his ſight, which the late waſhing of the Waues had beene as a Midwife to bring to Light, as if it had beene vnfit ſo great Riches ſhould bee treaſured vp in Darkneſſe, in the Armes of ſo courſe an Element; which Myne taking Aduantage by the Darkneſſe of the Heavens, the better to ſet of his ſparkling Luſtre, ſeemed to invite Shuddery to come and take Knowledge off its admirable Shining, who ſuppoſing it to be Fire, began to mooue the looſe Sparkles of the ſame; but perceiuing their Glory nothing to decreaſe by their Motion, grew enkindled with a great Deſire to proue the Strangeneſſe of the Accident, by the touching of his Finger: But the Darkneſſe and his Vnacquaintance with the Thing, rather begetting Admiration, then right Information of his Knowledge, (ſince it had the Light of Fire, but wanted the Heate) he was content with a patient Aboade to awaite the Dayes Light, to give him better Inſtruction concerning theſe Myſteries; which no ſooner appeared, but theſe Diamonds concealed their Glory, affoording only a wateriſh coloured Beauty to the Eye. The Diſannulment of this

Luſtre

Luſtre amazed him as much as the Preſentation thereof made him admire. But deſirous to haue this Excellency made knowne to Mankinde, that ſeemed ſo wonderfull to himſelfe, hee carried ſo great a Quantity of the Diamonds with him, as might be no Impediment to him in the bearing, taking a remarkeable Obſeruation of the Place, that hee might thereunto repayre vpon better Proofe of the Diamonds Excellence and Worth.

THUS Shuddery continuing his Progreſſe forward, at laſt arriued where the Woman to which hee was ſent, was wandering by the Side of a Woode, cloſe adjoyning whereunto was an euen Plaine, through which hee made his Path; of whom when his Eyes had gained Sight, and that ſhe preſented a Perſon formed like himſelfe, he diuerted from his Way towards her, to gaine more perfect Knowledge of her; ſhe no leſſe filled with Wonder and Deſire in the View of him, yet ſometimes poſſeſſed with Feare, ſometimes with Joy, ſometimes with Shame, in the Variety of Paſſions, purpoſing many Things, but really proſecuting nothing. Shuddery at length accoaſted her, whoſe Approach ſhe receiued doubtfully, as if ſhe ſought a Meanes of Euaſion into the Woode; at which he ſaid, Oh thou worthy Creature, moſt like vnto myſelfe, fly me not, who haſt Cauſe to loue me, becauſe I reſemble thee; ſhunne not the Conuerſation of him that followeth thee not to giue thee Diſpleaſure, but that hee might enjoy thy Society. Things that haue Reſemblance in Shape, ſhould imbrace Conſortſhip.

THE Woman then, whoſe Name was Viſagundah, perceiuing by the Slowneſſe of his Pace, that he rather ſeemed to be a Suer to her, then a Purſuer of her, by the Retardation of her Flight, witneſſing her Contentment to ſtay, if ſhee might preſume of her Safety, thus replyed to his Words, That if ſhee could as much preſume of his good Vſage, as ſhee was contented to behold him, ſhee would grant his Requeſt; who giuing her Aſſurance thereof, they entertained Conference with each other: Shee mouing the Queſtion, How it might be that they two could be capable of one anothers Language, hauing neuer before ſeene each other, he made anſwer, That that God that had made them like in Bodies, had alſo made them like in Languages, that they might receiue the Comfort of one anothers Speeches, and be acquainted with one anothers Thoughts, without which Conuerſation ſhould loſe the greateſt Part of his Comfort.

SO receiving ſtronger Gages of each others Loue, they continued together, hee not vnmindful to impart the Fortunes of his Trauailes in finding of Pearles and Diamonds, wherewith he adorn'd her, till they in future Times became a cuſtomary Ornament, as alſo acquainting her with the Worke of the Creation, together with his Parents and Brethren, they proued the Comforts of the conioyned State; from whom a Generation deſcended, that became Merchantmen, and followed Shudderies Profeſſion, who with ſome of his Sonnes, did afterwards trauaile to the Myne of Diamonds by him diſcouer'd, and ſtored themſelues with them, which euer ſince haue beene Merchandize of deere Eſtimation; and thus the North became inhabited.

CHAP. V.

Of Wyſe the fourth Sonne of Pourous, his Trauailes ouer ſeuen Seas, his Architecture, hee meeteth with the Woman appointed, his Reuelations touching Religion, Conſummation of Loue with the Woman, and their peopling of the South.

THEN Wyſe the youngeſt of the foure Brethren went to the North, hauing Inſtruments neceſſary with him to effectuate any Thing that his well conceipted Inuention could find out; therefore whatſoeuer was conuenient for Mans Vſe, hee had a Braine to thinke and contriue, that ſo the Needes of the World might be ſerued by the Deuiſes of his ingenious Fancy or Conceipt. Thus he became the Original of the Handy-Crafts; for hee knew how to reare the Buildings of Townes, Cities, or Caſtles; to ſet, plant, and till the Ground; how to make all Things needfull for the Vſe of Man; which various Diſpoſition of his to mediate Things for Mans Conuenience, gaue him the Name of Viskermah, which is as much as the Handſman, becauſe he could do any Thing to be done by the Hand.

BEING indued with a Genius fit for Plantations, he (directed by God) trauailed towards the South, where he met with ſeuen Seas, all which he paſſed ouer, framing a Veſſell for his Conuoy, and leauing in euery Place Teſtimonies of his Ingenuity; and paſſing ouer the laſt called Paſhcurbatee, he came to the Land call'd Derpe; there by the Sea-Side he built him a faire Houſe of ſuch Timber as grew by the Place, hauing Engines of Art, to reare vp Timber. Thus hauing made a comely Habitation, with Roomes lightſome, and broad Tarraſſes or Roofes aloft, for Pleaſure and Proſpect delightfull, where he might ſometimes pleaſe his Eyes with the rowling Sea, which with renewed Aſſaults ſmote againſt the Bankes of the Shoare, and directing his Sight the other Way, might behold the pleaſant Woods and Fieldes, he thus for a Time ſolaced himſelfe after tedious Trauaile.

BUT not long had hee tooke ſuch Comfort as his ſolitary Condition could affourd him, but the Woman appointed for him, wandering through the Woods to the Sea-Side, and paſſing along the Shoare thereof, ſet her Eyes vpon this new Edifice; and hauing neuer beheld any before, the Rarity of it drew her neerer to ſatisfie her Admiration with the View of the ſame; on whom Wyſe chancing to caſt his Eye, as ſhee thus came to looke on his Habitation, he deſcended to take a fuller Contemplation of her Beauty, whoſe Feature deſerued his better Notice; for ſhee was of Body amiably white, and her Treſſes were ſcatter'd with pouder'd Saunders, and other Odors, the Scent of which the Blaſts of the Winde diſperſed in ſuch Manner, that he became Partaker of them by his Approach, which enkindled his Senſes with new Deſires to be neerer her, who at ſuch Diſtance gaue him a Smell of ſo great Sweetneſſe; whoſe Approach ſtrucke her into a Bluſh, but her Shame giuing Place, ſhe moued the Queſtion to him, How he came to that Place where ſhe only had liued, to interrupt her in her free Walkes and Wanderings? He made anſwer, That God the Maker of Light, that makes all Obiects viſible, had ſent him thither to admire her Excellency, which was ſo rare, that it was not fit it ſhould bee ſhaded in a Place ſo ſolitary, but had reſerued it as a Bleſſing for his Eyes to view and admire; and becauſe it was pitty Deſolation and Lonelyneſſe ſhould bee a Waſter and Obſcurer of ſuch Louelyneſſe, neſſe, hee had with hazard of his Life aduentured ouer ſeuen Seas, to be bleſt with the Enjoyment thereof; a Labour and Trauaile worthy of ſo rich a Recompence, and a worthy Recompence and Satisfaction for ſuch a Labour; hee intreated her therefore to accept of ſuch a Bleſſing as God had prouided for her by his Society.

BUT ſhe that could not be brought to thinke of a Courſe of Life different from her former, told him that in his Abſence ſhee found no need of his Preſence, neither did ſhe at that preſent ſtand inclined to accept of his Motion; that therefore he would leaue her to the Liberty of her own free Diſpoſe. He, loath to loſe the Happineſſe of his Eyes, importuned her to view the Roomes of his Building, as if he meant to wooe her with the faire Workes of his Handes; but ſhe taking his Importunity in euil Part, told him, that if hee deſired her not to ſhunne the Place, hee would diſmiſſe her freely; ſo turning from him with ſome Diſpleaſure, becauſe ſhee was by him unwillingly detained, ſhe fled from him with coye Diſtaſte, he almoſt expiring with the Sadneſſe of her Departure, whoſe Preſence he could not purchaſe and his Pleaſure therein without her Anger.

SHE hauing rob'd his Eyes of that Sight, that they would neuer willingly haue loſt, hee committed himſelfe to the Racke of penſiue Meditations, broke the quiet Slumbers of Repoſe, thinking Darkneſſe vnfauorable to him that ſuſpended and prorogued the chearfull Day from his Appearance, in which hee might renew his Viſitations of her; ſo trauerſing the Woods to and fro, he at laſt came into a Valley, where he found her cropping the Flowers, and gratifying her Senſes with their ſeueral Odours; on whom intruding ere ſhee well perceiued, he ſaid, Oh ſweeter than all Flowers or Scents that the Field can boaſt of, whoſe Louelineſſe hath drawne me to make proffer of new Kindneſſe, fly me not who haſt had a former Tryall of my Behauiour towards thee; ſo bearing with his Preſence, he tooke Occaſion to make knowne to her the Creation of the World, and the Parents from whence he was deſcended, the Diſperſing of his Brethren into the ſeueral Parts of the World, the Hardneſſe and Hazard of his Voyages, the Qualities with which he was indued, and the ſeueral Monuments of his Art, which hee had left in the Places where hee had beene. Further, he conceiued that the Power aboue had not prompted him with the ieopardy of a thouſand Lives to cut a Path through ſeven rugged Seas in a floating Habitation, but euen to that End that the Bitterneſſe of all thoſe Euils might be ſweetened by his Enjoyment of her.

SHE, deſirous to breake off this Speech, as vngratefull to her Eares, turned backe this Diſcourſe, deſiring him to take his Contentments elſewhere than in queſt after her; that if ſhe could preuaile with him in any Requeſt, it ſhould be in this, to leave her, and neuer after to diſturbe her with ſuch Motions. So both departed, ſhe in Diſdaine, he in Sadneſſe and Sorrow, for ſuch Diſmiſſion; giving him onely this as a doubtfull Comfort at their parting, that if ſhe found herſelfe inclined to his Society, ſhe knew where to finde him, and to manifeſt to him ſuch Alteration.

VPON this hauing left the Place that contained his Bliſſe, with oppreſſed Thoughts, he was no ſooner got into a priuate Place that might ſeeme as Counſell-Keeper to his Paſſions, but hee humbled himſelfe vnder the greene Trees, and ſaid, O thou to whom belongs the Acknowledgment of my Being, I haue by thy Guidance forſaken the Society of my Parents, whom I know not whether I ſhall euer behold againe, as alſo the Fellowſhip of my Brethren; I haue coped with as many Hazards as can make Trauaile bitter and diſcomfortable; I haue left Company to come into Solitude; nay, which is worſe, to behold one that might giue me the wiſhed Comforts of Society, by her Refuſall to adde Degrees to my Sorrow. Oh make not voide the Ende of my Being! giue not ſuch an euil Recompence to my Aduentures! bury not all theſe Qualities ties thou haſt put in this Eſſence, by this one Diſaſter. Witneſſe oh ye Heauens, vnder whoſe azured Roofe I now am, the Sorrow I ſuffer, and witneſſe oh ye greene Trees, that if you were ſenſible of my Complaint, would ſpend yourſelues in gummy Teares, what Agony perplexeth mee! And if the Maker of Creatures ouerlooke his Workes, let him now appeare and redreſſe the Miſeries of his Seruant.

WITH that a ſtill and quiet Ayre breath'd through the Leaues of the Trees, and a Voyce iſſued thereupon, and ſaid, What requireſt thou, oh thou Son of Pourous? And Wyſe made Anſwer, That he onely deſir'd that the Woman with whom he had met, might affoord him the Comforts of Society in the Copulations of Marriage; which Requeſt was granted on theſe Iniunctions, that he ſhould erect Pagods for God's Worſhippe, and adore Images under greene Trees, becauſe God had vnder them manifeſted himſelfe by Viſion to him.

So Ieiunogundah (for ſo was the Woman called) feeling the Motions of Affection to renewe in her, at the next Meeting gaue ſuch Expreſſions of Loue to Wyſe, as fully accompliſh'd his Demaund: So conuerſing together, they made good the nuptial Ends, in a fruitfull Generation. So the South as the other Parts of the World became inhabited.

CHAP. VI.

Of the meeting together of the foure Brethren at the Place of their Birth; their Diuiſions and Diſſentions; the great Euils amongſt their Generations bringing a Flood which deſtroyeth them, and ſo the firſt Age of the World concludeth.

EVERY Thing by naturall Motion paſſeth to his owne Place; ſo the Brethren hauing peopled the World in theſe foure Parts, turne their Courſe to the Place where they firſt breathed their vital Ayre; for Brammon hauing peopled the Eaſt, with all ſuch as was of his Caſt or Tribe, was carried with a naturall Deſire to go and conclude his Dayes where he began, and to poſſeſſe the People of that Place with the true forme of diuine Worſhippe, that ſo all the World might retaine one Vniformity of Religion, not rending God's Worſhip into Parts with the Factions of vnſettled Opinions, as alſo not willing to loſe ſo great a Joy as his Eies ſhould conuey unto him in the Sight of his Parents and his Brethren, to the former of which Religion had enioyn'd him, to the latter all the Expreſſions of a Brother's Loue.

CUTTERY alſo, the next that had accompliſht the End of his Trauaile, began to long after the Sight of the Place that brought him forth, that he might there to his Father, Mother, and Brethren, ſhew the Bleſſings of God, in his Wife and Progeny, and acquaint them with the Story of his Occurencies, and leaue a Race of Souldiers there alſo in his Poſterity.

SHUDDERY, turned alſo by the ſame Inclination, had his Deſires bent to his Birth-Place, being bigge with the Eminency of his accidentall Fortunes, which had loſt their Greatneſſe, if his Parents and Brethren had loſt the Knowledge of them, to feede which Humour, as accompanied with other Reſpects, formerly mentioned, drew him to give his Appearance among the reſt.

LASTLY, Wyſe, to communicate his Arts, whoſe aduenturous Trauaile was no leſſe memorable than the reſt, tranſporting his Sonnes and Daughters ouer the ſeueral Seas, left them in ſeueral Places, and repaired to his Birth-Place, to pay his Duty to his Parents, and his Loue to his Brethren.

IT ſo happen'd that God, that would not croſſe any Part of their Intentions with euill Succeſſe, did reſerue them to finde the Happineſſe of their Meetings in their ſeueral Turnes and Succeſſions, as their Workes were in order accompliſh'd, their ſeueral Arriuals being congratulated with Feaſtings and Triumphs, meete welcome for ſuch Gueſts. It was not to be doubted but Pourous and Parcoutee grew young againe, hauing ſuch a Seaſon of Happineſſe reſerv'd to ſmile vpon them towards the Sunſet of their Age, ſuch as were able to make their forewaſted Powers, ſpent with Yeeres to renew their Vigour; euery one of them when their Ioye grew ſtale, giuing a freſh Renewance of Gladneſſe to their Parents, by their ſucceſſiue Arriual. Neither could it bee imagin'd but that the Brethren accounted that the bleſſed Time that loſt all Remembrance of Trouble, which wee thinke too importunate a Diſturber of our Ioyes.

BUT Ioye is neuer of long laſting, but after the Paſſage of little Time hath his Abatement: This the Brethren being ſenſible of, laid aſide the Thoughts of their Trauailes, and the Remembrance of their late Comforts, and as Men newly tranſplanted to bring forth the Fruites of their being in that Place, begetting new Generations there, that the World might bee compleately populous, and inſtructed in their ſeueral Qualities; by Brammon in Matters of Religion; by Cuttery in Matters of Rule and Domination; by Shuddery in Matters of Trafficke and Merchandizing; and by Wyſe in the Inuention of the Handycrafts, of which foure Caſts the World conſiſted, euery one of them liuing in his ſeueral Qualitie, keeping his Tribe free from Confuſion or enterfeering, and thus the World became peopled.

BUT Multitude and Concourſe that vſeth to be the Nurſe of Miſchiefe; for where there are many Men there will be many Euils, and Proſperity, that makes vs forgetfull of ourſelues; and Length of Time, that renders to us the worſt at our latter Endings; began to confound all Goodneſſe, and turne euery Thing out of Order; for Brammon grew neglectiue of his Piety, and Cuttery grew cruell and full of Vſurpation; and Shuddery grew deceiptfull in the Waights and Ballances, and practiſed Coſenage amongſt his Brethren; and Wyſe loſt his Conſcience in his Dealings, and became a Spend-Thrift, making the Profits that came by his Inuentions, but the Furtherers of Riot and Exceſſe; and as they were thus euill in themſelves, ſo they were euill one towards another; for Brammon ſtomacked Cutterey's Greatneſſe; and Cuttery forgat to giue Brammon the Preheminence of his Birth, and as if his Might had been ſufficient to giue him the Right of Priority, placing all Excellency in Rule and Authority, condemn'd the ſtill and ſolitary Spirit of his Brother, as vnworthy of Reſpect and Eminence, yea prized his owne Lawes and Government before God's Lawes, becauſe they came from Brammon, whom he diſeſteemed. On the other Side, hee pleaſed himſelfe with the Slaughter of thoſe that diſpleaſed him, layd Taxations vpon Shuddery, and drayned the Profit of Wyſe's Labours, and like a great Tide made all runne along with his owne Current, whilſt they requite his Iniuries in Coſenage and griping vpon their Brethren in Fraud and Circumuention; theſe Euils of Example were Seedes of Wick-ędneſſe, that no doubt would grow in their Poſterity. And this Diſſention among themſelues did boade a Breach of that ſweete Harmonie that concurred to the World's firſt Conſtitution.

Wyse likewiſe ſeeing Brammon to loſe his Reſpect, the more to make him deſpiſed ſought to bring in a new Forme of Religion, communicated to him in Viſion concerning the Worſhippe of Images, and bowing to Pagods vnder greene Trees, with other new Ceremonies; which ſince Brammon's Booke contained not, the Diſpute was great whether they ſhould be receiued as canonicall, but vpon Wyſe's Aſſeueration that they were receiued from God, they were receiued as Part of the ceremoniall Law.

Thus euery Day preſenting new Platformes of Wickedneſſe, and Sinnes that made a Noyſe, God grew angry, and the Heauens were cloathed with Blackneſſe and Terror, the Seas began to ſwell as if they meant to ioyne with the Cloudes in Man's Deſtruction, great Noyſe was heard aloft, ſuch as vſeth to diſmay mortal Wretches, and Thunder and Lightning flaſhed from the Poles, ſuch as ſeemed to threaten a finall Wracke to the Earth; but as if the World needed cleanſing of his Defilement and Pollution, there came a Flood, that couered all Nations in the Depths. Thus the Bodies had their Iudgement, but the Soules were lodged in the Boſome of the Almighty, and ſo concluded the firſt Age of the World, according to the Tradition of the Banians.

CHAP. VII.

Of the ſecond Age of the World, begunne by Bremaw, Vyſtney, and Ruddery; of their Creation, Aſſignation to their ſeuerall Workes; their Time of Continuation upon the Earth, and the Meanes vſed for the Reſtauration of the World againe.

It had now (ſaith the Banian) beene to little End for God to diſanull his owne Creatures, for now his Wiſedome and Power muſt haue again layne obſcured; but though his Iuſtice were ſo great that he would not let Wickedneſſe goe vnpuniſhed, yet he would againe haue a World of new Creatures, to whom his Wiſdome, Power, and Mercy might be declared.

Seeing therefore the firſt Age miſcarried by their Sinfulneſſe, (for whoſe Purity God had ſo well prouided) the Almighty determined to beginne the ſecond Age by three Perſons of greater Perfection and Excellency than the other, called, Bremaw, Vyſtney, and Ruddery.

The Almighty therefore deſcending from Heauen vpon a great Mountaine, called Meropurbatee, vpon the Top of the ſame the Lord pronounced his Word, and ſaid, Riſe vp Bremaw, the firſt of liuing Creatures in the ſecond Age. The Earth did then render from her Wombe Bremaw at the Voyce of God, who did acknowledge and worſhippe his Maker: And by a ſecond and third Command from the ſame Place, raiſed Vyſtney, and Ruddery, who with no leſſe Reverence adored their Maker likewiſe.

BVT God that maketh nothing without his Vſe or End, did not make theſe to liue idle, but to be ſerviceable in the World's reſtoring; to the firſt therefore, which was Bremaw, hee gaue the Power to make the Creatures, becauſe (ſay the Banians) as great Perſons doe not their Worke but by Deputies, ſo neither was it fit God ſhould be ſeruile to the Creatures, but giue them their Being by his Inſtruments. To the ſecond, which was Vyſtney, hee gaue the Charge to preſerue the Creatures, for that as it was his Mercy to cauſe them to bee, ſo it was his Prouidence to keepe them in their Being. But to the third, which was Ruddery, hee gaue Power to deſtroy his Creatures, becauſe he knew they would bee wicked and deſerue a Iudgement amongſt them.

Now as God had giuen to theſe Perſons Power to doe theſe great Workes, ſo it was meete they ſhould be fitted with Meanes capable for the Diſcharge of their ſeuerall Charges. That Bremaw therefore might haue Power to make the Creatures, he indued him with the Abilities of Creation and Production. Secondly, that Vyſtney might preſerue the Creatures, the Lord gaue all Things into his Power, that might tend to the Preſeruation of thoſe that Bremaw ſhould make, therefore hee made him Lord of the Sunne and Moone, of the Cloudes, Showers, and Dewes that fall vpon the Earth, Lord of the Hills and Valleies, Diſpoſer of the Changes of the Yeare, the Conferrer of Riches, Health, and Honour, and whatſoeuer tended to the well Being of Man, and the reſt of the Creatures. Laſtly, that Ruddery might bee a fit Executioner of God's Iuſtice, God gaue into his Poſſeſſion whatſoeuer might tend to the Deſtruction of liuing Creatures; therefore Ruddery was made the Lord of Death and Iudegment, and whatſoeuer might tend to the Puniſhment of Man, whether it were Sickneſſe, Famine, Warre, or Peſtilence, or any Thing elſe that might bee a Plague for Sinne.

ACCORDING alſo to the ſeuerall Aſſignations of theſe Perſons to their particuler Charges, they were allotted a determinate Time of abiding vpon Earth. Becauſe the Work of the Creation was concluded in the ſecond of their Ages (which was a Worke aſſigned to Bremaw) therefore Bremaw was to be taken vp to the Almighty in the Concluſion of the ſecond Age. And becauſe the other Ages were multiplied with People by ſome that were reſerued from Deſtruction, therefore Viſtney was kept on Earth till he had doubled Bremaw's Tearme of Time, as of whoſe Preſeruation there was longer neede. And becauſe the World ſhould End in Deſtruction, therefore the Continuance of Ruddery was three Times ſo long, that when the great Day of Iudgement ſhould come, he might deſtroy all the Bodies, and carry the Soules with him to the Place of Glory.

NOVGHT wanted now, but that they ſhould euery one in their ſeuerall Turnes ſhew the Powers conferred vpon them. So Bremaw conſulting with himſelfe, how he might fulfill the Charge impoſed vpon him, grew extraordinarily afflicted in his Body, the Strangeneſſe of which Anguiſh vexing him in euery Part, boaded ſome Alteration or vnexpected Euent; when loe ſuch Trauaile as happeneth to Women in Labour ſeazed him, and a certain Tumour and ſwelling of his Body withall, according to the ſuddaine ripeneſſe of the Burthen within, diſtended his Bowels more and more, and gave newer and greater Extremities to him in this Agony, till the Burthen (though Bremaw farre exceeded the Stature of common Men) made two Ruptures, the one on the Right Side, the other on the Left; when behold two Twinnes, the one Male, the other Female, to wit, Man and Woman did betray themſelues to the World in full Growth and perfect Stature; who thus produced and informed concerning God by the Inſtructions of Bremaw, the Man was by him named Manow, and the Woman Ceteroupa. So giuing Worſhippe to God the Creator, and Reuerence to Bremaw the Producer, with a Bleſſing of Multiplication pronounced vpon them, they were ſent to the Eaſt, to a Mountaine called Munderpurvool, thence to ſpread their Generations to the Weſt, North, and South, ſo they departed, and Ceteroupa brought forth three Sonnes, and three Daughters; the eldeſt eldeſt Sonne was called Priauretta, the ſecond Outanapautha, the third Soomeraut; the eldeſt Daughter's Name was called Cammah, the ſecond Soonerettaw, the third Sumboo. As theſe grew in Yeers, they were in their ſeuerall Orders diſperſed ſeuerall Wayes, viz. Priauretta and Cummah to the Weſt, to the Mountaine called Segund; Outanapautha and Soonerettaw to the North, to the Mountaine Bipola; Soomeraut and Sumboo, to the Mountaine Supars, all which brought forth plentiful Generations. Thus Bremaw made Man and Woman, and repleniſhed the Earth with the reſt of the liuing Creatures.

VISTNEY likewiſe did prouide all Things neceſſary that might be to the Suſtentation and Preſeruation of the liuing Creatures, that Bremaw had made, giuing them in Enioyment of ſuch Bleſſings as were needfull to a wel Being.

To conclude, Ruddery did diſperſe Afflictions, Sickneſſe, Death, and Iudgement, according as the Sonnes of Men did by their Wickedneſſe inuoke this Smart upon themſelues. And this was the Order God tooke for the reſtoring of People to inhabit the Earth in the ſecond Age of the World. Now how God prouided for the Eſtabliſhment of Religion in this ſecond Age, that theſe that liued might feare and worſhippe him, ſhall be declared in the Chapter next following, as it is vnfolded by the Tradition of the Banians.

CHAP. VIII.

How God communicated Religion to the World by a Booke deliuered to Bremaw, the particular Tracts of the ſame: The firſt Tract thereof touching the morall Law laid downe, with the Appropriation of the ſame to the ſeueral Caſts, and a Confutation of the Errours thereof.

GOD knowing that there would be but euill Gouernment, where there was not the Eſtabliſhment of his Worſhippe and Feare, after the World was repleniſhed anew, bethought himſelfe of giuing them Lawes to reſtraine that euill in them that was the Cauſe of the Deſtruction of the former Age.

DESCENDING therefore on the Mountaine Meropurbatee, he called Bremaw to him, and out of a darke and duskie Cloude, with certain Glimpſes of his Glory, he magnified himſelfe to Bremaw, telling him that the Cauſe why hee brought Deſtruction on the former Age, was becauſe they did not obſerue the Inſtructions contained in the Booke deliuered to Brammon: So deliuering a Booke out of the Cloud into the Hand of Bremaw, commanded him to acquaint the People with thoſe Things contained therein. So Bremaw made knowne the Sanctions and Lawes vnto the diſperſed Generations.

OF the Contents thereof, if any deſire to be informed, the Banians deliuer that this Booke by them called the SHASTER, or the Booke of their written Word, conſiſted of theſe three Tracts. The firſt whereof contained their morall Law, or their Booke of Pre-

Precepts, together with an Explication vpon euery Precept, and an Appropriation of the Precepts to their ſeuerall Trybes or Caſts. The ſecond Tract vnfolded their ceremonial Law, ſhewing what Ceremonyes they were to vſe in their Worſhip. The third Tract diſtinguiſh'd them into certain Caſts or Tribes, with peculiar Obſeruations meete to each Caſt or Tribe: Such was the Summe of this Booke deliuer'd to Bremaw, of which Particulars if any deſire more diſtinct Knowledge, we ſhall propoſe the Pith and Subſtance of this in that which followes.

FIRST then the Tract that containeth the morall Law, and was by Bremaw publiſh'd to the Nations, compriſed in the ſame eight Commandments; which are the following.

The firſt Commandement, Thou ſhalt not kill any liuing Creature whatſoeuer it bee, hauing Life in the ſame; for thou art a Creature of mine, and ſo is it; thou art indued with a Soule, and it is indued with the ſame; thou ſhalt not therefore ſpill the Life of any Thing that is mine.

The ſecond, Thou ſhalt make a Covenant with all thy fiue Senſes. Firſt with thine Eyes, that they behold not Things that bee euill. Secondly with thine Ears, that they heare not Things that bee euill. Thirdly with thy Tongue, that it ſpeak not Things that bee euill. Fourthly with thy Pallate, that it taſte not Things that bee euill, as Wine or the Fleſh of liuing Creatures. Fifthly with thy Hands, that they touch not Things defiled.

The third, Thou ſhalt duely obſerue the Times of Deuotion, thy Waſhings, Worſhipping, and Prayers, to the Lord thy God: With a pure and upright Heart.

The fourth, Thou ſhalt tell no falſe Tales, or vtter Things that be vntrue, by which thou mighteſt defraud thy Brother in Dealings, Bargaines, or Contracts, by this Coſenage; to worke thine own peculiar Aduantage.

The fift, Thou ſhalt be charitable to the Poore, and adminiſter to his Need, Meate, Drinke, and Money, as his Neceſſity requireth, and thine owne Ability inableth thee to giue.

The ſixt, Thou ſhalt not oppreſſe, iniure, or doe violence to the Poore, vſing thy Power vniuſtly to the Ruine and Ouerthrow of thy Brother.

The ſeuenth, Thou ſhalt celebrate certaine Feſtiuals, yet not pampering thy Body with Exceſſe of any Thing, but ſhalt obſerue certaine Seaſons for Faſting, and breake off ſome Houres of Sleep for Watching, that thou mayſt be fitter for Deuotion and Holineſſe.

The eighth, Thou ſhalt not ſteal from thy Brother any Thing, how little ſoeuer it bee, of Things committed to thy Truſt in thy Poſſeſſion or Calling, but ſhalt content thy ſelfe with that which hee ſhall freely giue thee as thy Hyre, conſidering that thou haſt not Right to that which another Man calleth his.

THESE eight Commandments are beſtowed amongſt the foure Tribes or Caſts, appropriating to each two Commandments in ſeuerall.

FIRST, Brammon and Shuddery, the Prieſt and the Marchant-Man, are bound in greateſt Strictneſſe of religious Obſeruance, and to hold the greateſt Agreement in their Worſhippe; and Cuttery and Wyſe, the Ruler and the Handycrafts Man, do moſt correſpond in theirs.

To the Bramanes, which are the Prieſts, they gave the firſt and ſecond Commandements, as placing the ſtricteſt Part of Religion in theſe two Things. Firſt in the Preſeruation of liuing Creatures from Deſtruction. Next in Abſtinence from Things forbidden, as in the eating of Fleſh, or drinking of Wine; to which Obſeruance they doe alſo ſtrictly enioyne the Merchant-Men.

Next, more particularly they apportion to Shuddery, as moſt proper to his Profeſſion, the third and fourth Commandments, which two Precepts inioyn to Deuotion, and binde from Coſenage in their Dealings, a Sinne too incident to thoſe that are conuerſant in the Ballance and Waights, who are ſo myſterious in that Particular as may well neede an Act of Religion to reſtrain them from ſuch Fraudulency.

To Cuttery, their Rulers or Magiſtrates, they attribute the fift and ſixt Commandements, as knowing Oppreſſion to bee a Sinne moſt common to the Mighty, and inioyning them to Charity, who are beſt able to relieue the Neceſſities of the Poore.

To Wyſe, the Handycrafts Men, they referre the ſeuenth and eighth Commandements, who haue neede of ſome free Times of Enjoyment, yet giuen to Lauiſhment of their Gettings, if they were not admoniſhed by their Law; as alſo binding them from Theft, a Sinne to which they may be inuited by Opportunity, as they diſcharge the Duties of their Callings in other Mens Houſes.

In fine, to all theſe they owe a generall Obſeruance, but are more particularly cautious in keeping the Commandements appropriated to their owne peculiar Tribe or Caſt.

Since then the Lawes or Precepts of any Religion, are no farther to be allowed, than they ſeeme to be well grounded, and to carry Truth and good Reaſon with them, methinks by the Way, here is ſomething to be excepted againſt in this Banian Law, which diſtinguiſhing them from Men of other Religions, may bee examined whether it may haue Allowance or no.

The principall Part of their Law, admitting nothing prodigious to Opinion, we paſſe ouer; onely that which cometh into Exception, is that which is laid downe in the firſt and ſecond Commandement, and is enioyned the Bramanes and Banians to obſerue, viz. Firſt, that no liuing Creature ſhould be killed. Next, that they ſhould not taſte Wine, or Fleſh of liuing Creatures.

Concerning the firſt, that they ſhould not kill any liuing Creature, the Reaſon by which they confirme this Precept, is, becauſe it is endued with the ſame Soule that Man is.

This we deny; for the Banians here ſeeme to halt in their Philoſophy and the Learning of the Ancients, who haue deliuered, that there is a threefold kinde of Soule. Firſt, a vegetant Soule, ſuch as is in Hearbes and Plantes. Secondly, a ſentient Soul, ſuch as is in Beaſts. Thirdly, a reaſonable Soule, ſuch as is in Man; which Soule hath more noble Acts to diſtinguiſh it ſelfe from the other two; as alſo that when the other doe interire cum corpore, periſh with the Body, this ſuruiueth, and therefore is not the ſame Soule, as ſhall hereafter be prooued.

But

BUT that this Tenent of theirs denying the Slaughter of liuing Creatures for Man's Vſe is nothing ſoueraigne, may appeare by Scripture, which after the Flood declareth Gods Allowance in this Particular, Gen. ix. 3. Euery mouing Thing that liueth ſhall be Meate for you, euen as the greene Hearbe haue I giuen you all Things: Next by the Cuſtome of Nations, who differenced in other Points of Religion, yet hold conſent in this ſlaughter of liuing Creatures; adde vnto this the Practiſe of Pythagoras, one whoſe Name they adore, and who did lay the Ground whereon this Secte leaneth; he killed an Oxe, as Athenæus euicteth, lib. 1. Dipnoſoph. in this Diſtichon.

Inclyta Pythagoræ cum primum inuenta figura eſt,
Inclyta, propter quam victima bos cecidit.

NEITHER haue they been abhorrent to this Practiſe themſelues, if the Report of Hiſtory may be credited; for Cæl. Rodigin. reporteth, That the antient Indians (which are the People now in mention) when Liber Pater diſcouered thoſe Parts, were cloathed with the Skinnes of wilde Beaſts, which were before by them ſlaughtered. Neither is this obſerued by the Cutteries now; and therefore may ſeem to be a Tradition of their owne deuiſing, neither from the Beginning by them practiſed, nor by authenticke Law enioyned, that it ſhould be an eſſential Part of their Religion.

AND ſo we come to their ſecond Commandement, which containeth in it two Prohibitions, to be excepted againſt. The firſt, forbidding to drinke of Wine: The next of eating of Fleſh.

To the firſt, whereas the Bramanes and the Banians abſtaine frome Wine by a religious kinde of Forbearance, at all Times and Seaſons, without the abſolute Vſe of the Creature, we anſwer, that this is a Tradition voyde of Ground or Reaſon.

FIRST, it is againſt the common End and Vſe of the Creature; which God hath made to comfort the Heart of Man, obſeruing theſe Cautions. Firſt, that Men drinke not too much for the Quantity. Secondly, for the Manner, not in Boaſting or Oſtentation. Thirdly, for the Time, that it be not when religious Faſts require Forbearance. Fourthly, for the Place, that it be not where the Vſe of the Creature may bring Scandall.

NEXT, thoſe that haue abſtained from Wine, haue abſtained for diuers Endes, but not preciſely obſeruing the Points of this Banian Injunction. The Romans did forbid their Servants the drinking of Wine, but it was becauſe they might not forget the Bonds of Duty towards their Maſters. They did alſo inioyne their Women to abſtaine from Wine, but it was as Valer. Max. reports, Lib. 2. cap. 1. Ne in aliquod dedecus prolaberentur, quia proximus à Libero Patre intemperantiæ gradus ad inconceſſam Venerem eſſe conſueuit: Leaſt they ſhould fall into defame, for that the next Neighbour to Intemperancie is unbridled Luſt. The Carthaginians forbad their Soldiers the Juyce of the Grape, but it was leaſt Drowſineſſe ſhould oppreſſe them in their Watch to a publicque Perill. The Egyptian Prieſts called Sarabaitæ, did for temperate Ends abſtaine from Wine, but it was not for euer. That falſe Prophet Mahomet, by his Law forbad the drinking of Wine, but it was a Tradition and Impoſture of his owne, and the very Mullaes and Prieſts do not obſerue it alwayes at preſent, as I my ſelfe haue beheld. The Leuites were forbid to drinke Wine, Leuit. x. 9. but it was onely before their Entrance into the Sanctuary, that, as Tremelius obſerueth, they might not deliuer the Counſels of the Lord with a troubled Minde, but know what was fit for their Adminiſtration: This was no perpetuall Prohibition. The Nazarites Vowe was to drinke no Wine, but that was not euer, but in the Dayes of Separation, Numb. vi. 2, 3. The Rechabites vowed to drinke no Wine, but that was arbitrary, and not by religious Obligation, and not for euer, but for thirty Years, the Space betweene Iehu and Ioachim the latter, and Zedekiah King of Iudah. The ciuill Abſtinence neuertheleſſe is not to be condemned, but this abſolute Diſannulment of the Vſe of God's Creature.

AGAINE

AGAINE, the Confirmations of Men moſt temperate doe condemne this Interdiction of Wine. Gallen called it the Nurſe of old Age: Mneſytheus allowed Men laxare habenas, to looſe the Reynes in merry and harmelſſe Potations. Rigid Seneca ſaid, though a Man ought not by drinking to drowne his Sence, yet hee might by drinking drowne his Cares. Plato that leaned to ſome of the Opinions that this People hold, ſaid that Wine was a Remedy of God againſt old Age, that a Man might haue Vſum liberaliorem Vini, a more liberall Vſe of Wine; and others thinke, that Pythagoras did not altogether abſtaine from the Greeke Wines. To conclude, Hiſtorie reported of theſe ancient Indians, that they were φιλοινοι i. e. Vini amatores, Louers of Wine. Cæl. Rhodigin. Lib. 18. cap. 31. reporteth, That at the Death or Funerall of one Calanus, there was a Strife or Contention managed Acratopoſiæ, of Healths drinking, and he that gained the Victory, who was called Promathus, emptied foure great drinking Bowles. So that this Law prohibiting the Uſe of this Creature, was not from the Beginning, neither is obſerued of all, and therefore ſeems no Prohibition worthy of Obſeruance or Iniunction.

To the ſecond Prohibition, laid downe in their ſecond Commandement, concerning the eating of Fleſh, we thus make our Entrance.

FIRST, it is certaine, that theſe Bramanes or Banians will not eat of the Fleſh of liuing Creatures, that haue either had Life in them, or the Likeneſſe thereof. Egges therefore come within the Precincts of their Abſtinence, becauſe they ſuppoſe the Life to be in the Shell, by which they become hatched and animate. Roots alſo that are red are abſtained from, becauſe they hold Conſanguinity with the Colour of Blood. Neither will they cure their Feauers by Phlebotomy, but by Faſting, becauſe they ſuppoſe ſome of the Life iſſueth with the Blood. The Reaſon why they would deterre Men from eating of Fleſh, is becauſe they ſuppoſe there is a kind of Metempſychoſis, or Paſſage of Soules from one Creature to another, that the Soules of Men did enter into other liuing Creatures, which ſhould make Men to abſtaine from taſting of them. Which Opinion of theirs, that it may appeare to bee vaine, we ſhall ſhew firſt who were the Authors of this Opinion concerning ſuch Metempſychoſis, and how it hath had its Succeſſion of Maintainers. Secondly, What is the Effect and Subſtance of this Opinion. Thirdly, ſhew the Reaſons by which it is maintained. And laſtly, proceed to the Refutation of the ſame.

FIRST then, for the Originall of this Opinion. Though certainely theſe Indians are a People ancient, yet may it not be thought, that this Opinion began firſt amongſt them. Firſt, becauſe Hiſtory that is the Light of Times, affirmeth them to be Slaughterers of liuing Creatures. Next, becauſe Plato and Pythagoras, that haue Name for defending this Metempſychoſis or Metempſomatoſis, have an honoured Mention among the People. It is likely therefore that they haue met with ſome of their Writings, in this Particular, by which they haue become knowne to them. Thirdly, becauſe Iamblichus with Chæremon the Stoicke, thinke it to be firſt maintained amongſt the Egyptians: That from the Egyptians then it came to the Grecians; that after it had been rife amongſt them, it was made more tenable by the Wits and Learnings of Pythagoras, Plato, Empedocles, Apollonius Tyaneus, and Proclus, and might in Liber Paters Diſcoueries of thoſe Parts, be diſperſed amongſt this People, as well as by a Scholler of Pythagoras, who ſpread it in Italy, where it found Favour with Numa Pompilius, that ſuperſtitious Emperour, and was maintained by the Albanienſes, and Albigenſes, confuted by Athanaſius.

SECONDLY, touching the Subſtance of this Opinion that gained the Patronage of ſo great Schollers. They did hold, that there was a Paſſage of Soules of one Creature into another, that this Tranſmeation was of the Soules of Men into Beaſts, and of Beaſts into into Men: Hence Pythagoras auerred himſelfe to be Euphorbus, and Empedocles in his Verſe afterwards affirmed himſelfe to bee a Fiſh. This made it an abominable Crime to eate Fleſh, leaſt, as ſaith Tertullian in Apologet. cont. gent. cap. 48. Bubulam de aliquo proauo, quiſpiam obſonaret: Some ſhould eate vp the Oxefleſh, that had ſwallowed vp his Great Grandfather's Soule. This Opinion gayned Propugnation and Defence by Pythagoras, and Plato, by this Meanes; becauſe that beleeuing the Soules Immortality, it might gaine Aſſent with others by this Thought of its ſuruiuing in other Bodies, after its Relinquiſhment of the Deceaſed, as Greg. Tholoſſ. affirmeth in his Syntax. Art. Mirab. Lib. 8. cap. 11.

THIRDLY, the Reaſons by which they do induce Aſſent to this Tranſanimation of Soules, were theſe; becauſe the Soul was impure by the Sinnes and Corruptions of the Body, therefore it was needfull it ſhould be ſublimed from this Corruption, by ſuch Tranſmeation out of one Body into another, as Chymical Spirits gaine a purer Eſſence by paſſing through the Still or Limbecke diuers Times; every Diſtillation taking away ſome of his groſſe Part, and leauing it more refined. Again, becauſe it was meete the Soul ſhould make a Satisfaction for the Filthineſſe it had contracted, by remaining in the Priſon of the Body, an Exile from Bleſſedneſſe a longer Time, till this Paſſage from one Body to another had ſo purified them, that they might be fit to enter into the Elyſium or Place of Bliſſe.

LASTLY, in Confutation of this Opinion for Prohibition of eating of Fleſh from Suppoſall of a Metempſychoſis, we maintaine that there is no ſuch Metempſychoſis, or Tranſanimation of Souls.

FIRST, the Immortality of the Soule wee euince, without this Chymera of the Fancy, by an Argument drawne from Man's Diſſolution: This is the Nature of all Things that are compounded, that they ſhould be reſolued into that which they were at firſt before their Conjunction. Man is compounded of Soule and Body, the very Diſſolution of theſe two in Death declareth this; for that cannot be ſeparated that was not before conioyned. This Compoſition was by Life, and a Creature without Life, being in the Soule alone, it is manifeſt that the Soule had it before euer it came into the Body, or elſe that which was dead could neuer haue liued by the Meanes of that which was likewiſe dead. If the Soul had this Life before the Body, it muſt needes haue the ſame after in his Separation, and by Conſequence is immortall.

NEXT, in Confutation of their Reaſons for this Opinion, we anſwer, Firſt, that the Soule is not cleanſed by ſuch Tranſmeation from Body to Body, but rather defiled by that Filthineſſe thoſe Bodies contract, as Water becometh defiled by Infuſion into an vncleane Veſſell. Much more, ſince they affirme the Soules of Men enter into Beaſts, which are Creatures of greater Impurity. Beſides, thoſe Spirits that are ſubtiliated by Stills and Lymbecks, the Fire is effectual to their ſubliming, but the Bodies haue not the Goodneſſe in them that may tend to the Soules greater Purity, in ſuch Tranſmeation. To conclude, it is improbable the Soule ſhould be enioyned to ſuch a Satisfaction for Sinne, as tendeth to its greater Defilement. Theſe Reaſons therefore auaile little to confirme the Soules Tranſmeation in the Manner premiſed.

WE in the laſt Place ſhall prooue this Metempſychoſis, to be no other than a vaine Imagination, by the Reaſons following.

1. THEN, that the Soules are not deriued from one another per traducem, by way of Traduction, appeareth by Adam's Speech to Eue, Gen. ii. 23. This is Bone of my Bone, and Fleſh of my Fleſh: He doth not ſay, Soule of my Soule, and Spirit of my Spirit. It appeareth then, that though ſhee receiued her Body from Adam, yet ſhe had her Soule from God. And this is that which Zachary affirmeth, Zach. xii. 1. The Lord formeth the Spirit of a Man within him: Whence Auguſtine ſaith, Eam infundendo creari, & creando infundi, That the Soule being put into Man was created, and by creating was into Man infuſed; if therefore God created ſome, why not all?

2. Of ſpiritual Things and corporal there ſhould ſeeme the ſame Manner of Increaſe; but the Bodies haue new Beings, therefore the Soules.

3. If the Soules were purified by their Paſſage from one Body to another, then that Man that had the Soule laſt, ſhould be capable of all that Knowledge that was enioyed by them that had it before, and ſo the Infant ſhould be an experienced Creature in paſt Occurrences: But we diſcerne no ſuch extraordinary Ripeneſſe of Knowledge in one more then another, but that all our Habits are gained by Induſtry; which whilſt Plato would excuſe, ſaying, that the wandering Soules did receiue from the Diuell a Draught of the Cuppe of Obliuion, and ſo were forgetfull of that which is paſt, Irenæus thus taunteth him: If Plato had Tryall that his Soule was obtuſed with ſuch a Draught, I wonder that he could remember, that his Soule had loſt her Remembrance.

Lastly, if this were true, it would follow, that the Soules of Beaſtes ſhould be immortall, which would be abſurde to thinke in theſe better knowing Times. Hauing therefore proued this Opinion of Paſſage of Soules out of one Body into another to be a Fancy, and nothing reall, this may bee no iuſt Cauſe to detaine them from eating the Fleſh of Creatures, that haue had Life in them. Neither would they, if there were great Reaſon to the contrary, permit it as they doe in the Caſts of Cuttery and Wyſe, whom if they pleaſed they might reſtraine by the like Iniunction. All which thus euidenced, this already delivered may be ſufficient to publiſh concerning the firſt Tract in the Booke deliuered to Bremaw, touching the morrall Law.

CHAP. IX.

Of the ſecond Tract of the Booke deliuered to Bremaw, containing their ceremoniall Law, in their Waſhings, Annointings, Offerings under greene Trees, Prayers, Pilgrimages, Inuocations, Adorations; together with the Formes of their Baptizings, Marriages, and Burials, cuſtomary amongſt them.

THE ſecond Tract of the Booke deliuered to Bremaw, comprized certain ceremoniall Iniunctions by them to be obſerued in the Particulars following; the Knowledge of which being ſomething materiall to ſet forth the Religion of this People, ſhall be the Subject of this preſent Chapter.

First

FIRST then, they are enioyned to frequent Waſhings of their Bodies in Riuers; the Original of which Cuſtome they ſay began with this ſecond Age of the World, and was made a Part of their Worſhippe, to keepe in memory the Deſtruction that was brought vpon the World, for their Defilement and Sinne. The Ceremony obſerued in their Waſhings is this: Firſt, to beſmeare their Bodies in the Mudde of the River, the Embleme of Man's Filthineſſe and Corruption by Nature; then walking into the Riuer, and turning their Faces towards the Sunne, the Bramane vtters this Prayer: Oh Lord, this Man is foule and polluted as the Clay or Mudde of this River, but the Water thereof can purge off the Defilement; doe thou in like manner cleanſe away his Sinne. So diuing and plunging himſelfe three Times in the River, whilſt the Bramane iterateth the Name of the Riuer wherein he waſheth, call'd Toppee, with the Names of other Riuers in India, celebrated for theſe cuſtomary Waſhings, as Gonga and Nerboda, with other like Riuers, the Party ſhaking in his Hand certaine Graines of Rice, as his Offering on the Water, receiuing Abſolution for Sinnes paſt, is there diſmiſſed.

SECONDLY, they vſe a certaine Vnction in the Forehead of red Painting, that hauing certaine Graines ſtucke in the glutinous Matter, is as their Teſtimony that God hath marked them for his People: This is no other then to keepe in minde the Memory of their Baptiſme, which accordingly as the Mark vaniſheth, is daily by them renew'd; according to their Waſhings, with the Vtterance of certaine Words accompanying the Action, to put them in minde to bee ſuch as becommeth God's Marke.

THIRDLY, they are enioyned to tender certaine Offerings and Prayers vnder greene Trees, the Originall of which Cuſtome they deriue from Wyſe, to whom they ſay God appeared by Viſion vnder a Tree, as is formerly mentioned, with Iniunction of Worſhippe in thoſe Places; ſo that the Bramanes vnder ſuch greene Trees, erect Temples to Pagods, in which they giue Attendance to performe religious Rites and Ceremonies, to ſuch as repaire thither. The Tree peculiarized for this Worſhippe, is called by ſome, as by Pliny, and others, Ficus Indica, the Indian Fig-Tree; and by Goropus Becanus affirmed to bee the Tree of Life that grew in the Garden of Eden; how farre forth to be beleeued, I refer to Sir Walter Raleigh's firſt Booke of the Hiſtory of the World, Part I. Chap. iv. Parag. 1, 2, 3. where the more probable Opinion is giuen. Certaine it is, that to this Tree much is attributed by them, and they ſuppoſe ſome notable Miſchance ſhall happen to that Party that violateth or iniureth the leaſt Bowe or Branch of the ſame. It is a Tree of fertill Growth, whoſe Branches be ſpreading, ample, and ſpacious, from whoſe Boughes ſo diſpred, doe deſcend certaine Stemmes, that rooting themſelues anew in the Earth, propagate an Offspring, and ſo dilate it, that it ſeemeth beyond the Cuſtome of other Trees to be capacious. To this Tree when they repaire, they thither bring Offerings, there they receiue Vnctions, and there are Sprinklings of ſeuerall colour'd Powders; there they pay their Adorations, which they number by the Clapper of a little Bell; there they pray for Health, for Riches, for Fruitfulneſſe of Iſſue, for Succeſſe in Affaires; there they often celebrate their Feſtiuals with great Concourſe. In which May-Game of Superſtition to make further Inquiry, would be but vaine and fruitleſſe.

FOURTHLY, they are enioyned to certaine Prayers in their Temple, which may hold ſome Reſemblance with common Seruice, were it purged of ſuperſtitious Ceremonie; the Summe of which Devotion, is the Repetition of certaine Names of God, dilated and explained, where alſo they vſe Proceſſions, with Singing, and loud Tinckling of Bells, which chaunting is of their Commandements, with Offerings to Images, and ſuch like impertinent Seruices.

FIFTLY,

FIFTLY, they are enioyned to Pilgrimages to Riuers farre remote, as to the Riuer Ganges, there to waſh their Bodies, and to pay their Offerings; that the Concourſe of People repairing thither is great, and the golden Offerings of Treaſure and Iewels throwne into his ſiluer Waues, vnualuable; hee is likewiſe eſteemed bleſſed and purified from Sinne, that can dye with a Pallate moyſtned with that Water.

SIXTLY, another Portion of their Worſhippe they beſtow in Inuocation of Saints, to whom they attribute the Powers of giuing Succeſſe to ſeueral Affaires; they therefore that would bee happy in Marriage, inuoke Hurmount; they that are to begin the Workes of Architecture, Gunnez; they that want Health, Vegenaut; the Souldier in his Aſſault in Feates of Armes cryes, Bimohem; the Miſerable inuoke Syer; and they that are in Proſperity, giue their Oriſons to Mycaſſer.

SEUENTHLY, their Law bindes them to giue Worſhippe to God, vpon Sight of any of his Creatures, firſt preſented to the Eye after the Riſing Sunne; eſpecially they pay their Deuotion to the Sunne and Moone, which they call the two Eyes of God; as alſo to ſome Beaſts which they hold more clean then others, they giue extraordinary kinde Vſage: As to Kine, and Buffalaes, to whom they attribute ſo much Innocence and Goodneſſe by the Soules of Men entring into them, that they beſmeare the Floores of their Houſes with their Dung, and thinke the Ground ſanctified by ſuch Pollution.

IN the eighth Place, touching their Baptizings or naming of their Children, the Ceremony thereof is different in the Caſt of the Bramanes, and other Caſts; for thoſe that are of the other Caſts, are onely waſht in Water; then ſome of the Kindred of the Party deliuered, menaceth the Point of a writing Penne againſt the Forchead of the Child, with this ſhort Prayer, That God would write good Things in the Front of that Child. All thoſe then that are preſent ſaying Amen to that Prayer, they giue to the Child the Name by which hee ſhall bee called, and ſo putting an Vnction of red Oyntment in the middeſt of his Forehead, as a Signe that the Infant is receiued into their Church, and marked for one of God's Children, the Ceremony is abſolued. But then the Children that are of the Caſt of the Bramanes, are not onely waſhed with Water, but anointed with Oyle, with certaine Words of Conſecration, in this Manner: Oh Lord we preſent vnto thee this Child, borne of a holy Tribe, annoynted with Oyle, and cleanſed with Water; vnto which adding the former Ceremonies, they all pray that he may liue a righteous Obſeruer of the Law of the Bramanes; ſo enquiring out the exact Time of the Child's Birth, they calculate his Natiuity, gathering by the Poſition of the twelue Signes of Heauen, the Chances or Miſchances that may happen vnto him; all which they conceale, and at the Day of the Child's Marriage, (which they accoumpt one of the happieſt Dayes in his Life) publiſh the Dangers paſt, and the coniecturall Euils to come in the Sequeale of his Life.

IN the ninth Place, concerning their Marriages: It is conſiderable, that the Time is different from the Cuſtome of other Nations; for they marry about the ſeuenth Yeere of their Age, becauſe they accoumpt Marriage one of the moſt bleſſed Actions of Man's Life; to dye without which, they accoumpt is a great Vnhappineſſe, which often happeneth by Protractation and Delay of Time; as alſo that the Parents might before their Death ſee their Children diſpoſed, which commeth to paſſe by theſe earely Coniunctions. Next for their Contract in Marriage, the Parents of the Children doe prepare the Way by priuate Conference; the Intention and Purpoſe being made knowne, and betwixt them agreed vpon, then there are Meſſengers and Preſents ſent to the Parents of the Mayden to bee married, with the Noyſe of Trumpet and Drumme, and the ſinging of Songs in the Praiſe of the Perfections of the Bride, which may truely giue her the Merite of one worthy to be coueted and ſought vnto; which Preſents being accepted, then there are Gifts ſent backe to the Bridegroome, in token of their Acceptance of the nuptiall Proffer, with like Singing of Encomiaſtics in Praiſe of the Bridegroom, ſetting him forth to bee ſo well compos'd, as may well deſerue Acceptation. So the Bramanes appointing a Day for the Solemnization of the Marriage, then there is a certaine Show, to publiſh to the whole Towne this Marriage intended. This Show is firſt by the Bridegroome, who in nuptiall Pompe, attended with all the Men's Children in the Towne of the ſame Tribe, ſome on Horſebacke, ſome in Pallankins, ſome in Coaches, all adorn'd with Iewels, Scarfes, and pageant-like Habiliments, make their Curſitation round about the moſt publicke Streets in the Towne, with Trumpets and Kettle-Drummes, and guilded Pageants. The Bridegroom is diſtinguiſh'd from the reſt by a Crowne on his Head, deck'd with Iewels very rich. And having thus publiſh'd himſelfe, the next Day followeth the Bride in like Pompe crowned, attended with all the Girles of the ſame Tribe, in no leſſe Brauery and triumphant Accommodation, expos'd to View of the Spectators. The Day drawing to his Decline, they repaire home to accompliſh the full Rites of Marriage. The Ceremony obſerued in their Marriage is, that they neuer are conioyned together but at the Going-downe of the Sunne, at which Time a Fire is made, and interpos'd betweene the married Couple, to intimate the Ardency that ought to be in their Affections; then there is a ſilken String that incloſeth both their Bodies, to witneſſe the inſoluble Bond of Wedlocke, that in Marriage there ought to be no Deſertion or Forſaking one another. After this Bond there is a Cloath interpoſed betwixt them, ſhewing that before Marriage they ought not to make their Nakedneſſe knowne one to another: This Cuſtome, they ſay, was taken from the Meeting of Brammon with Sauatree, who, becauſe they were naked, couered their immodeſt Parts, till the Words of Matrimony were vtter'd. So the Bramanes pronouncing certaine Words enioyning the Man to affoord all Things conuenient to the Woman, and charging the Woman to Loyalty in the Marriage Vowe, with Pronunciation of a Bleſſing of fruitfull Iſſue to them both, the Speeches concluded, the Cloath interpoſed reft away; the Boind by which they were engirt vnlooſed, and after that full Freedome to communicate themſelues to each other. Dowry there is none giuen, that the Drifts of Marriage might not be mercenary, ſaue the Iewels worne on the bridall Day; and to the Feaſt none repaire but thoſe of the ſame Caſt. To conclude, in Marriage they haue ſome particular legall Iniunctions, by which the Tribes are differenced; as firſt, that no Woman may be admitted to ſecond Marriage, except in the Tribe of Wyſe, which are in the Handycraftſmen. Secondly, that Men in all Tribes are admitted to ſecond Marriages, except in the Bramanes. Thirdly, that euery Tribe do marry of ſuch as are of his owne Caſt; therefore the Bramanes muſt marry with ſuch as are deſcended from the Bramanes; and the Cutteryes with ſuch as are deſcended from the Cutteryes; ſo likewiſe the Shudderies. But the Wyſes are not onely enioyn'd to match into their owne Tribe, but into ſuch as be of their owne Trade; as a Barber's Sonne to a Barber's Daughter, and ſo of others, to keepe their Tribes and Trades from Commixtion.

LASTLY, as for their Burials, this is their Cuſtome: When any Man is deſperately ſicke, and paſt hope of Recouery, they inioyne him to vtter Narraune, which is one of the Names of God, importing Mercy to Sinners, of which Mercy at that Time he ſtandeth moſt in need. His Spirits languiſhing, they ſtretch out his Hand, pouring faire Water into it, as the Offering of his Life, praying to Kiſtneruppon, the God of the Water, to preſent him pure to God, with this Offering of his Hand. His Life being departed, they waſh his Body as a Teſtimony of his Cleanneſſe and Purity: This is the Ceremony obſerued in the Viſitation of their Sicke. After this, for the Buriall of their Dead, it is after this Manner: Firſt, they beare the dead Body to a Riuer's Side, appropriate to ſuch Purpoſe, where ſetting the Corps downe on the Ground, the Bramane vttereth theſe Wotds: Oh Earth, wee commend vnto thee this our Brother; whilſt he liued thou hadſt an Intereſt in him; of the Earth he was made, by the Bleſſing of the Earth he was fed, and therefore now hee is dead we ſurrender him vnto thee. After this putting combuſtible Matter to the Body, accended and lighted by the Helpe of ſweete Oyle, and aromaticall Odours ſtrowed thereon, the Bramane ſaith, Oh Fire, whilſt he liued, thou hadſt a Claime in him, by whoſe naturall Heate he ſubſiſted; wee returne therefore his Body to thee, that thou ſhouldſt purge it. Then the Sonne of the Deceaſed taketh a Pot of Water, and ſetteth it on the Ground, vpon which he ſetteth a Pot of Milke, when throwing a Stone at the lower Pot, he breaketh it to Sheards, which rendereth the Water to Loſſe, and periſhing; the Veſſel of Milke aboue defrauded of his Support, powreth forth his Humidity on the Ground likewiſe, vpon which the Sonne thus moralizeth the Action; That as the Stone by his Violence cauſed the Veſſels to yeeld forth their Humour, ſo did the Aſſault of Sickneſſe ruine his Father's Body, and bringe it to Loſſe as Milke or Water, that is ſpilt on the Ground, neuer to bee redeemed. The Body then being incinerated, or burnt to Aſhes, they diſperſe the Aſhes abroad into the Ayre, the Bramane vttering theſe Words: Oh Ayre, whilſt hee liued by thee he breathed, and now hauing breathed his laſt, we yeeld him to thee. The Aſhes falling on the Water, the Bramane ſaith, Oh Water, whilſt he liued thy Moyſture did ſuſtaine him, and now his Body is diſperſed, take thy Part in him. So giue they euery Element his owne; for as they affirme Man to haue his Life continued by the foure Elements, ſo they ſay he ought to be diſtributed amongſt them at his Death. After this funerall Solemnity, the Bramane preſenteth to the Sonne or neereſt Kindred of the Deceaſed, a Regiſter of the Deceaſes of his Anceſtors, as alſo readeth to him the Law of Mourners. That for tenne Dayes he muſt eate no Beetle, nor oyle his Head, nor put on cleane Cloathes, but once euery Month throughout the whole Yeere, on the Day of the Month in which his Father deceaſed, muſt make a Feaſt, and pay a Viſitation to that Riuer that drunke vp his Father's Aſhes. Since theſe Lawes and Iniunctions, there hath ſprung vp a Cuſtome amongſt them, that the Women that ſuruiue their Husbands, ſhould offer themſelues vp aliue to be ſacrific'd in the Flames with them, which to this Day is obſerued in ſome Places, and for ſome Perſons of greater Worth, though the Examples be more rare now than in former Times; of which Cuſtome Propertius thus ſpeaketh.

Fælix Eois lex funeris vna maritis,
Quos Aurora ſuis rubra colorat aquis:
Namque vbi mortifero iacta eſt fax vltima lecto,
Vxorum ſuis ſtat pia turba comis;
Et certamen habent læthi, quæ viva ſequatur
Coniugium: pudor eſt non licuiſſe mori.
Ardent victrices & flammæ pectora præbent,
Imponuntque ſuis ora peruſta viris.

The Engliſh.

A happy funerall Law thoſe Indians hold,
Where bright Aurora ſhines with Beames of Gold:
For when in fiery Brands the Husbands lye,
The Women ſtand with hanging Treſſes by;
And ſtrive who to their Husbands firſt may turne
A Body chaſt into the flaming Vrne:
Whilſt to the Fire they yeeld a conſtant Breſt,
And with parcht Mouthes do kiſſe their Loues to Reſt.

BUT though Propertius maketh this to bee a Witneſſe of their coniugall Chaſtity, yet Strabo maketh the Ground thereof to bee the Indian Womens Diſloyalty to their Husbands, who in former Times, by ſecret Meanes, vntimely poyſon'd them, to enioy their Paramours; the Raiahs therefore, to reſtraine this Practiſe, did procure the Bramanes to make it an Act of Religion to interdict ſecond Marriages to the Women, and that after the Deceaſe of the Husband, the Woman ſhould no longer ſuruiue, that ſo they might become more carefull of their Preſeruation. The chaſter Sort, to gaine an Honour out of the Infamy caſt vpon their Sexe, did by voluntary Sufferance remooue all Suſpicion of ſuch Machination of Euill, ſince they were ſo ready to cope with the Terror of Death, to confirme their Loue; the Ceremony whereof is this: When their Husbands dye, they array themſelues in their beſt Ornaments and Iewels, and accompany the Body to the funerall Pit, ſinging all the Way encomiaſticke Songs, in praiſe of their deceaſed Husbands, expreſſing a Deſire to be with them. The Body then being layd in the Graue, the Woman with a chearfull Countenance imparteth her Iewels to her deareſt Friends, leapeth in to the Corps, whoſe Head ſhee layeth in her Lappe; the Muſicke ſounding aloud, the Pile is kindled by the Fire, and ſet on a Flame, whilſt ſhe maketh herſelfe a Martyr to approue her Loue.

THESE Obſeruances, partly inioyned by their Law, and by themſelues inſtanced in their preſent Practice, may haue beene ſufficient to giue you Information what might be the Subſtance of the ſecond Tract of the Booke deliuered to Bremaw. What the third Tract importeth, and how it is confirm'd by their preſent Manners and Cuſtomes, wee ſhall glance at in the following Chapters.

CHAP. X.

Of the third Tract deliuered to Bremaw, concerning their foure Tribes or Caſts; their Iniunction to follow that Order of Gouernment, and ſo touching the firſt of thoſe Tribes, called the Bramanes; the Deriuation of the Name, their Kindes, the Number of their Caſts, their miniſteriall Diſcharge, Studies, and Schoole Diſcipline.

AFTER the Conſideration of the Ceremonies enioyn'd and obſeru'd by them in Matters of their Worſhippe, as it was the Subiect of the ſecond Tract of the Booke deliuer'd to Bremaw; now followeth the third Tract, declaring in what manner of Order or Diſtinction they ſhould liue, and what was meete for euery one to obſerue in his owne particular Tribe.

AND becauſe there could bee no Inuention more commodious for the Gouernment of the World than was vſed by the foure Tribes in the firſt Age; as to have Bramanes to inſtruct the People in Matters of Religion, to have Cutteryes that ſhould ſway the Scepter, and keepe Men in Obedience; to have Merchantmen that ſhould Vſe Traffick and Trade, as did Shuddery; to haue ſeruile and manufactory Men, that ſhould ſerue the Vſes of the World in the Handicrafts, as did Wyſe; therefore they were by this Tract bound to keepe their owne peculiar Tribe or Caſt, and to obſerue what was proper to the Faculties of each in ſeuerall; which accordingly was done, and is yet continued ſo farre as it lyeth in their Power to conſerue this ancient Forme of Gouernment and Policie; wherein if I ſhall ſomewhat digreſſe from their Iniunctions, which for the moſt part preſent Things leſſe pertinent to be knowne, to a more particular Diſplay of their Manners, I ſhall better diſcharge the Parts required in this Tract.

THE Bramanes then being the firſt of theſe Tribes, ſomething ſhall be noted in particular touching them; and firſt of the Name Bramane. Suidas is of opinion, that they are call'd Bramanes of one Brachman, that was the firſt Preſcriber of their Rites. Poſtellus Lib. de Origin. Cap. 13. & 15. affirmeth them to bee deſcended from Abraham by Cheturah, who ſeated themſelues in India, and that ſo they were call'd Abrahmanes; the Word ſuffering a Syncope, they in the Tract of Time, for Breuity of Pronunciation became call'd by the Name of Bramanes. But they neither know of any ſuch as Brachman, neither haue they heard of Abraham, but affirme they receiue this Name of Bramanes from Brammon, which was the firſt that euer exerciſed their prieſtly Function, as they finde by Recorde; or elſe from Bremaw, by adiection of this Particle (nes) who was the firſt of the ſecond Age, to whom the Law was deliuer'd.

TOUCHING the kindes of theſe Bramanes, taking them for ſuch as diſcharge the prieſtly Office amongſt the People, they are of two ſorts. Firſt, the more common Bramanes, of which there are a greater Number in India: Or the more ſpeciall, of which there be fewer; and theſe be call'd by the Banians, Verteas, by the Moores, Sevrahs.

THE common Bramane hath eighty two Caſts or Tribes, aſſuming to themſelues the Names of that Tribe; which were ſo many wiſe Men or Schollers fam'd for their Learning amongſt them, call'd Augurs, or Soothſayers, of ſuch a Place of Dwelling. Thus the Prime of them was call'd Viſalnagranauger, that is, the Augur of Viſalnagra; the ſecond Vulnagranauger, that is, the Augur of Vulnagra, a Towne ſo call'd; and ſo of the reſt, according to theſe eighty two Caſts to be diſtinguiſh'd, being Bramanes of the Diſcipline of ſuch an Augur.

THESE Bramanes, as they diſcharge their miniſteriall Function, in praying with the People, or reading their Law, haue ſome peculiar Iniunctions: As firſt, that they ſhould ſtraine their Bodies into certaine mimicall Geſtures, ſo as may moſt face the People to gaze vpon them and liſten to them; that they pray with both their Hands open to Heauen, as ready to receiue the Things they pray for; that they pray with demiſſiue Eyelids, and ſitting with their Knees deflected vnder them, to ſhew their Feare and Reuerence. Next, that they muſt neuer reade of the Booke deliuer'd to Bremaw, but it muſt be by a kinde of Singing, and quauering of the Voyce, which they ſay was not onely practis'd by Bremaw, when it was publiſh'd, but was alſo inioyn'd by God, that they might make his Law as the Matter of their Reioycing.

THE Bramanes are likewiſe the Seminaries of Diſcipline amongſt the younger ſort of that Caſt, whoſe Orders both in their Initiation and Entrance into that manner of Learning is obſeruable; as alſo no leſſe in their Confirmation and Ordination to the Prieſthood; for firſt, about the ſeuenth Yeere of their Age they are receiued to Diſcipline, being cleane waſh'd, to intimate the Purity of that Caſt; then they are receiu'd naked, to ſhew that they haue ſtript off all other Cares, to apply themſelues to Study; then their Heads are ſhauen, a long Locke being onely left on the hinder Part of the Head, to ſhew that they muſt not forſake their Study; if they doe, by that Locke they ſhall be drawne backe againe. They are bound to a Pythagorean Silence and Intention, tion, and prohibited haulking, ſpitting, or coughing; wearing about their Loynes a Girdle of an Antilop's Skinne, and another Thong of the ſame about their Necke, deſcending vnder the Left Arme. And about the foureteenth Yeere of their Age (if they be capable) they are admitted to be Bramanes, exchanging thoſe leather Thongs, for four ſealing Threds, that come ouer the Right Shoulder, and vnder the Right Arme, which they ſleepe withall, and neuer put off, but weare them in Honour of God, and the three Perſons, Bremaw, Viſtney, and Ruddery, and as the Badge of their Profeſſion; in which Ordination they are enjoyned: Firſt, not to alter their Caſt or Tribe. Next to obſerue all Things enjoyned in the Bramanes Law. Laſtly, not to communicate the Myſteries of their Laws to any of a different Religion. Theſe be the moſt of the principal Things obſerued by theſe Bramanes.

Now for the more ſpeciall Bramane, by them called the Vertea, he is ſome Man of the Caſt of the Shudderyes, or Merchant-Men, who for Deuotion taketh this Condition on him; he is one that for his Habit weareth a woollen Garment of white, deſcended to the middle of his Thigh, leauing the lower Parts naked; his Head is alwayes vncouered, as a Witneſſe of his perpetuall Reuerence of God aboue; they doe not ſhaue, but plucke off all the Hayre on their Heads, ſaue ſome ſmall Remainder on the Crowne; the like they do from their Chinne alſo.

Of this ſort of Bramane there be ſeuerall Caſts likewiſe; one is called the Soncaes, and theſe goe not to Church, but performe diuine Rites at home. Another is of the Tuppaes, theſe go to Church to pray. A third is of the Curthurs, and theſe pray by themſelues, without Society. A fourth called the Onkelaus, and theſe endure not Images. A fift called the Puſhaleaus, the moſt ſtrict of them all.

These kinde of Bramanes haue a Feſtiuall called Putcheſon, which is kept once euery Month, by fiue Days Solemnization, but betwixt each Day of the fiue they keepe a Faſt; this Feaſt is kept at the ableſt Mens Houſes, and commonly at thoſe Times a Penſion is given, to reſtrain the Death of Cattell, or other liuing Creatures.

More ſtrict they ſeeme to be in many Things than the common Bramanes, for the other are not forbidden Marriage, theſe are: More abſtinent they are in Dyet; for out of the former Feaſts they eate nothing but what is giuen them, and reſerue nothing for another Meale. More cautelous they are for the Preſeruation of Things animate, for they will drinke no Water but boyl'd, that ſo the Vapour, which they ſuppoſe the Life of the Water, may goe out. They diſperſe their very Dung and Ordure with a Beaſome, leaſt it ſhould generate Wormes that bee ſubject to Deſtruction; and they keep an Hoſpital of lame and maimed flying Fowle, redeemed by a Price, which they ſeeke to reſtore: They have all Things common, but place no Faith in outward Waſhings, but rather embrace a careleſſe and ſordid Naſtineſſe. And this is ſufficient to note concerning this kinde of Bramane.

CHAP. XI.

Concerning the ſecond Tribe or Caſt called the CUTTERYES, preſenting them in their flouriſhing Eſtate, their declining Eſtate, and their preſent Eſtate.

THE ſecond Caſt or Tribe being the Cutteryes, had their Denomination from Cuttery, the ſecond Son of Pourous, who, becauſe Domination and Rule was committed vnto him, therefore all Souldiers and Kings are ſaid to be of this Tribe. That Particular of Bremawes Booke that concerned this Caſt or Tribe, contained certaine Precepts of Gouernment and Policie, the Knowledge of which being but of common Import, I rather chuſe to omit, and proceede to ſhew ſome other Things notable concerning this Tribe, touching their State or Condition. Theſe Cuteryes may then be conſidered, either according as they were in their flouriſhing Eſtate, or elſe in their declining Eſtate, or in their preſent Eſtate.

As they were in their flouriſhing Eſtate, they were the antient Kings and Rulers of India, eſpecially of that Part called Guzzarat, and were called by the Name of Raiahs, which ſignifieth a King, whereof ſome were of greater Dominion than other, according as they were of greater Force. Theſe Raiahs had principally foure Men about them of Eminency. The firſt of which were the Bramanes, who by Southſaying and Augury did ſhew the Kings what Time was moſt meete to beginne their Deſigns to proſecute them with Succeſſe. The ſecond was one called the Pardon, which was a Man of Policy in the Carriage of State Buſineſſe, and diſpatched all Matters of Iudicature, hauing Reference to the King for Iuſtice. The third was one that was called the Moldar, or the King's Chamberlaine, who was moſt commonly preſent with the King, as the Companion of his Conuerſation. The fourth was the Generall of the King's Armies in the Field, called Diſnacke, who was ſent abroad about all Expeditions of Warre. Theſe were the foure that had chiefe Eminency about the King. Furthermore, theſe Raiahs are ſaid to have thirty ſixe Tribes, as the noble Families whence they were deſcended; ſome were of the Caſt or Tribe of Chaurah, ſome of the Solenkees, ſome of the Tribe of Vaggela, ſome of the Dodepuchaes, ſome of the Paramas; that ſo no Man of obſcure Birth might preſſe to Dignity, but being deſcended from ſome of the thirty ſix Families; thus the Raiahs liued in their flouriſhing Eſtate.

Now touching their declining State: It is recorded in their Hiſtory, that one Ranne Deuill, a vertuous Woman, did at her Death propheſy the Decline of the Banian State, in the Time of Rauiſaldee chiefe Raiah, the Beginning of which Decline ſhould be in his next Succeſſors Days, which they ſay accordingly happenned, as ſhall appeare by the Story following.

It was then deliuered in their Hiſtory, that there was a Raiah called Rauiſaldee, who had a Sonne called Syderayſaldee: Rauiſalde ſuffering the common Change of Mortalitie, his Sonne was carefull to expreſſe his Duty to his deceaſed Father, in a coſtly Monument, at a Place called Sythepolalpore, which being finiſhed with great Curioſitie of Art, and Coſt correſpondent to that Curioſity, being pleaſed with the Worke, and deſiring to keepe his Father's Memory and his owne laſting by that Monument, he conſulted with the Bramanes, to know whether that Temple ſhould long abide, or if that Pile of goodly Work-

Workmanſhippe ſhould ſuffer Ruine; by whom it ſhould be defaced. In was diuined to him by one Madewnauger, one famous in the Diſcipline of the Bramanes, that one Sultan Alaudin, a Patan, King of Delee, ſhould deface the ſame, as alſo gaine ſome great Conqueſt in Guzzarat. Syderayſaldee, hopefull to prevent the Defacement of this Temple, by ſome timely Compoſition, diſpeeded his Bramane Madewnauger, and his Pardon, to Delee, to inquire out the ſaid Alaudin, and by a Summe of Money to procure the Peace of his Father's Bones, and the ſparing of the Temple. But coming thither they could finde no ſuch Man of any Eminency, but another in the Gouernment: Onely by ſtrict Inquiſition they met with a Wood-gatherer there, who had a Sonne ſo called; thither they repaire to the Amazement of Alaudin's poore Parents; they make knowne the Reaſon of their comming, and finde the Boy adminiſtring Food to a young Kid in his Father's Backſide. The Bramane propoſing to him the high Fortunes that ſhould betyde him in being King of Delee, and in the Conqueſt of Guzzarat, as alſo the End of their Meſſage, that Syderayſaldee did greet him, and did deſire him that when thoſe Things ſhould happen, and he ſhould inuade Guzzarat, that he would forbeare to deface the Temple and Monument of his Father erected at Sythepolalpore, as a Motiue to which Fauour, Syderayſaldee did freely preſent him with a Summe of Money, which Summe they tendered to Alaudin. Alaudin boldly anſwered, that hee was not in Appearance capable of any ſuch Fortunes, but if the Heauens had ſo ſet it downe in their great Volume, he could not alter it, but muſt lay waſte the Temple, and in the Majeſty of his Nature refuſed the Gift and Treaſure brought him. His Parents better inſtructed by their owne Neceſſitie what was meete for him to doe, than his heroicke Diſpoſition would be taught, importuned him to take the Treaſure, vrging their owne Needes, and how conuenient a Helpe it might bee to raiſe him to thoſe Fortunes that were to him diuined. So apprehending the Counſell to be but reaſonable, hee tooke the Treaſure, and gave an Eſcript or Writing, that albeit the Heauens had decreed that he ſhould ſcatter ſome Stones of that Building, yet hee would picke them out of the Corners thereof in ſuch Manner, as ſhould fulfill his Fortune, and make good his promiſed Fauour to Syderayſaldee, in the ſparing of that Temple and Tombe of his Father. By this Money of Compoſition, Alaudin gathered Souldiers, and betooke himſelfe to Armes, wherein he prooued himſelf ſo reſolute, that he gained great Fame, whereunto his diuining Fortunes became ſuch a Sparre, that he was made King of Delee, and after that made inuaſive Conqueſts on Guzzarat, fulfilled his Promiſe to Syderayſaldee in Treatie on the fore-mentioned Buſineſſe. In which Conqueſt he ouerthrew many Raiahs, to the great Ruine and Decline of the Banian State: But growing weary of this long Warre, and many Raiahs flying to Places inacceſſable, led with a Deſire to returne to Delee his Natiue Place, he committed the further managing of theſe Warres to one Futtercon, that was his Cup-bearer, in this Manner: For Alaudin conſidering how great he was grown from nothing (and that accidentally) he determined as accidentally to heape his Fortune vpon another, purpoſing ouer Night with himſelfe, that whoſoeuer did firſt preſent him the next Morning with any Gift, on him to confirme the Gouernment of that Part of Guzzarat hee had conquered. It ſo fell out, that whilſt this Secret was lodged vp in the King's Breaſt, that the fore-mentioned Futtercon, the King's Wine-Keeper, by the Riſing-Sunne, tendered a Cuppe of Wine to the King's Hand; who ſmiled and looked favourably vpon him, and in the Preſence of his Army, confirmed him his Succeſſor in the Gouernment of that he had woone, inioyning them all ſo to acknowledge him, and to do whatſoeuer he ſhould command in the further Proſecution of that Conqueſt: So Sultan Alaudin departed to Delee, and the ſaid Futtercon, did further inuade Guzzarat, and ſo did the reſt of the Mahometans that ſucceeded him, to the Decline of the Banian State and Regiment.

Now

Now for their preſent Eſtate, ſome of the Raiahs yeelded, others flying to Retyrements impregnable, lay in the Mawe of the Countrey, and could not be conquered euen to this Day: But making Outroades, prey on the Caffaloes paſſing by the Way; and ſometimes come to the Skirts of their ſtrongeſt and moſt populous Townes, hauing many reſolute Souldiers to goe on in theſe Attempts of Rapine, called Raſhpootes, which implyeth as much as the Sonnes of Kings; for being of the Caſt of the Cutteryes, it is like they were nobly deſcended, and ſome of the Progeny of thoſe that were ouerrunne in the Guzzarat Conqueſt. Of thoſe that liue unconquered at this Day, ſuch a one is Raiah Surmulgee, liuing at Raſpeeplaw; Raiah Berumſhaw, at Molere; Raiah Ramnagar; Raiah Barmulgee, and the great Rannah, who hath fought many ſet Battels with the Moguls Forces. This may be obſeruable concerning the Caſt of the Cutteryes.

CHAP. XII.

Of the third Tribe or Caſt called the SHUDDERYES, of the Meanning of the Name BANIAN, of their Caſts, and the Forme of their Contracts, in Buying and Selling.

THE third Sonne of Pourcus being called Shuddery, and the Profeſſion appointed him to follow being Merchandize, all ſuch as liue in the Nature of Merchants are comprized vnder this Name, and belong to this Caſt: That which the Booke deliuered to Bremaw contained concerning this Tribe, was no other than a Summary of religious Aduertiſements, proper to the Carriage of this Profeſſion, enioyning them to Truth in their Words and Dealings, and to auoid all Practices of Circumuention in Buying and Selling. What may be further worthy of Note concerning this Tribe (being thoſe that are moſt properly called Banians) at preſent is either concerning the Name Banian, the Number of their Caſts, or the Forme of their Contracts of Buying and Selling.

FIRST, vnder the Name of Banians is comprized either ſuch as are Merchants only, or Brokers for the Merchant, for nothing is bought but by the Mediation of theſe, who are called Banians, which importeth as much as in the Bramanes Language wherein their Law is written, as a People innocent and harmleſſe, becauſe they will not indure to ſee a Fly or Worme, or any Thing liuing iniured, and being ſtrucken, beare it patiently without reſiſting againe.

NEXT for the Number of their Caſts, they are equall to the Bramanes, being the ſelfe ſame Caſts, chuſing either to be vnder their Diſcipline, that are Viſalnagrunaugers, or Vulnagranaugers, from the peculiar Inſtruction of which Bramanes they are guided in Matters belonging to religious Worſhippe, for being moſt likely vnto the Bramanes in their Law, they more ſtrictly follow their Iniunctions than the other Tribes.

LASTLY, their Forme of Contract in Buying and Selling is ſomething notable, and diſtinct from the Cuſtome of other Nations; for the Broker that bateth the Price with him that ſelleth, looſeth his Pamerin, that is folded about his Waſte, and diſpreading it upon his Knee, with Hands folded vnderneath, by their Finger Ends the the Price of Pounds, Shillings, or Pence is pitched, as the Chapman is intended to giue; the Seller in like Manner intimateth how much he purpoſeth to haue, which ſilent kind of Compoſition they ſay their Law enioyneth as the Forme of their Contract.

CHAP. XIII.

Of the fourth Caſt called the WYSES; the Meaning of their Name; their Kindes, and ſeuerall Caſtes; BREMAW'S Time is expired; he is tooke vp to Heauen; the ſecond Age is concluded by the Deſtruction of Winde and Tempeſt.

LASTLY, as the fourth Soone of Pourous was called Wyſe, and was the Maſter of the Mechanicks or Handycrafts, ſo all Manufactory-Men were to belong to the Caſt of the Wyſes. Thoſe Directions that were in Bremaw's Booke for theſe, were in Precepts touching their Behauiours in their Callings.

THIS Name Wyſe implyes as much as one that is Seruile or Inſtrumentary, for this Cauſe, as it may be ſuppoſed, becauſe they are Seruile or Helpeful to ſuch as neede their Art, as was Wyſe, and thoſe deſcended from him, who are indued with diuers Inuentions; theſe People are at this preſent moſt ordinarily called by the Name of Gentiles.

WHICH Gentiles are of two Sorts or Kindes: Firſt, the purer Gentile, ſuch as liueth obſervant of the Dyet of the Banians, abſtaining from Fleſh and Wine, or vſing both very ſeldome; or elſe the Gentile Viſceraun, called the impure or vncleane Gentile, which taketh a greater Liberty in Dyet, eating Fleſh, or Fiſh, or Things animate; ſuch are the Husbandmen or inferior ſort of People, called the Coulees.

THE purer ſort of Gentile, as they hold greateſt Relation in their religious Liberty with Cuttery's, ſo they agree in the Number of their Caſts, hauing ſixe and thirty, according to the Number of the Trades or Profeſſions practiſed amongſt them. In the Particular of their Handycrafts this is obſaruable, that they make as few Inſtruments ſerue for the effectuating of divers Workes as may bee, and whatſoeuer they do, is contrary to the Chriſtian Forme of Working, for the moſt Part. Such is the Subſtance of the third Tract of the Booke deliuered to Bremaw, concerning the foure Tribes or Caſts, ſomewhat accommodate to their preſent Manners.

THIS Booke, comprizing in it the Platforme of Religion and Gouernment thus deliuered to Bremaw, was by him communicated to the Bramanes of thoſe Times, and by them publiſhed to the People, ſhewing what Religion they ſhould obſerve, and how they ſhould liue in their ſeuerall Tribes or Caſts. After which, according to the Preſcrip-tions therein, the Rulers did keepe the People in the Order of Gouernment: the Prieſts or Bramanes did giue Aduiſe in Matters of Religion: The Merchants did follow Traffique and Merchandizing; and the Handycrafts-Men did follow their ſeuerall Profeſſions, ſeruing the Needs of all Men that had Uſe of them. All Things hauing a good Beginning in this ſecond Age, Religion was embraced, Prayers were made to God, and the three Perſons, Bremaw, Viſtney, and Ruddery; the Bankes of the Rivers were frequented, and daily Waſhings were not neglected.

But after the People were multiply'd, the ſucceeding Generations were not of the primitive Integrity, but the lower the Times grewe, the worſe they were at the Bottome. The Bramanes grew hypocriticall and Lip-laborious; the Cutteryes, or Rulers, ſwelled with Pride and Ambition, cryed out for larger Territories, meditating vniuſt Ampliations of Gouernment. The Merchants grew full of Fraudulency in their Dealings; and the Handycrafts grew idle, and ouervaluing their Labours.

In this Vproare of Vngodlineſſe, the Lord grew angry, and full of Indignation, and deſcended on Mount Meropurbatee, acquainting Bremaw with the Wickedneſſe of the World, who deſcended and premoniſhed them of the Iudgement to come, which a while huſht the Cry of their Wickedneſſe; but they fell to their old Euils againe. Bremaw then interceded for them, but the Almighty would not be pacified, but took Bremaw vp into his Boſome, the Time of his Aboad on Earth being expired, that he might not behold the Euils of the Time to come.

Then the Lord made knowne his Purpoſe of deſtroying the World to Viſtney, whoſe Nature and Office being to preſerue the People, did intercede for them: But the Lord would not be pacified, but gaue Charge to Ruddery, whoſe Office it was to bring Iudgement and Deſtruction on Sinners, to cauſe the Bowels of the Earth to ſend out a Winde, to ſweepe the Nations as the Duſt from the Face of the Earth.

So Ruddery enraged the Windes in the Bowels of the Earth, which braſt forth into Eruptions, and the great Body of the World had her Trepidations and Wauerings; the Day ſeem'd to change Colour with the Night, and the Mountaines and Hills were hurled from their Foundations; and, as ſome report, the Riuer Ganges was carried from her wonted Rote, to runne in a new Chanell; ſo the Tempeſt deſtroyed all People, ſauing a few that the Lord permitted Viſtney to couer with the Skirt of his Preſeruation, reſerued to be the Propagaters of Mankinde in the third Age; and ſo this Age concluded.

CHAP. XIV.

Shewing the Beginning of the third Age; the Reſtauration of the ſame by Ram; new Euils bring a Iudgement, concluding the third Age by an Earthquake or Chaſma.

Ruddery hauing reſtrained the Windes from their former Violence, all now was huſht; but miſerable and lamentable it was to behold the Earth ſo deſolate and voyd of Inhabitants, more miſerable to ſee the Carkeiſes that were ſcattered on her Surface, ſome blowne from the Tops of high Mountaines, others bruiſed to Maſh, all ruined ruined and deſtroyed; ſo that the Almighty repented him of his owne Worke, and Ruddery was ſorry that he ſhould be an Inſtrument of ſo great Fury and Deſtruction.

BUT becauſe the Head of all the former Diſorders was from the Wickedneſſe and ill Gouernment of the Kings and Rulers, therefore the Lord vtterly raced out all of the Tribe or Caſt of the Cutteryes; thoſe that were preſerued from Deſtruction by the Skirt of Viſtneys Preſeruation, being ſome few of the other three Caſts or Tribes.

Now becauſe theſe four Caſts were ſo neceſſary to the World's Gouernment, that it could not ſubſiſt without them, though the Caſt of the Cutteryes periſhed intyrely, for their Wickedneſſe; yet, that they might be renewed againe from a holier Beginning, the Lord appointed that from the Bramanes the Line of the Kings ſhould be renewed. So the Chiefe of the Bramanes that was then preſerued by Viſtney, was called Ducerat; the next Child that was borne after this Deſtruction, and which was the youngeſt of foure, was choſen to propagate the Race of their Kings, and Rulers, who being religiouſly educated, might as well fauour Piety as Pollicy, and with Holineſſe and Prudence gouerne Men in their ſeuerall Tribes.

So he did many worthy Acts, and exceedingly maintained Religion, was a Patron to the Bramanes, and Churchmen, and his Name was Ram; who became ſo memorable for his worthy Deeds, that his Name is made honourable in the Mention amongſt them even to this Day, that whenſoever they meete and ſalute one another, they cry Ram, Ram, as a Word importing the Wiſhes of all Good.

IT is like that after him there ruled many worthy Kings, but Tract of Time rendering euery Thing worſe at the latter Ending then at the Beginning, brought forth ſuch as followed the Courſe of the antient Wickedneſſe, and new Ambitions, and new Hypocriſies, and new Frauds and Circumuentions, and daily Breaches of the Law deliuered in Bremawes Book, began afreſh to make Intruſion amongſt them.

So the Almighty was againe angry, that after ſo many Iudgements, the People would not be warned to his Feare, therefore by God's Appointment, Ruddery cauſed the Earth to open and ſwallow them vp aliue, reſeruing only ſome few of the foure Tribes, as a laſt Tryall for the new peopling of the World againe. And ſuch was the Concluſion of the third Age of the World.

CHAP. XV.

The fourth and laſt Age of the World; VISTNEYES Rapture to Heaven, the BANIANS Opinion touching the final Concluſion of the World, and in what Manner they ſuppoſe it ſhall be.

AFTER this, the Almighty againe commanded, that the World ſhould bee peopled by thoſe that were reſerued, amongſt whom there was one Kyſtney, a famous Ruler and pious King, of whoſe Vertues they have ample Record, as being one moſt notable in the laſt Age, which they thinke now by the Courſe of Time to be deuolued uolued vpon us; he did wonderfully promote Religion, vpon which there was a reformed Beginning of Goodneſſe.

By this, Viſtney's Time (as they ſay) being expired, in this Place and Vale of Mortality; the Lord tooke him vp to Heauen, there being no further neede of his Preſeruation, for when this Age is concluded, there ſhall be a final End of all Things.

But the Bramanes, though they ſuppoſe Time to be running on the fourth Age of the World, yet they ſuppoſe this Age ſhall bee longer than any of the reſt, in the End whereof they ſay Ruddery ſhall be rapt up into Heauen. Theſe Ages they call by foure Names: the firſt, Curtain; the ſecond, Duauper; the third, Tetraioo; the fourth, Kolee.

Concerning the Manner of this final Iudgement, they hold it ſhall be more dreadfull than any of the reſt, and that it ſhall be by Fire; that Ruddery then ſhall ſummon vp all the Power of Deſtruction; that the Moone ſhall looke red; that the Sunne ſhall ſhed his purling Light like flaming Brimſtone; that the Lightening ſhall flaſh with Terrours, the Skies ſhall change into all Colours; but eſpecially Fiery Redneſſe ſhall ouerſpread the Face of Heauen; that the foure Elements of which the World at firſt was conſtituted, ſhall be at Oppoſition and Variance, till by this Agony ſhe be turned to their firſt Confuſion.

And that the finall Conſummation of the World ſhould be by Fire, they gather hence; of ſuch as was the Beginning of the World, of ſuch ſhall be her Diſſolution; but the Principles of the World's Conſtitution were theſe foure; Earth, Ayre, Water, and Fire; therefore by them ſhall ſhe be deſtroyed, which alſo they gather by the Deſtruction of the ſeuerall Ages: For the People of the firſt Age were deſtroyed by Water; the People of the ſecond Age were deſtroyed by Winde, which they accoumpt the Ayre; the People of the third Age were deſtroyd by Earth; and the People of the laſt Age, ſhall be deſtroyed by Fire.

Then (ſay they) ſhall Ruddery carry vp the Soules of all People to Heauen with him, the reſt in God's Boſome, but the Bodies ſhall all periſh; ſo that they believe not the Reſurrection, for they ſay, Heauen being a Place that is pure, they hold it cannot be capable of ſuch groſſe Subſtances.

The Author's Concluſion to the Reader, together with a Cenſure on the material Parts of this Relation.

THUS worthy Reader, thou haſt the Summe of the Banian Religion, ſuch as it is; not voyd of vaine Superſtitions, and compoſed Forgery, as well may bee iudged by the precedent Diſcourſe, wherein, as in all other Hereſies, may be gathered, how Sathan leadeth thoſe that are out of the Pale of the Church, a Round, in the Maze of Errour and Gentiliſme. I might leaue the Particulars to thy Cenſure, as well as to thy Reading; but ſince I haue detected ſuch groſſe Opinions in this Sect, I cannot let them paſſe without a Rod truſt at their Backes, as a deſerued Penance for their Crime.

To helpe thy Memory therefore in a ſhort Reviſe of their forementioned Vanities; what ſeemeth their firſt Age to preſent, but a Figment of their owne deuiſing, to confirme them to be the moſt antient of all People? As if like the Egyptians, in the ſecond Booke of Juſtine, they onely would boaſt of Antiquity; and to lay the firſt Ground of Re-

Religion and Gouernment, when the Scythians had better Arguments to plead than they. How fabulous and like an old Woman's Tale ſeemeth their deuiſed Medium for the World's Propagation, in placing foure Women at the foure Windes? And for the ſecond Age and the World's Reſtauration therein, if by thoſe three Perſons, Bremaw, Viſtney, and Ruddery, they glaunce at the Trinity, how prodigious haue they made that Myſtery, making it rather a Quaternity, than a Trinity? What a monſtrous Fancy haue they formed and ſhaped for the peopling of that Age? and if they ayme not at a Marke ſo ſublime, what Men ſhall deſerue the Attributes to them appropriate? Touching their Law, the maine Pillars thereof haue been demoliſhed in its Confutation: The Kingdome of God conſiſts not in Meates and Drinkes. For other their Ceremonies and Rites, contained in their ſecond Tract of the Booke, what Man of reaſonable Vnderſtanding doth not wonder at their Superſtitions, which place their Faith in outward Waſhings, Lotions, and Sprinklings? In Worſhippe of Sunne, Moone, and other liuing Creatures, in Paintings, Vnctions, and gariſh Proceſſions, in Offerings vnder greene Trees, in Cringings, Beckings, and Bowings to Images, and other multifarious Ceremonies? All Euidences of Braines intoxicate with the Fumes of Errour and Polytheiſme. As for their foure Tribes or Caſts, as in all Things elſe, how Pythagorically they ſtand vpon the Number of Foure! the World was formed of foure Principles, diuided into foure Points of the Compaſſe, to endure for foure Ages, planted by foure Men, matched to foure Women, reſtored againe by foure, and to be demoliſhed by foure ſeuerall Deſtructions, in foure ſeuerall Elements: And to conclude, like Sadduces denying the Reſurrection, in which conſiſts the Hopes of the Bleſſed; of which St. Paul, 1 Cor. xv. 29. If in this Life only we haue Hope in Chriſt, we are of all Men moſt miſerable.

ALL theſe declare how they haue made their Religion a compoſed Fiction, rather than any Thing reall for Faith to lean on. Though then the Nouelty of this Relation may make it gratefull to any, who like an Athenian deſireth to heare ſome Thing ſtrange or new: I know not wherein it may be more profitable, then to ſettle vs in the Solidneſſe of our owne Faith, which is purged of all ſuch Leuities; for the Vainneſſe of Errour makes Truthes greateſt Opinion, which duely conſidered may well moue vs to ſay,

Micat inter omnes
Iulium Sydus, velut inter ignes
Luna minores.

That our great Light outſhines all theſe as farre,
As Siluer Moone outſhines each leſſer Starre.

PREFACE.

THE Brachmans, ſo famous in Antiquity, were not only a Sect of Philoſophers, but a People ſpread up and down that Part of Aſia which now goes by the Name of Indoſtan. The Tenets of their wiſe Men, who were ſirnam'd Gymnoſophiſts, from their going almoſt naked, were ſo very near a-kin to thoſe of the Egyptian Philoſophers, from whom Pythagoras borrow'd the greateſt Part of his, that we may reaſonably preſume, the Gymnoſophiſts of the Indies were a Colony of the Egyptians, whoſe Poſterity ſubſiſts to this Day. The diſtinguiſhing Tenet of both of theſe, was the Metempſychoſis or Tranſmigration of Souls.

'TIS probable that the Name of Brachmans, [a] Bramins, or Bramines, (for Writers have employ'd theſe three Words indifferently) is derived from Brahma, which is the Name of one of their Legiſlators, [b] whoſe Memory was long had in Veneration by thoſe People, becauſe of the excellent Order he eſtabliſh'd in the Indies; where, ſome have aſſur'd, his Writings are ſtill preſerv'd by the Learned of the Country. But as Idolatry is one of the ill Effects that flows from the immoderate Gratitude which Mankind have paid to illuſtrious Perſonages, who had done great Services to Mankind, the Veneration which they firſt had for Brahma, degenerated afterwards into ſuperſtitious Fictions; and his Followers, not ſatisfy'd with having rais'd him above all his Contemporaries, pretended he was more than Man. They [c] imagin'd that God having made a Reſolution to create the Univerſe, began his Work by the Creation of three Beings, who boaſted the utmoſt Perfection, viz. Brahma, who was to create the World; Beſchen, whoſe Office was to preſerve, and Mahadue to deſtroy it. Poſſibly if we knew the true Etymology of theſe three Words, we then might have ſome Grounds to believe, that they thereby intended to denote, the Almighty Power, the Providence, and the Juſtice of God, which they might have expreſs'd after an allegorical Manner, and according to the Genius of the Eaſterns.

'TIS generally thought, that Brahma the Law-Giver [d] divided the People into four Caſtes or principal Tribes. The firſt is that of the Brachmans, or Bramins, which is the moſt noble. Out of this Tribe only, all their Sacrificers, School-Maſters, and Judges of the Nation, are elected. The ſecond is that of the Rageputes, or Rasboutes, who are educated only in the military Way, and are employ'd in defending or enlarging the Frontiers. The third are the Banians, whoſe only Buſineſs is Trade, in ſetting Artificers to Work, and in ſelling their ſeveral Manufactures, by Wholeſale and Retale. The fourth is that of the Artificers, who are ſub-divided into ſeveral others, according to their reſpective Trades. 'Twas neceſſary for me to give this general Idea of this People, in order for our better underſtanding the Relation which the Banians have to one another, (whoſe Opinions relating to the four Ages of the World, may be ſeen in [e] Mr. Lord's Diſſertation) and the Bramins, who are mention'd in this Place.

[a] Methinks Exactneſs requires that we ſhould call the whole Nation Brachmans, and thoſe of the firſt Caſte or Tribe Bramins. However, as this is not yet eſtabliſh'd, we dare not preſume to make this Diſtinction.

I DO not intend to trouble the Reader with a tedious Collection of what the Antients have writ concerning the Brachmans, or Indian Gymnoſophiſts, but ſhall confine myſelf wholly to the modern Brachmans; and, the better to avoid Confuſion, ſhall divide this Diſſertation into two Parts. In the firſt I ſhall treat of their Tribes, their Manners, and civil Ceremonies. The ſecond will conſiſt wholly of their Tenets and religious Ceremonies. But in like manner as a Tartar, who ſhould undertake to give his Countrymen an Account of the Tenets and Ceremonies of the Chriſtians, would be oblig'd to diſtinguiſh between the ſeveral Branches thereof, viz. the Church of England, that of Rome, of Geneva, and that of the Greeks; ſo that I may not aſcribe to all the Bramins in general, ſuch Things as may poſſibly relate to one particular Sect only, it may be proper to inform the Reader, that the Bramins here mention'd are thoſe who inhabit the Peninſula of India, particularly the Coaſt of Coromandel. The Reverend Mr. Abraham Roger, who reſided ten Years at Paliacate, where he made exact Enquiry into the Lives and Principles of the Bramins, among whom he liv'd, has given us a very [a] valuable Relation on that Head, he himſelf being an Eye-Witneſs to what he relates. Though his Manner of writing is harſh and uncouth, and encumber'd with a great Number of uſeleſs Remarks, I yet hope that the Reader will not be unſatisfied with the Extracts I have made from him, ſince I have [b] tranſcrib'd the moſt eſſential Particulars from his Work, and endeavour'd to give it in tolerable Language; and whenever I borrow any Particulars from other Authors who have written on the Bramins, I ſhall take care to quote their Names.

DISSERTATION

RELIGION and MANNERS

BRAMINS.

PART I.

Of their Manners and Civil Ceremonies.

CHAP. I.

Of the Caſtes or Tribes of the Bramins.

THE Nation of the Brachmans is divided into four Caſtes or Tribes; to which we might add a fifth, but this is ſo much deſpis'd by the reſt, that they will not allow it the Name of a Tribe. The four principal are, the Bramins, the Settreas, the Veinsjas, and the Soudras. The firſt is more excellent than the other three, and has the ſame Precedency allow'd it, as the Cow above all other Quadrupeds, in the Opinion of theſe People. The Vedam, which is of the ſame Authority with thoſe People, as the Bible among the Chriſtians, or the Alcoran among the Mahometans, will not allow the Bramins to be puniſh'd with Death for any Crime whatſoever. If any of theſe perpetrate any Crime that merits Death, the worſt Puniſhment they dare inflict upon him is, to put put out his Eyes; for, according to their Principles, any Perſon who kills a Bramin, is guilty of one of thoſe five Sins, the Forgiveneſs of which it is extremely difficult to obtain. And, on the other Side, whoever has been ſo unhappy as to kill one, is by the Vedam condemn'd to twelve Years Pilgrimage, to ask Alms, and to eat always out of the Skull of the murder'd Bramin. The Time of his Penance being expir'd, he is to build a Temple in honour of Eſwara, and be very liberal to the Poor. However, the killing a Bramin who was going to War, would not be ſo heinous a Crime, and a Man would in this Caſe be abſolv'd for building a Temple, provided he were rich enough to do it.

THE ſecond are the Settreas, who are the Quality of the Country, and are the Rajahs or Nobles: The Kings are of this Caſte, whence it is that they take upon themſelves the Title of Raja of Rajas, the Noble of Nobles. This Tribe was antiently divided into two Branches only; the firſt of which was call'd Sourivansjam, and the ſecond Somovansjam, both Names borrow'd from the Samſcortan Tongue, which among them, is the Language of the Literati, as the Latin among us, and in which Souri ſignifies the Sun, and Somo the Moon. Beſides theſe two Branches, ſeveral others have been form'd, who have degenerated by marrying beneath themſelves, ſo that the two former make no ſcruple to marry with one another, but they have the utmoſt Contempt for the reſt.

THE Duty of the Settreas is to defend their Country, and to ſee that the Bramins don't fall into Poverty. The Adminiſtration of all civil Affairs is committed to them; but as they are oblig'd to live upon the Income of their Eſtates, and are not allow'd to have the leaſt Dealings in Trade, a great Number of Children is a Burden to them; whence it frequently comes to paſs, that their Children are oblig'd to ſerve the rich in quality of Soldiers, in order to procure themſelves Subſiſtence.

THE Veinsjas are the third Caſte, who are divided into Comitiis and Sitti Veapari, each of whom pretend to be the true Veinsjas. They ſubſiſt by Traffic, and, like the Bramins, abſtain from every Thing that has Life; whereas thoſe of the ſecond and fourth Tribe, eat Fiſh and Fleſh, that of the Cow excepted, which they are all forbid to eat, in the ſame manner as the Jews and Mahometans are prohibited Swines Fleſh. I ſhall obſerve, by-the-bye, that this Abſtinence from Cow's Fleſh, is leſs the Reſult of Superſtition than [a] Policy. Oxen are the moſt uſeful Beaſts in the Indies, and are uſed inſtead of Horſes for Travelling, carrying Burthens, and Drawing; not to mention the great Benefit of Cow's Milk, as will be obſerv'd in the Sequel.

THE Soudras include the common People. This Caſte is ſubdivided into a great Number of others, who have each their particular Name, which is generally borrow'd from their reſpective Trades. The Caſtes of Soudras have a mutual Emulation among themſelves, and all endeavour to rival each other; and whoever among them obſerves any Innovation, is ſure to oppoſe it. There is one among them which is recogniz'd by the reſt, as chief in Dignity, viz. that of the Vellalas, ſome of whom are employ'd in the Magiſtracy, while others ſubſiſt by Ploughing. The Caſte of Ambria claims the ſecond Place, ſome of whom gain their Livelihood by Sowing, and others by attending upon the Great. The Paliacattas are employ'd in Maſonry. There is a Caſte, call'd the Cauvreas, which conſiſts of a great Number of People; 'tis alſo call'd the

[a] The above-mention'd Author of the Hiſtory of Mogul, beſides this political Reaſon, relates, That under the Reign of Akebar, ſome Perſon went up the Ganges in ſearch of its Source, and that they fancied they had found it in a high Mountain, which ſeem'd to have been cut by Art into the Shape of a Cow's Head. He adds, that the chief Hope of the Happineſs of the Life to come, among the Indians, conſiſts in dying in the Waters of the Ganges, and holding a Cow by the Tail at the ſame Time.

Tribe

Tribe of the three hundred, and is the Receptacle of all ſuch as don't know to what Tribe they belong. Some of theſe are in public Employments, others are Painters, Callico-Printers, or Soldiers. There are a great Number of other Caſtes, whoſe Names and uſual Employments are as follows. The Sitty's are Merchants, if they have any Money to trade with, but otherwiſe they are Porters, and carry Burdens. The Paly's ſell Poultry and Swine; ſome either ſow, or apply themſelves to Painting, or embrace the military Profeſſion, for which they were formerly very famous. The Yenea's are Weavers; the Cottevaniens Fruiterers, particularly for the Fruit of[a] Piſan; the Illevaniens are Fruiterers, and deal in Figs, Cocoa, and the Jagara, or Black-Sugar; the Sitticarams are Merchants, whoſe kind of Traffic differs from that of the Sitty's; the Caltajas are Gold-Smiths, Lock-Smiths, Stone-Cutters, Carpenters, and Maſons; the Carteans, the Patnouvas, and the Macovas, are Fiſhermen; the firſt fiſh with large Nets, the ſecond with leſs, and the third after a different Manner; the Conacapules are Writers; moſt of the Gurreas and the Bargeurras Shepherds; the Riddis, the Camavars, and the Bergaivilalas, are moſt of them Ploughmen; ſome of theſe are Soldiers; the greateſt Part of the Innadis are Soldiers, and very few apply themſelves to Huſbandry; moſt of the Mautreas go into the Field; the Tribe of Tolawa is extinct, and exiſts only in Name; the Kaicules are generally deſpis'd, and moſt of their Wives are Proſtitutes, which nevertheleſs is not conſider'd as an Infamy; ſome are Jugglers, Mountebanks, and Rope-Dancers; others are Weavers; ſome ſow; others turn Soldiers; but the moſt abject of all the Branches of the fourth Caſte, is that of the Pallas, who are held almoſt in as great Contempt as the Perreas, of whom mention will be made in the Sequel. Among the Soudras they alſo reckon the Family of the Correvas, a wandring and vagabond Set of People, who have no other Habitations but little portable Huts, which they carry on their Aſſes when they travel. They ſtand a ſmall Time at the Gates of Cities, to ſell Youpen and Tatous, or ſmall Fans, to winnow Rice. We cannot better compare them than to thoſe Vagabonds, who every now and then ſtrole through the Cities in France, with a Bundle of Mouſe-Traps and ſuch Trifles. Some of theſe go to the Sea-Side for Salt, which they carry up into the Country. Their Poverty and Miſery ſecure them from being tax'd; and as to their Wives, they tell Fortunes.

THE Perreas are the Refuſe of the whole Nation, nor have they the Honour to be conſider'd as a Caſte. They are look'd upon as unclean, and are not ſuffer'd to live in the ſame Street with the reſt, but have a ſeparate Quarter allotted them in every City. Their Villages are always at a Diſtance from others; they alſo have their Wells apart; and for fear leſt any Perſon ſhould through Inadvertency go and draw Water out of them, they are oblig'd to ſcatter Bones all around, as a Mark to keep every one from coming to them. They dare not walk in the Streets, nor go into thoſe Villages which the Bramins inhabit, nor enter into the Temples of Viſnou and of Eſwara, leſt their Uncleanneſs ſhould infect the Bramins and the Temple. They dig the Ground, follow Hedging and Ditching, build Houſes for the common People, and, in a word, exerciſe all ſuch Employments as the reſt think beneath themſelves. Their extreme Poverty makes them feed upon all kind of Animals, without the leaſt Reluctance, not excepting the Cow, nor even the Fleſh of ſuch Beaſts as come in their Way, though they are dead and ſtinking; which makes them ſtill more odious and contemptible to the Bramins, who are ſurprizingly nice in eating. Who would imagine that ſuch miſerable Wretches ſhould ever take it into their Heads to prefer themſelves to other People? 'Tis nevertheleſs certain, that Pride, which is to be found in Rags, has alſo infected the Minds of the Perreas. Theſe imagine themſelves to be much ſuperior to the Siriperes, another Branch of this fifth Family, moſt of whom are Tanners and Leather-Dreſſers, and ſome Soldiers. The Perreas would not condeſcend to eat in the Houſe of a Siripere, but the Siriperes make no ſcruple of eating in that of a Perrea. The Siriperes acknowledge their Inferiority, and uſe certain Marks of Reſpect, which they are oblig'd to obſerve, ſuch as holding their Hands on high, and not daring to ſit down in the Preſence of a Perrea. One of theſe, at Paliacatta, in 1640. having fail'd in his Duty in this Reſpect, the Perreas laid hold of him, and cut off his Hair, which is the greateſt Affront that could poſſibly have been put upon him. Another Hardſhip to which the Siriperes are oblig'd to ſubmit, is, that whenever they marry, they are not allow'd to make a Pandal with more than three Pillars to it. The Pandal is a kind of Arbour, or Bower, rais'd before the Doors of young married Women. They ſet up three or four Poles, ſeven or eight Foot in Length, round which the Leaves of the Piſan-Tree, the Symbol of Joy, are entwin'd: Theſe Poles ſupport others that are laid croſs-ways, which are cover'd with Leaves, in order to form a Shade. The Siriperes, as was before obſerv'd, are allow'd to ſet up no more than three Pillars, and the infringing of this Cuſtom would be more than ſufficient to occaſion an Inſurrection. When any Artificer of the fourth Caſte dies, in caſe his Relations are willing to go to the Expence of having Siriperes at his Funeral, the latter are oblig'd to cut off their Beards, and to follow the Body; and for this they are allow'd a Sute of Clothes and a Fanum, or a Fanum and a half, which is a Piece of Money worth about three Pence Half-Penny, Dutch Money.

[a] 'Tis the Indian Fig-Tree.

THIS Precedency among the four principal Tribes is grounded on a very whimſical Reaſon. They are all of them deſcended from Brahma, but then, ſay they, the Bramins came out of his Head, the Settreas from his Arms, the Veinsjas from his Thighs, and the Soudras from his Feet.

CHAP. II.

Of the different Sects among the BRAMINS.

THE Bramins are divided into ſeveral Sects, whence there reſults a Difference in Manners, and theſe are ſix in Number, viz. the Viſtnouvas, the Seivias, the Smaertas, the Schaervaeckas, the Paſendas, and the Tſchectteas.

THE Viſtnouvas are ſo call'd, becauſe they acknowledge no other God than Viſtnou. Some Soudras aſſume the Quality of Daetſeri, i. e. Servants. The Bramins are alſo call'd Daetsja, or Daſa, which alſo ſignifies Servants, but with this Difference, that the Bramins are Servants of God, and the Soudras thoſe of the Bramins; who aſſure them, that they are infinitely more agreeable to Viſtnou upon that Account, and alſo that ſuch Soudras as die in defending or preſerving of the Bramins, go after their Deaths into Devendre-Locon, a kind of Paradiſe, which will afterwards be mention'd.

THE Viſtnouvas are of two ſorts; the one are call'd Tadvadi-Viſtnouvas, or Madva-Viſtnouvas. Tadvadi is a Word in the Samſcortam Language, ſignifying a Divine, from Tadva, Divinity. Madva is the Name of their Founder. The other ſort of Viſtnouvas are call'd Ramanouja, from Ramanowa-Atsjaria, Author of that Sect. The Tadvadi are diſtinguiſh'd by a red Streak, which they themſelves daily make, from the Noſe to the Forehead, and on the Temples, and by a little round Mark, which they themſelves themſelves make at the joining of the Arm and the Shoulder-Blade, and on the two Nipples. They pretend that this is Viſtnou's Mark; that it defends them from the Devil, and Jamna the Judge of Hell. They promiſe Viſtnou not to ſerve or acknowledge any other God but himſelf, and add, that a virtuous Life muſt illuſtrate this Promiſe, and that otherwiſe they will be puniſh'd for breaking their Vows. The Chief of the Tadvadi lives at Combecomme, a Place known in Palliaccate. He has generally a Bamboo Cane in his Hand, and is oblig'd either to live ſingle, or relinquiſh all his Poſſeſſions when he marries.

THE Ramanoujas draw with Namou, a kind of Chalk, a Figure reſembling the Letter Y, which extends from the Noſe to the Forehead; but they mark themſelves, once for all, with Fire, at the joining of the Arm and the Shoulder-Blade: This, they ſay, is ſufficient, and diſpenſes them from the Neceſſity of marking their Bodies daily. They are a kind of Quietiſts, and aſſert, that 'tis ſufficient for a Man to give himſelf once to God with a Sincerity of Heart, and to have made a Vow of being his only; and that if they ſhould happen to lead ill Lives after this, Viſtnou would not puniſh them for it; for, ſay they, he never abandons thoſe he has once lov'd. A Father does not kill his Son when he has committed a Fault, and 'tis impoſſible for Man to live without Sin. Theſe Ramanoujas go bare-headed, and with their Hair cut very ſhort, except that they leave a Tuft upon the Crown, which hangs behind in a Knot. Their principal Chief reſides at Cansjevaram, a famous City of the Kingdom of Carnata. He has the Privilege of wearing a Piece of Linen Cloth wound round his Head whenever he ſpeaks to any Perſon. They boaſt their being better Men than the Tadvadi, becauſe they never meddle with Traffic, nor frequent ill Houſes, and puniſh with great Rigour all ſuch as are catch'd in them; whereas the Tadvadi may go into them without being cenſur'd for it.

THE ſecond Sect of the Bramins is that of the Seivias, who acknowledge Eſwara for the ſovereign God, making him ſuperior to Viſtnou. Such of the Soudras as join themſelves to the Bramins of this Sect, are call'd Tangam. The Seivias are known by three or four Streaks, which they make upon their Heads with Cow-Dung Aſhes. Some wear a Lingam about their Necks, which is a Stone of a certain Shape, and others wear it in their Hair. Their Children of eight or ten Years old alſo wear it; but then 'tis covered with Wax, and is tied about their Arms with a ſmall Cord. This Lingam is a public Teſtimony of their being wholly devoted to Eſwara; and the Soudras who wear it abſtain, like the Bramins, from every Thing that has Life.

THE third Sect is call'd Smacrtas, and was founded by Sancra Atsjaria. The Smaertas ſay, That Viſtnou and Eſwara are one and the ſame God, and worſhipp'd only under different Repreſentations or Images, and don't approve of the Diſputes which the two preceding Sects have among themſelves about either of theſe Names. Theſe are not diſtinguiſh'd from one another by any exterior Mark, and have few Followers among the common People; for beſides that they couch their Doctrine under very myſterious Terms, and ſpeak of it in the moſt pompous Phraſe, a Spirit of Moderation is not ſo apt to engage the Populace, as thoſe particular Opinions which are inculcated with an Air of Enthuſiaſm.

THE fourth Sect is that of the Schaerwaeckas, who are a kind of Epicureans, that don't believe in the Immortality of the Soul, and treat every Thing they hear mention'd concerning a Life to come, as fooliſh and ridiculous; if we except this Particular, they may be ſaid to lead very regular and exemplary Lives.

THE fifth Sect, call'd the Paſendas, look upon every Thing which the three firſt maintain as fabulous, and agree with the fourth in their Notions of the Mortality of the Soul; but they are far from being as ſtrict in their Morals. The Paſendas abandon themſelves to Vice without the leaſt Reſtraint, and are ſo wretchedly diſſolute, that they have no Regard to any Degree of Conſanguinity in their Debaucheries, but ſay, that every Woman is their own Wife while they are enjoying her. The Members of this Sect dare not always own themſelves to be of it, for ſome of them have been torn to Pieces, from a Hatred of their impious Doctrine.

THE Tſchectteas are the ſixth Sect. Theſe pretend that Tſchecti is the true God, and that Viſtnou, Eſwara, and Brahma are his Creatures, and exiſt only through him. They refuſe to follow the Precepts of the Vedam, and reject every Thing that cannot be demonſtrated by the Teſtimony of the Senſes. The three laſt Sects are look'd upon as Heretics, and are too odious to gain over many Followers.

CHAP. III.

Of the Vanapraſtas, the San-jaſiis, and the Avadoutas.

THE Bramins have alſo their Anchorets, who diſtinguiſh themſelves from the reſt of Mankind by a peculiar Way of Life, to which they aſcribe a certain Degree of Perfection. Thoſe of the firſt Tribe are call'd Jaguis; thoſe of the Caſte of the Soudras are named Joguis. There are three kinds of Jaguis, viz. the Vanapraſtas, the San-jaſiis, and the Avadoutas.

THE Vanapraſtas live retir'd in the Woods, together with their Wives and Children, and feed only on ſuch Herbs and Fruits as they can get without Labour. A great many ſcruple to pluck up even the leaſt Root, and would imagine they committed a Sin, were they thus to diſlodge the Soul of a Plant from the Body in which it reſided. This is look'd upon as a very holy Way of Life.

THE San-jaſiis affect a greater Abſtinence, and abſtain from Marriage, Betel, and all Pleaſures in general. They are allow'd to make but one Meal, and to live on Alms; and inſtead of a Copper Cup, which others generally carry about them, are permitted to uſe earthen Ware only. Their Clothes are dy'd with red Earth, and they have a long Bamboo-Cane in their Hands. They are forbid to touch either Gold or Silver, much leſs to carry any about them: They are not permitted to have any fix'd Habitation, nor ſuffer'd to lie two Nights together in the ſame Place, once a Year excepted, when they are allow'd to continue two Months together in the ſame Place. They then make choice of ſuch a Spot as is thought to be holy, and there they are ſuffer'd to ſpend not only two Months, but all their Life-Time, if they think proper. They are bound to be always ready to oppoſe ſix Enemies, viz. 1ſt, Cama, Luſt; 2d, Croota, Anger; 3d, Lopa, Avarice; 4th, Madda, Pride; 5th, the Love of the Things of this World; 6th, Matſara, a Thirſt for Revenge. Thoſe only of the Tribe of the Bramins, who lead this kind of Life, are call'd San-jaſiis; for if they are Sattreas, or Veinsjas, Veinsjas, they are called Perma-Ampha; and if Soudras, they are then call'd Joguis. The [a] laſt indulge themſelves in greater Liberties than the true San-jaſſis.

THE Avadoutas leave their Wives and Children, and abandon even what the San-jaſſis keep, ſuch as an earthen Porringer, a Bamboo-Cane, Clothes, &c. All they are worth in the World, is no more than a little Piece of Linen Cloth, with which they cover the Pudenda, and there are ſome of them who don't even take this Precaution, but go ſtark-naked. They rub their Bodies with Aſhes, and whenever they are hungry, they go at once into any Houſe, when, without ſo much as ſpeaking one Word, they only hold out their Hands, and immediately eat whatever is given them. Some of theſe will not even give themſelves the Trouble to ask for Alms in this Manner, but lay themſelves down on the Bank of ſome River, where the Country People, who look upon theſe Rivers as holy, never fail to bring them Milk and Fruits in Abundance; ſo that theſe lazy Religious are not ſo miſerable as ſome People may imagine.

CHAP. IV.

Of the Vedam, and the Privileges it allows the BRAMINS.

THE Vedam is the Book of the Law among theſe People, and contains all they are to believe or practiſe. 'Tis written in the Samſcortan Tongue, which is underſtood by ſuch of the Bramins as never traffic. It was divided into four Parts, viz. 1ſt, Rogo-Vedam, which treats of the firſt Cauſe, of the firſt Matter, of the Angels, of the Soul, of Rewards and Puniſhments, of the Generation and Corruption of Creatures, of Sin, and in what Manner it may be remitted, &c. 2dly, Iſſoure-Vedam, which treats of the Powers that preſide over, and govern all Things. 3dly, Sama-Vedam, containing a Syſtem of Morality, to prompt Men to the Practice of Virtue, to ſhun Vice, and hate the Wicked. And 4thly, Addaravana-Vedam, which treated of their religious Ceremonies, Temples, Sacrifices, and Feaſts. This laſt Part has been loſt for many Years, and 'tis to this the Bramins impute the Diminution of their Honours and the Power they formerly enjoy'd. The Vedam is here of indiſputable Authority, they are oblig'd to ſubmit to its Deciſions whenever it is alledg'd to them; however, as they uſed to diſpute frequently on the Manner of interpreting it, the Senſe of it has been fix'd by the Jaſtra's, or Declarations.

THIS Book allows the Bramins five Privileges. The firſt is, to celebrate the Jagam, which is a Feaſt accompanied with a Sacrifice. They ſtrangle their Victims, whether it be that they are forbid to ſhed the Blood of any Animal; or, in order to have it more entire. They afterwards cut it up, then burn it, at the ſame Time repeating certain Prayers adapted to the Solemnity; but reſerve the Heart, which they divide among thoſe Bramins that aſſiſt at the Feaſt, who are not allow'd to eat Fleſh on any other Occaſion. A great many Bramins ſhun this Solemnity, purely from the Horror with which they are ſeiz'd at the Thoughts of eating the Victim.

[a] The Jeſuits, in the Latin Relation of their Miſſions in the Indies, in 1598. and 99, relate, that they ſaw a Jogui who had quite ſhut himſelf up in an iron Cage, except his Head and Legs, and that he walk'd in this Manner, without being able to ſit or lie down. On the Sides of this Cage were an hundred Lamps, which were lighted up at certain Times by four Joguis, who accompanied him. This Fellow thus equipp'd, ſtarted along with as much Vanity and Self-Love, as if he had been a Sun that gave Light to the Univerſe: Nova Hiſtorica Relatio de rebus in India Orientali à P. P. Societatis J. geſtis. Moguntiæ 1601.

THE Celebration of the Jagam is very expenſive; for the Perſon at whoſe Expence it is made, is oblig'd to maintain all the Bramins who aſſiſt at it, though they ſhould amount to a thouſand; and they ſometimes continue at his Houſe, ten, twenty, and even thirty Days. He was formerly oblig'd to give them whatever they ſhould take it into their Heads to ask of him, but now he is quit for treating them. They perform this Sacrifice purely that they may deſerve to go to Devendre-Locon, which is the Manſion of the Bleſſed, where Devendre will preſide over them. Such of the Bramins as hope to go into Heaven itſelf, take care never to celebrate the Jagam.

THE ſecond Privilege of the Bramins, is their being allow'd to inſtruct the Sattreas in the Manner of celebrating this Feaſt; from which the Veinsjas are excluded, and much more the Soudras.

THE third Privilege is the Permiſſion of reading the Vedam.

THE fourth is a Liberty of teaching it to other Bramins and the Settreas, who, becauſe they have learnt it of the Bramins, are therefore allow'd to read it, but not to teach it to others. The Veinsjas dare not read it, nor repeat any Part of it, nor even hear any of it repeated; but there is not the ſame Prohibition with regard to the Jaſtra. As for the Soudras, they are not allow'd ſo much as to ſpeak of the Vedam, or even to learn the Jaſtra.

THE fifth Privilege is the being allow'd the Liberty to beg. The other Tribes are ſuffer'd to give Alms, but they are not permitted to receive any; and indeed there is nothing the Bramins recommend ſo much in their Writings, as Alms-Giving and Charity, provided it be exercis'd towards themſelves; but they never fail to hint, that they are no ways meritorious when beſtow'd on any other Perſons. As for themſelves, they only extend their Charity to ſome few Bramins; and all they would anſwer a Soudra, who ſhould tell them of their great Neceſſity, would be Po, Po, i. e. Go on, Go on. They get the moſt Alms from the Devotees on thoſe ſolemn Days which are call'd Samcramanam, and at the Burials of thoſe who leave Something behind them. Some of them are ſo infatuated with the Merit of this Charity, that the Alms they beſtow on the Bramins and Joguis, brings them to utter Ruin; and indeed their Doors are continually crouded with them.

CHAP. V.

The Employments and Maintenance of the BRAMINS.

THE Bramins are the Inſtructors of the People, whom they are oblig'd to educate in Reading, Writing, and Accompts, and to inſtruct their Diſciples in all Things relating to Religion. If they have enough to live upon, they are not allow'd to take any Recompence; but if poor, they have the Liberty of receiving from their Diſciples whatever may be neceſſary for their ſubſiſting in a decent Manner. Their Kings are oblig'd to provide for them, to enable them to teach gratis; but the Number of Bramins is ſo great, that 'tis impoſſible to provide for them all. We are aſſur'd that they poſſeſs a third Part of the Revenues of the Country, notwithſtanding which, great Numbers of them are reduc'd to the Neceſſity of Begging; others traffic, or practiſe Phyſic. They are forbid to follow any mechanic Trades, under which, Husbandry, Painting, &c. are rank'd. They cannot do certain Offices without derogating from their Quality, ſuch as waſhing the Feet, folding Betel, &c. for any Perſon whatever, not though it were for the King himſelf; and a Bramin who ſhould demean himſelf in this Manner, would be degraded and drove from the reſt: But they may be Secretaries, Ambaſſadors, and Counſellors, and theſe Employments are generally exercis'd by them only.

To ſuch Bramins as the King maintains he gives Villages, but not in quality of their Paſtors or Teachers, as our Rectors, but as Proprietors and Poſſeſſors. It has ſometimes happen'd, as under the Reign of Rama Raja, whoſe Memory is ſtill curs'd upon that Account, that the Kings have claim'd thoſe Poſſeſſions, or commanded the Bramins to give them the Half of the Revenue of thoſe Villages; but other Kings, either mov'd with Compaſſion, or tir'd out with their Complaints, have diſpens'd with this Diviſion of their Revenues. But the Bramins fearing leſt they ſhould be diſpoſſeſſed of the Villages one Time or other, to aſſiſt the Exigencies of the State, upon pretence that they have enjoy'd them long enough, ask leave to allow certain Perſons who are extremely poor, a Share in their Villages, which they have no ſooner obtain'd, but they make a private Engagement with ſome of their Relations. This Permiſſion is engraved on Copper, and all ſuch Villages as are divided in this Manner, are not liable to be demanded back again; for the Kings who ſucceed the Donor, would be afraid that the Complaints of the Poor would make them obnoxious to Viſtnou, or Eſwara.

CHAP. VI.

IT is Birth, and not the embracing their Doctrines, that conſtitutes the Bramins: They ſay that the Imitation of their Life leads to Heaven, but that it cannot make him a Bramin who was not born ſuch. The Bramins conſider their Children as unclean till the tenth Day after their Birth, during which no Perſon is allow'd to touch them, except ſuch as tend them. The Houſe they are born in is unclean, and no one can enter it without being polluted. The tenth Day the Houſe and the Childbed-Linen which the Mother uſed, are purified: They throw out all the earthen Ware that is to be found in the Houſe, and clean all the Copper Veſſels. The twelfth Day they light the Fire Homam, which is look'd upon as very holy, and repeat certain Prayers: The Fire being out, they give the Child ſome of the Names following: Naimopa, Naraina, Beireva, Damerſa, Padmanaba, Rago a, Tirrenata, Marlepa, Devela, Tamopa, Carpa, Vellopa, Rama, Sancra, Goyenda, Varreda, Veinketi. After the Child is named they bore his Ears, to ſignify the [a] Servitude he vows to Viſtnou, or Eſwara. This Ceremony is ſometimes ſuſpended till ſuch Time as they give the Child the Dſandhem, but never longer.

[a] We meet with a like Cuſtom of boring the Ears of voluntary Slaves, Exod. xxi. 6.

THE Child is not look'd upon as a Bramin till he has receiv'd this Dſandhem, which is a kind of little Shoulder-Belt, made of three Strings, each of which has nine Threads of Cotton, which the Bramins only are allow'd to make. He is carried in a Sling, which comes over the Left Shoulder, and hangs under the Right Arm. Children may receive it at five Years of Age, but they ſometimes ſtay till they are ten; but the Poverty of the Parents generally occaſions this Delay, this Ceremony putting them to ſome Expence. They are oblig'd to light the Fire Homam, and burn Ravaſitou-Wood in it, which they look upon as the holieſt of all Trees: This Fire is plac'd on a little Eminence, over which they raiſe a kind of Canopy with their Clothes ſpread; underneath are the Bramins, who throw into the Fire Nili, or Rice, with its Chaff; Butter, Zingeli, a Seed with which they make Oil for Burning; Wheat, boil'd Rice, and Incenſe, during which they repeat certain Prayers. All the Bramins who are invited to this Ceremony, which laſts four Days, have their Expences bore by the Child's Parents.

THE young Bramins who have receiv'd the Dſandhem, go by the Name of Bramaſariis till they are married. The Vedam prohibits their having any Commerce with Women, or to eat Betel, which is a Provocative to Love, during the Time they continue ſingle: They are allow'd to make but one Meal a-Day, which they are to procure by Begging; however they mind theſe Precepts very little, that excepted which relates to Betel.

WHEN a Perſon has once receiv'd the Dſandhem, he is oblig'd to wear it all his Life-Time; and if it ſhould happen to break through wearing, he is not to eat till he has got himſelf another, and till then the reſt are not obliged to look upon him as a Bramin. But to prevent theſe Accidents, they always have a new one every Year at the Feaſt of Traſvanala-Poudeva, that happens in Auguſt, which is the Seaſon of their giving the Dſandhem to Children. The other Families may alſo wear it out of Devotion, but then they are oblig'd to purchaſe it of the Bramins.

THESE Bramaſariis learn to read, to write, to caſt Accompts, &c. of thoſe Bramins who are appointed to teach. Every Family make it a Point of Honour not to ſend their Children to School to ſuch Maſters as are of an inferior Caſte; but the Settreas, for inſtance, ſend their Children to the Bramins, or to the Maſters of the ſame Caſte with themſelves. None of the three firſt will condeſcend to teach the Children of the Perreas, and the Soudras only will admit them into their Schools.

CHAP. VII.

Of the Philoſophy of the BRAMINS.

WE don't find among the modern Bramins any Footſteps of the Philoſophy for which their Anceſtors were ſo famous; and as for [a] Aſtrology, they are ſo groſly ignorant of this Science, that their ableſt Men ſcarce know how to calculate an Eclipſe of the Sun or Moon, and the Conjunction of the Planets, not to mention that they are ignorant of the Cauſes of it. That which they give for the Eclipſes of the Sun and Moon, is as follows:

VISTNOU and Eſwara held one Day a Council with the [a] Devetas and Ratsjasjas, that is, with the Angels and Devils, in order to find out Something, the Poſſeſſion whereof might be a Preſervative againſt Hunger, Thirſt, Wearineſs, and even Death itſelf. The Reſult was, that they ſhould throw into the Sea the Mountain Merouva, which is of pure Gold, whoſe Top touches the empyreal Heaven which ſtands over the eight Worlds, and whoſe Foot reaches down to the Bottom of the Abyſs; that they ſhould whirl that Mountain about as a Turner turns his Work, and ſhould make uſe of the great Serpent Sesja inſtead of a Rope. The Devetas and Ratsjasjas being employ'd in turning this Mountain about, ſeveral Prodigies appear'd, and among the reſt a Poiſon call'd Kalekote-Visjam, of ſo venomous and dreadful a Nature, that the whole World was alarm'd at it, and implor'd the Succour of Viſtnou. Eſwara, in order to rid them of this Poiſon, put it into his Mouth, but it ſtuck in his Throat, whence he is ſirnam'd Nile-Canta, or Black-Throat. After this there appear'd a Woman exquiſitely beautiful; her Viſtnou married, and 'tis ſhe is at this Time his Wife Latſemi, whoſe Temple is within that of Viſtnou. After this, what they were in Search of appear'd, viz. Amortam, being a Liquor like Milk; for which Reaſon the Bramins, though they dare not drink Water in a Houſe, may yet drink Milk, from its Reſemblance to Amortam.

No ſooner was the Amortam found, but Viſtnou put an End to the Fatigue of the Devetas and the Ratsjasjas, and to eaſe their Wearineſs, order'd them to draw up in two Lines, that he might give them ſome of that Liquor to drink, which they had procur'd by their Labour. He made the Devetas taſte of it, but not being willing to indulge Immortality to the Ratsjasjas, he gave them a different Liquor. Two of the latter, whoſe Names were Ragou and Ketou, ſuſpecting their Companions would not have the ſame Liquor as the Devetas, chang'd Place, and put themſelves among the latter. Accordingly they drank Amortam with the reſt; but the Sun and Moon perceiv'd the Fraud, and gave Viſtnou Notice thereof, who immediately cut off their Heads, which were immortal, becauſe of the Amortam's continuing in them, it not being yet got down into their Bodies, which were ſhap'd like thoſe of Serpents. Theſe two Heads began to proteſt againſt the Injuſtice of Viſtnou, ſaying, Why do you treat us in this Manner for having drank Amortam? did not we labour as much as the reſt? Viſtnou anſwer'd, That from that Time forward they ſhould remain without Bodies, but that their Heads alone ſhould enjoy as much Pleaſure as if their Bodies had been join'd to them. Ragou and Ketou have entertain'd a mortal Hatred againſt the Sun and Moon for making this Diſcovery: They fight againſt them from Time to Time; and the Darkneſs which happens during Eclipſes, is owing to Ragou and Ketou's having ſwallow'd one or both of their Enemies.

[a] Bernier calls it Deutas; perhaps he had written Devtas, by pronouncing it almoſt as if it had been written Deftas, which would be the ſame Thing.

CHAP. VIII.

The Marriages of the BRAMINS.

SUCH Bramins as have Sons, endeavour to marry them betimes; the Rich are more haſty in this Matter than the Poor, but thoſe of the three firſt Caſtes never marry them till ſuch Time as they have receiv'd the Dſandhem. Thoſe of the firſt are oblig'd to make choice of ſuch young Women as have not yet the Marks of Puberty. The Parents of thoſe young Women who have them before they get Husbands, conceal that Circumſtance very carefully, for fear it ſhould prevent their ever being married. But the Parents of ſuch young Men as are afraid of this, provide for their Sons Girls who are ſtill younger, to prevent their being impos'd upon. The Settreas don't obſerve this Cuſtom ſo exactly as the Bramins; however all thoſe who conform themſelves to it, have the greateſt Reſpect ſhewn them.

WHEN a Bramin goes to demand a young Woman in Marriage for his Son, he pays the higheſt Regard to Preſages. If he meets a ſiniſter Sign in his Way, he then poſtpones the Affair to ſome other Day; in caſe he has a bad Sign a ſecond Time, he again puts it off; but if the ſame happens a third Time, he then lays aſide all Thoughts of the Match, from a firm Perſuaſion that it would be unhappy. To hear a Serpent nam'd the firſt Day a Bramin is going upon ſuch an Affair, is a bad Sign; but the ſeeing one is enough to make him lay it wholly aſide. The Veinsjas have a particular Cuſtom among them, and that is the melting down a Half-Pagod, or Half-Ducat of Gold; in caſe the Gold, after 'tis thus melted down, appears with a ſhining Hue, 'tis then a propitious Sign; but in caſe it be dull, they change their Reſolutions; however, the Bramins laugh at this kind of Divination.

THE Man whoſe Daughter is ſought for in Marriage, deſires to ſee the Youth who is to be his future Son-in-Law, when he enquires into his Subſtance. In caſe he finds Matters to his Satisfaction, he then allows him to viſit her in Preſence of her Parents; and then if the young Couple are pleaſed with each other, and the Parents give their Conſent, they are immediately married. The Conſent of the Soudras muſt be purchas'd, and they oblige the Lover, before they allow him to marry their Daughter, to give them a certain Sum of Money over and [a] above the Bargain; and this they call a Gift, for they would be aſham'd to have it thought they ſold their Daughters.

WHEN the Parties are agreed, they make choice of a fortunate Day; for theſe People have a Calendar, in which the lucky and unlucky Days are ſet down. Then the Relations on both Sides meet, and perform a Ceremony which anſwers to our Betrothings. The Bride's Father preſents Betel to the Bridegroom's Relations, and declares to the Company, that he has given his Daughter to —— N——, a Member of the Family of the Perſons preſent. This being done, the Bridegroom's Relations give Betel to thoſe of the Bride, when they make the ſame Declaration, and take the Company for Witneſſes; and when this is perform'd, the Couple are married, provided it be at a proper Time; for they are not allow'd to marry in all Seaſons of the Year. There are certain Months appointed for that Purpoſe, and theſe are February, May, June, October, and the Beginning of November; as alſo certain ſtated Hours in thoſe Months, all which they obſerve very carefully.

[a] In the French 'tis en forme de pot de vin, which anſwers to the Term uſed by the common People in buying certain Things, when they ask for a Bleſſing, which is Something over and above.

WHEN

WHEN the Time for conſummating the Marriage is come, they light the Fire Homam with the Wood of Ravaſitou. [a] The Bramin bleſſes the former, which being done, the Bridegroom takes three Handfuls of Rice, and throws it on the Bride's Head, who does the ſame to him. Afterwards the Bride's Father clothes her in a Dreſs according to his Condition, and waſhes the Bridegroom's Feet, the Bride's Mother obſerving to pour out the Water. This being done, the Father puts his Daughter's Hand in his own, puts Water into it, ſome Pieces of Money, and giving it to the Bridegroom, ſays at the ſame Time; I have no longer any Thing to do with you, and I give you up to the Power of another. The Tali, which is a Ribbon with a golden Head hanging at it, is held ready, and being ſhewn to the Company, ſome Prayers and Bleſſings are pronounced, after which the Bridegroom takes it, and hangs it about the Bride's Neck. This Knot is what particularly ſecures his Poſſeſſion of her; for before he had tied the Tali on, all the reſt of the Ceremonies might have been made to no Purpoſe; for it has ſometimes happen'd, that when the Bridegroom was going to fix it on, the Bride's Father has diſcover'd his not being ſatisfied with the Bridegroom's Gift, when another Offering more has carried off the Bride with her Father's Conſent. But when once the Tali is put on, the Marriage is indiſſoluble; and whenever the Husband dies, the Tali is burnt along with him, to ſhew that the Marriage Bands are broke. Beſides theſe particular Ceremonies, the People have Notice of the Wedding by a [b] Pandal, which is rais'd before the Bride's Door ſome Days before. The whole concludes with an Entertainment which the Bride's Father gives to the common Friends; and during this Feſtivity, which continues five Days, Alms are given to the Poor, and the Fire Homam is kept in. The ſeventh Day the new-married Couple ſet out for the Bridegroom's Houſe, whither they frequently go by Torch-Light. The Bride and Bridegroom are carried in a Sedan, paſs through the chief Streets of the City, and are accompanied by their Friends, who are either on Horſeback, or mounted on Elephants. In caſe the Bride is not of an Age fit for conſummating the Marriage, her Relations don't leave her above three or four Days in her Husband's Houſe, after which ſhe is brought back to that of her Father; but if ſhe is arriv'd at Puberty, ſhe ſtays with her Husband.

THE Bramaſariis no longer go by that Name when they are married, but are call'd Grahaſtas, and on that Occaſion they add three Strings more to the Dſandhem. They are oblig'd to increaſe it in the ſame Manner every ten Years, and at the Birth of every Child. But though the Vedam is expreſs on this Head, they yet don't ſcruple very often to neglect its Injunctions. The Bramins, who are forbid to go with their Stomachs bare, think it ſufficiently covered when they have got theſe Strings on.

THE above-mentioned think it derogatory to their Character to marry Women of another Caſte; not but ſome of them, when they are not pleaſed with their Parents Choice, marry Women of an inferior Caſte, when they happen to fall in love with them; but their marrying a Woman of the Caſte of the Soudras, is thought to be ſo criminal an Action, that if a Bramin happens to have any Children by ſuch an one, he is excluded Heaven as long as that unworthy Race continues upon Earth. Their Poranes, or Chronicles, relate, that the Bramin Sandragoupeti Naraia was ſeiz'd with the deepeſt Affliction when his Son Barthroukerri, whom he had had by a Wife of the Caſte of the Soudras, had married three hundred Wives; concluding that the prodigious Number of their Deſcendants would fruſtrate him of the Enjoyment of the Felicities of the Life to come for a long Series of Years.

[a] Theſe People pretend, that the Bramins among Men, the Cow among Quadrupeds, the Garouda among Birds, the Ganges among Rivers, and the Kavaſitou among Trees, are particularly pleaſing to God, and aſcribe a particular Holineſs to them all.

INCEST

INCEST is one of the five Sins, the Remiſſion whereof is not eaſily obtain'd. The Man is by the Vedam condemn'd to loſe the guilty Parts, and as they will not ſuffer the Wound to be dreſs'd, the Operation is always mortal; but the Woman is not puniſh'd, it being always ſuppos'd the Man had ſeduc'd her.

THE Degrees of Conſanguinity among them are pretty near the ſame as with us, except that they allow the marrying of two Siſters. They make a Diſtinction between Couſin-Germans and Nieces, a Man may marry the Daughter of his Aunt by the Father's Side, or their Siſter's Daughter; but the Marriage would be inceſtuous, were they to marry either their Uncle's Daughter by the Father's Side, or their Brother's Daughter. The Soudras, who are leſs ſcrupulous on this Head, marry indifferently their Brother's or Siſter's Daughter.

As Polygamy is not prohibited by the Vedam, the four Caſtes are left to their Liberty on that Article, and the Poranes mention ſeveral Bramins whoſe Reputation was not injur'd by a Plurality of Wives.

WHEN a Bramin finds that his Wife has violated the Faith ſhe owed him, he may confine her at Home, but muſt take care not to let the World know any Thing of it. Some among them chuſe rather to diſſemble ſuch an Affair, by guarding againſt it for the future, particularly if they love their Wives, and are abſolutely bent upon enjoying them. However, if once the Crime is divulg'd, the other Bramins look upon the Houſe as polluted, refuſe to eat, or even enter into it; in which Caſe the Huſband prepares a Feaſt, and invites the Bramins and Sansjaſiis to partake of it. The Adultereſs waits upon the Gueſts on this Occaſion, and when once the Bramins have condeſcended to take any Victuals from her Hands, the reſt of the Company don't ſcruple to follow their Example; and when this is done, the Husband may keep his Wife as before, without reflecting the leaſt Diſhonour on himſelf.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Lucky or Unlucky Days, and of the Panjamgam.

THE Bramins are ſuperſtitiouſly of Opinion, that there are certain Days on which it would be impoſſible for them to ſucceed in any Affair whatever. But this fatal Prejudice often makes them neglect the moſt favourable Opportunities, when they happen to fall out on ſuch a Day as is mark'd an unlucky one in the Panjamgam, i. e. in an Almanac, in which both the lucky and unlucky Days are ſet down.

THIS Panjangam, which they look upon as infallible, is of two Kinds, [a] The one was made by Brahaſpeti, Doctor of the Devetas, or good Angels, wherein he has ſet down the lucky and unlucky Days, and even ſuch as are but half lucky, or ſo during a few Hours only. A new one is annually made on this Model, which ſerves for a Guide to the Country People. The other Panjangam, they ſay, was compos'd by Succra, Doctor of the Ratsjasjas, or Devils. This is ſo very particular, as to take notice of every Hour in the natural Day, which this People divide into ſixty Hours.

[a] Brahaſpeti ſignifies the Planet Jupiter, and Succra Venus. The Reader will afterwards find, that Brahaſpeti-Varam is Thurſday, and Succra-Varam Friday.

'TIS

'TIS plain that they muſt often let Opportunities ſlip, if, to the great Number of Days and Hours during which they are diverted from attempting any Affair, we ſhould add their great Credulity with regard to Signs and Preſages. 'Tis a good Sign when they ſee the Bird [a] Garrouda, or that call'd Pala, flying before them, and croſs-ways, from Right to Left. Other Birds are, on the contrary, of good Augury, if they fly from Left to Right. If a Magpye, of which there are great Numbers in that Country, happens to touch any Perſon in its Flight, they immediately conclude that ſuch Perſon, or one of his Relations, will die in ſix Weeks. If any one happens to ſneeze while a Perſon is going out of the Houſe, he turns back againſt immediately.

THE Bramins begin the Year with the new Moon of April, by a Feaſt which they call [b] Samvat-Yſaradi Panduga. The Year is divided into twelve Months, viz. Tſeitram, April; Veinjacam, May; Jeiſtam, June; Ajadam, July; Srarvanam, Auguſt; Badrapadam, September; Asvaijam, October; Carticam, November; Magiſaram, December; Poujam, January; Magam, February; Palgouvam, March. But as theſe Months, which are lunar ones, would not agree exactly with the ſolar Year, they intercalate or add a thirteenth Month every three Years, in the ſame Manner as we [c] add a Day to February every Leap-year.

THE ſeven Days of the Week are called, in the Samſcortam Language, by the Names that anſwer to the ſeven Planets, and are as follows: Suria-Varam, Sunday; Jendra-Varam, Monday; Angaraca-Varam, Tueſday; Butta-Varam, Wedneſday; Barhaſpeti-Varam, Thurſday; Succra-Varam, Friday; Senni-Varam, Saturday. Sura ſignifies the Sun, and Jendra the Month, or the Moon. Sunday is alſo called Adita-Varam, and Monday Somo-Varum.

As the antient Greeks computed by Olympiads, each of which conſiſted of [d] four Years, and the Roman Chancery had its Indictions, each of which were fifteen Years; ſo the Bramins have a Revolution of threeſcore Years, at the End of which they begin another. They do not diſtinguiſh each of their Years numerally, that is, they don't ſay the 30th or 40th Year, but each Year has its particular Name. Here follows theſe Names in the Order in which they are placed; but for Brevity ſake, it may be proper to acquaint the Reader, that the Word Samſvatſaram, ſignifying the Year, is added to each. 1 Prabava, 2 Bipava, 3 Suckela, 4 Pramadonta, 5 Prajopatti, 6 Augireſa, 7 Tſrimocha, 8 Bhava, 9. Jouva, 10 Dhatou, 11 Eſvara, 12 Bahoudhau-ja, 13 Pramadi, 14 Vicrama, 15 Visjou, 16 Tſidtrabhanou, 17 Tſabhanou, 18 Tarana, 19 Paartouva, 20 Veiba, 21 Thervaſittou, 22 Tſervadari, 23 Vierothi, 24 Vicrouti, 25 Carram, 26 Nandana, 27 Viſei-ja, 28 Tſeja, 29 Maumaltha, 30 Dormeki, 31 Hevelembi, 32 Villembi, 33 Vicari, 34 Tſareverri, 35 Plauva, 36 Tſhopo-Cortou, 37 Tſoba-Cortou, 38 Credi, 39 Viſvavaſou, 40 Parabava, 41 Palavanga, 42 Kileka, 43 Tſaumea, 44 Tſadarena, 45 Virodi-Cretou, 46 Pradavi, 47 Paramadiſia, 48 Ananda, 49 Ratjaja, 50 Nata, 51 Pingata, 52 Calicti, 53 Tſidarti, 54 Raudri, 55 Durmati, 56 Dundoubi, 57 Rudiro-Dgari, 58 Ractatſi, 59 Crodova, 60 Tſaja. The preſent year 1735. is Viſvavaſou, the 39th of that Period.

HOWEVER, this way of computing Years is not univerſal, they having a Method of fixing the Date, when any conſiderable Event is to be tranſmitted to diſtant Poſterity. As the Chriſtians have their Æra, and the Mahometans their Hegira, ſo the Bramins make the Reign of Salavagena, of whom the moſt aſtoniſhing Things are related, their Epocha. They pretend that he is the ſame with Brahma, who coming to live again upon the Earth, aſſumed that Name. Salavagena, according to the Calculation made by the Rev^d Mr. Royer, on the Informations of a Bramin, died Anno 2563 of our Vulgar Æra, near the End of the Reign of Vicramaarca, of whom Miracles, no leſs ſurpriſing, are related. Here follows ſome of his Adventures.

THE Bramin, Sandragoupeti abovementioned, married four Wives of four different Caſtes: She of the Bramin Tribe was delivered of Veneroutsfi; the ſecond, who was of the Tribe of the Settreas, brought Vicramaarca into the World; the third, being of the Tribe of the Veinsjas, was the Mother of Betti; and the fourth, who was of the Tribe of the Soudras, was delivered of Barthrouherri. Vicramaacra was a Monarch equally dreaded and belov'd by his Subjects; but, reflecting one Day on the Shortneſs of Man's Life, he grew ſad, and fancying he ſhould not long enjoy the uninterrupted Proſperity with which he was crown'd, fell into a deep Melancholy, and conſulted his Brother Betti, to whom he always applied in any Affairs of Importance. Here follows the Reſult of their Conſultation. There is in the Middle of the World a Tree, call'd [a] Oudetaba, which ſhoots up out of the Earth at Sun-riſe, and growing in Proportion as that Planet moves higher, touches it with its Top when it comes to the Meridian; after which it ſinks downward with the Day, and hides itſelf in the Earth when the Sun is under the Horizon. Set your ſelf on that Tree at Day-Break, ſays Betti to Vicramaarca, and this, as it riſes, will carry you up to the Sun, of whom you muſt demand a longer Term of Years than is indulg'd to the reſt of Men.

THE King followed his Advice, but being mounted to a certain Height, felt himſelf ſcorch'd with intolerable Heat; this however did not damp his Courage, and the Sun, who was not diſpleaſed with his Deſign, ſoftned the Violence of his Rays, cool'd him, and promiſed to grant him his Requeſt. Thou, ſays he to him, ſhalt ſit a thouſand Years upon thy Throne, during which neither thy Health or Strength ſhall be impair'd by any kind of Diſeaſe. No ſooner was the Tree ſunk down level with the Earth, but the King went and told his Brother of the Succeſs of his Petition. The Sun has granted you a thouſand Years, ſays the faithful Betti, and I myſelf will procure you a thouſand more. Since a Promiſe has been made you, that you ſhall ſit a thouſand Years on the Throne, whenever you ſhall have ſat ſix Months thereon, ſpead the remaining Half Year in travelling, by which Means you will double the Time which has been allotted you. Vacramaarca alſo followed this Advice, and met with a very ſingular Adventure in his Travels. The Servants of Jegiſoara diſputed about dividing an Inheritance which that holy Man had bequeathed to them. This Inheritance conſiſted in a Purſe, which whoever poſſeſs'd ſhould never want Money; in a Diſh, that would be ever fill'd with Meat; in a Stick ſhap'd like a Crook, which whoever was Maſter of, need never to ſtand in fear of an Enemy; and laſtly, in [b] a Shoe, whoſe Virtue was ſuch, as to convey in an Inſtant to whatever Place the Wearer ſhall deſire to go. Vicramaarca met them as they were ſquabbling, each reſolving to make choice of which of them he thought proper, when making himſelf the Umpire, he put on the Shoe, took the Purſe, the Diſh, and the Crook, and vaniſh'd in a Moment, leaving the Wranglers in the utmoſt Confuſion, and vex'd at the Heart for having diſagreed in the Manner they had done. The Writers of the Hiſtories of the Bramins mention a great Number of Miracles of the ſame Stamp, wrought the by two Brothers in their Travels.

THE Number Sixty is not only uſed for the enumerating of their Years, for the Bramins, inſtead of dividing the natural Day into twenty-four Hours, as is the Cuſtom among us,

[b] This Whim is very like Fortunatus's Cap.

divide

divide it into ſixty Hours, viz. the Day into thirty, and the Night into as many. They have a kind of Clepſydra, or Hour-Glaſs, which meaſures Time by the running of Water. This Clepſydra is only a Copper Bowl with a Hole bored in it; this they leave floating on the Water, and when it is full, they empty it, and ſtrike the Hour of the Day or Night on the Copper Veſſel.

CHAP. X.

The Daily Exerciſes of the BRAMINS.

THE Bramins are obliged to obſerve certain Ceremonies, which it is impoſſible for them to diſpenſe with, without violating the Law. I ſhall relate what is enjoin'd them. In regard to all obligatory Duties, 'tis eaſier to ſay what ought to be done, than what is really perform'd.

THE Bramins are obliged to wake two Hours, or one at leaſt, before the Dawn, and begin by repeating the ſeveral Names of God. In caſe they have no Buſineſs that obliges them to riſe ſo ſoon, they then may lie half an hour longer in Bed, and repeat the Name of God to themſelves; however, 'tis better to riſe at once. Having eaſed Nature, they waſh their Hands, their Face, and Feet, and ſet themſelves down either on a Board or a Carpet, but never on the bare Earth, nor on their Beds, with their Faces turn'd towards the North or Eaſt, but never to the South or Weſt. The Reaſon why they turn towards the Eaſt, is becauſe the Sun riſes in that Quarter of the Heavens; and towards the North, becauſe thoſe Places which they look upon as moſt holy, are on that Side with reſpect to them. They afterwards begin to ſing the Story of Gasjendre Mootsjam; but in caſe the Sun is not yet riſen, they ſing ſome Hymn: This being done, they riſe, waſh their Mouths and their Teeth; or if there be any ſacred River near their Houſes, or ſome Tan, i. e. Pool of Water, they then go and waſh themſelves in it: But in caſe there be none, they bathe at home, and put on clean Clothes.

THE Bramins call ſuch Clothes clean as have not been put on ſince their being waſh'd, or have been wetted ſince they were worn; they are look'd upon as clean ſo long as they are not worn or touch'd by any Perſon. But as Silks are ſpoiled by wetting, they have found out a Remedy in this Caſe, by declaring that Silk Clothes are naturally pure. However, if any one were to eat with a Silk Gown on, it would immediately become unclean; and for this Reaſon they throw it off before they ſet down at Table.

BEING dreſs'd, they ſit down again in the ſame Place, and take ſome Well-Water juſt drawn; for if it were a Day old it would be too ſtale; in this they dip that Thing with which they mark their Faces, pour Water into their Hands thrice, and throw it as many Times into their Mouths, obſerving not to touch it with their Hands. This being done, they repeat the twenty-four Names of God, which they call Making Japon, by touching ſo many Parts of the Body.

AT Sun-Riſe they pour Water thrice into the Hollow of their Hands, and throw it on the Ground, repeating a ſhort Prayer at the ſame Time. This Ceremony, which is perform'd for the Sun's Sake, is grounded on a Chimæra of theirs, viz. that the Sun riſes between certain Mountains, and is oblig'd to paſs thro' a narrow Paſſage, which is in-feſted by certain Genii or Spirits, who endeavour to check his Progreſs. Some Bramins one Day threw up Water into the Sun, which made ſuch a Noiſe as frighted away thoſe Devils, and put them to Flight. We are very ſenſible, ſay the modern Bramins, that what we now do is of no Manner of Advantage to the Sun; however we thereby give him a Teſtimony of the Good-Will we bear him, in Imitation of thoſe who really ſuccour'd him.

THEY afterwards begin again to throw Water thrice into their Mouths, as they pay their Adorations to the Sun, and to the Beings who preſide over the Worlds ſituated under the Heavens. If they are of the Sect of the Viſtnouvas, they take a kind of Chaplet, the Beads whereof are made of a very fragrant Wood called Toleja; but the Beads of thoſe of the Caſte of the Seivias are made of Coral or Cryſtal. Some put this Chaplet about their Necks, others hold it in their Hands, but hid under their Coats, or in a Pocket made for that Purpoſe. At the End of every Prayer they let drop a Bead. Thoſe who have not much Time to ſpare, ſay only twenty-eight Prayers; ſuch as have more Leiſure, repeat one hundred and twenty eight; but ſuch Devotees as have nothing to do, ſay over a thouſand.

THESE Prayers being ended, they worſhip Salagrammas, and waſh it with clean Water. This is an Idol made of a particular Stone, having a Hole in it, in which they ſay are the Coats of Arms of God. Tiertum is the Name of the Water wherein they waſh it, which is kept for another religious Uſe, as we ſhall ſee hereafter. The Idol Salagramma being thus waſhed, is dreſs'd in a clean Sute, or wrapp'd up in Linen, and anointed with a Perfume compoſed of Sandal, odoriferous Flowers, and Leaves of Toleja. The ſame Ceremony is perform'd before another little Idol of Copper, on each Side of which they light up one or more Wax Tapers, according to their Subſtance or Devotion. They preſent it Victuals juſt dreſs'd, or elſe Fruits or Milk. They ſcatter Flowers over it, turn thrice, and ſometimes more, round it, and at every Turn they fall proſtrate on the Ground, with their Hands claſp'd, and their Arms ſtretch'd out. They afterwards ſet the Idol on the Ground, take the Tiertum or Water with which they had waſhed Salagramma, throw it once on their Heads and thrice in their Mouths, with a few Leaves of Toleja, and anoint their Foreheads with ſome Angaram, which is a Preparation of the Gum call'd Benjamin. They tell us that the Angaram has the Virtue of fortifying the Mind againſt Sin, but then it muſt have been offered to the Idol; as alſo the Toleja, which they put into their Ears, to prevent the Impurity they might otherwiſe contract by touching a dead Carcaſs or a Soudra. The Virtue of the Tiertum is ſuch, as to purify them from all the Sins they may have committed from their Infancy. After having preſented the whole Company with Tiertum, they burn a little Incenſe, and then have the Liberty to go and breakfaſt with thoſe Bramins who aſſiſted at the Ceremony. They pray before and after Meals, waſh their Hands, throw Water thrice into their Mouths, make Japon, and take Tiertum again; and after this are altogether as pure as before. They repeat this Ceremony as often as they imagine they have been polluted.

IF they do not breakfaſt, nor eat before Noon, the Ablution at Day-Break is not ſufficient; they therefore repeat it, and return to their Idol, before which they ſtrew Flowers, or for want of theſe, ſome Toleja, and preſent it with whatever they are to eat; for the Bramins dare not take any Suſtenance before it has been offer'd to it.

A LITTLE before Sun-Set, they waſh afreſh, mark themſelves, perform Japon, and give Water to the Sun. If they are Grahaſtas, i. e. married, they ſup. I have already obſerved that the Bramaſariis and the Samjaſiis make but one Meal a Day. Laſtly, they ſay a Prayer, and after that go to reſt.

IN the Morning, at Noon, and in the Evening, they, after they have perform'd the Ceremony of the twenty-four Names of God, read the Poranes, or antient Chronicles; and this Book is had in ſuch great Veneration among theſe People, that they carefully obſerve to waſh their Ears, in order that being pure, they thereby may be more worthy to hear ſo holy a Work read.

NEVERTHELESS this Exerciſe is not ſo punctually obſerv'd, but that a great many Bramins diſpenſe with ſeveral Circumſtances in it. However, they are indiſputably oblig'd to perform the Tiertum and the Japon; and if one ſingle Perſon in a Houſe performs every Thing enjoin'd in this Chapter, that alone ſuffices for the whole Family. Indeed very few execute punctually all the Things preſcribed by the Law, except thoſe who are employed in the public Worſhip of the Idols.

CHAP. XI.

THE Bramins ſing every Morning at Day-Break a Hymn, containing the Story of [a] Gasjendre Motsjam, the Subſtance whereof is as follows. In one of the ſeven Seas of Milk is a Mountain call'd Tricovetta-Parvatam, ten thouſand Leagues high, and as many broad. This Mountain has three Summits, one of which is of Gold, the other of Silver, and the third of Iron, each of which is adorn'd with precious Stones. A Deveta, call'd Indre Duomena, who rides up and down Heaven and Earth in a Chariot, which flies ſwifter than the Wind, ſtopping at this Mountain, found a Place in it which he thought very proper for himſelf and his Wife to divert themſelves; and after having waſhed himſelf therein, he ſaw a Moneſvara paſs by, but did not pay him the leaſt Honour. Theſe Moneſvaras are, however, of a Nature more holy and more exalted than that of the Devetas; for the latter will not be admitted into Paradiſe, but after the finiſhing of their Courſe muſt return back into the World. The Moneſvara was ſo much the more offended at the Incivility of the Deveta, as he knew that his Pride, not his Ignorance, had made him guilty of it. Thou, ſays he to him by way of Curſe, ſhalt become an Elephant, and inſtead of Women ſhalt have no other Company than that of female Elephants: For theſe People call the Proud, Elephants, in the ſame Manner as we give the Name of Aſſes to the Stupid and Ignorant.

THE Deveta terrified at his Doom, would fain have made amends for the Fault he had committed, and for that Purpoſe humbled himſelf and ſued for Pardon; but all he could obtain, was, that he might reſume his firſt Shape after a certain Term of Years. But the Decree was irrevocable, ſo that he was changed into an Elephant on the ſame Mountain, and had ten [b] Lac-Cotis of Females, with whom he lived for a long Series of Years, without dreading either Tygers, Lions, or other wild Beaſts. As he was one Day going to drink at a Pond, a Crocodile ſeiz'd his Foot, and tho' he made a great Struggle, would not let go his Hold till he tore it off. Returning to drink at the Pond, the Crocodile laid hold of him a ſecond Time, but was not able to tear off his Foot. Upon this a Combat enſued, which laſted for a thouſand Years. The Match was not equal, for the Strength of the Elephant diminiſhed daily, whereas that of the Crocodile increaſed, becauſe it was in its own Element. At laſt the Elephant was defeated, which put an End to his Metamorphoſis; and being reſtored to his former Shape, the firſt Uſe he made of his Reaſon was to think upon God, to pray to him, and compoſe ſpiritual Songs during the Melancholy which prey'd upon him. However, he grew ſo weak, that he was unable to repeat the Name of God; when Viſtnou, mounted on the Garouda, came to his Aſſiſtance, and gave him his Weapons, made of Diamonds, call'd Jeckeram. With theſe Indre Doumena knock'd the Crocodile on the Head, and drew near his Deliverer, to thank him, who ſeeing him oppreſs'd with Wearineſs, cured him of it with a ſingle Touch. He then was reſtor'd to his former State, and teſtified his Gratitude to Viſtnou, by the Worſhip and Honours he paid him; and Viſtnou, on the other Side, granted a plenary Indulgence to all ſuch as ſhould repeat this Hiſtory.

[b] A Lac is an hundred thouſand, and a Coti ten Lacs; ſo that ten Lac-Cotis make ten Millions.

CHAP. XII.

Of the Food and Faſtings of the Bramins.

THE two Caſtes of the Settreas and of the Soudras, eat Fiſh and all kind of Fleſh, that of the Cow excepted; but the Bramins, who are more rigid Obſervers of the Law, and the Veinsjas their Imitators, abſtain from every Thing that has Life. This Abſtinence, which they have in common with the Pythagorean Sect, reſults very naturally from the Doctrine of Tranſmigration. It is an evil Action, ſay the Bramins, to diſlodge the Soul from the Body of an Animal, where poſſibly it is more happy than it will be in the Body, into which it will paſs after its Exit from this. The Settreas juſtify their Conduct, by ſaying that human Souls tranſmigrate into Plants as well as into the Bodies of Animals; and that it is leſs criminal to kill one ſingle Beaſt for the Food of ſeveral Perſons, than to root up ſeveral Plants, or, which is the ſame, to diſlodge ſeveral Souls, for the Feeding of one ſingle Bramin. To this the Latter anſwer, that the Souls incloſed in Plants, do not loſe ſo much by their Change of Body, as thoſe which are drove from the moſt contemptible Animal. Some of them agree, that it were indeed to be wiſhed Men could ſubſiſt without rooting up Herbs and deſtroying them, but conclude, that it is an unavoidable Evil. Others among them are ſo infatuated with theſe Notions, that they endeavour to ſubſiſt wholly on Leaves and Fruits, and obſerve carefully not to touch any Thing that might any way prejudice the Plant; however it is certain, that very few are ſo very ſcrupulous on this Head. The general Opinion is, that if a Man were obliged either to make choice of Death, or to eat Fleſh, it were better for him to chuſe the latter, and afterwards atone for his involuntary Faults by Purifications.

As the Bramins are prohibited the eating Fiſh and Fleſh, and are not allow'd to ſubſiſt upon any Thing but Rice, Roots, and Herbs, in their ſeveral Seaſons, they therefore feed upon nothing that may either provoke Appetite, or prompt them to paſs thoſe Bounds which Frugality preſcribes. Water is their uſual Drink, but they ſometimes take a little Milk; and for this Reaſon, ſuch of them as are in good Circumſtances always keep Cows of their own. I have already obſerved, that there are five Sins, the Pardon whereof the Vedam declares is not to be obtained but with the utmoſt Difficulty. Theſe are, 1ſt, For a Man to lie with his Mother. (N. B. under the Word Mother, a Mother-in-Law and the Wife of a Doctor are comprehended.) 2dly. To kill a Bra- min. 3dly, To ſteal Gold. 4thly, to get drunk. And, 5thly, To keep Company with thoſe who are guilty of theſe Crimes.

THE Bramins have a kind of Treat which laſts during the whole Month of December. They riſe before the Dawn, waſh themſelves, and preſent to their Idol Rice mix'd with a kind of Grain, Sugar, and certain Fruits. This Entertainment is made in commemoration of the Advantage that was antiently obtain'd by Pendeva, which is the common Name that is given to five Brethren, viz. Darmeraſou, Bimas, Naggula, Adjuna, and Sahadeva, who were Contemporaries with Viſtnou, when he liv'd on the Earth and went by the Name of Kriſtna. Theſe five Brethren had a Kinſman, Duriodena by Name, who was the eldeſt of an hundred and one Brothers. Adjuna the Fourth, unable to agree with Duriodena about the Diviſion of certain Lands, they reſolv'd to ſtake them on the Chance of a Dye: Accordingly they play'd, but Duriodena having falſe Dice, won the Game. The five Brethren ſtak'd their Liberty, loſt it, and afterwards ventured their Wife Draupeti, and loſt her alſo. They ſtill continued playing tho' they had nothing left to loſe; and bound themſelves, in caſe they ſhould be Loſers this Time, to confine themſelves twelve Years in the Woods without going once near any City, and that the thirteenth they ſhould quite conceal themſelves from human Eyes; and added this Penalty, that in caſe they ſhould fail in the laſt Article, they ſhould be oblig'd to return into the Woods, and continue in them twelve Years longer. They play'd again, but loſt this Game alſo. Duriodena, to inſult their Affliction, endeavour'd to undreſs Draupeti before them, and to demean her like a Slave who was entirely at his Diſpoſal. However, ſhe held her Clothes faſt; but it being impoſſible for her to ſtruggle much longer, ſhe recommended herſelf to Kriſtna, then at Metura, who heard her Prayers notwithſtanding the great Diſtance. But now, tho' ſhe no longer held her Clothes, yet her new Maſter, tho' he employ'd all his Strength, was not able to pull them off; ſo that he let her alone. Let us, ſays ſhe to him, play together, and in caſe I happen to loſe, my Perſon ſhall be entirely at your Diſpoſal. But now the falſe Dice loſt all their Virtue; and ſhe not only recover'd her own Liberty, but alſo that of the five Brethren her Husbands. She was for playing on in order to win back the Lands, but Duriodena had Senſe enough to leave off. The five Brethren made an ill Uſe of their Liberty; for they again ſtaked it upon the ſame Conditions as before, and happening to loſe, ſubmitted to what they were bound to perform. When the Time was expired, they went to Duriodena, and ſaid to him as follows: Thou didſt win our Land with falſe Dice; if thou art willing to divide them, let us do ſo; but if thou doſt rather chuſe playing, let us play, or otherwiſe let the Fate of Arms decide who ſhall poſſeſs them. Duriodena choſe the latter, and it was to no Purpoſe that their common Friends endeavoured to reconcile them; and each Party pitch'd upon Champions to ſupport their reſpective Intereſt. Kriſtna ſaid, Let who will chuſe me, I am reſolved not to fight, and will only guide the Chariot [a]. Duriodena finding that Kriſtna would not fight, but on the contrary ſeem'd inclin'd to favour one of the five Brethren, did not value whether he was of his Side or not. The Battle began in December. They feaſted very plentifully before Sun-Riſe, fought all Day, and returned back together after Sun-Set. This continued all the Month long. Notwithſtanding that Duriodena was reinforc'd with all his Brothers and Friends, yet the five Brethren recover'd their Lands. It is in commemoration of this Battle, and of Kriſtna's and thoſe of his Party's eating at this Time, that the Bramins feaſt in this Manner in December.

As the Bramins are prepoſſeſs'd of their Superiority over the reſt of the Caſtes, they therefore refuſe to eat in any Houſe but that of a Bramin, nor even ſo much as to drink

[a] The Hiſtorians who have written the Wars of Aſia, mention this Cuſtom of fighting on Chariots. Xenophon Cyrop. vi. Strabo 17. Diod. Sicul. vi. 1.

a Glaſs of Water; but they do not ſcruple to drink ſome Tager, i. e. curdled Milk or Cream, becauſe it is of the ſame Nature with the Amortam. They would not even condeſcend to eat in the Houſe of a Bramin who is of a different Sect from themſelves. No Bramin will allow another to ſee him eat, not even the King himſelf. If therefore one of theſe marries a Wife of an inferior Caſte, ſhe is not indulged the Honour of ſeeing him eat; and in caſe he ſhould be ſo complaiſant as to give her that Liberty, and it ſhould afterwards come to the Ears of the other Bramins, they would immediately ſhun him as a baſe and unclean Perſon.

THEIR Faſts are fixed to certain Days, and kept very ſtrictly. They faſt the eleventh Day after the Full-Moon, and the eleventh after the New; and abſtain, during the ſixty Hours of the Day and Night, from all kind of Suſtenance, even Betel itſelf, and employ all that Time either in Prayer or Reading. Such of the Bramins and Soudras as are of the Sect of the Seivias, have a Faſt which is peculiar to themſelves, viz. every Monday in November. They never eat a Morſel of any Thing till they ſee the Stars in the Sky, or that the Hour for their Riſing is come. In the ſecond Part we ſhall ſhew the Reaſon of their Faſting in this Manner.

CHAP. XIII.

Cuſtoms obſerv'd during the Sickneſs, or at the Death of the Bramins; and of their Burial.

WHEN a Bramin falls ſick, tho' the Veſſels be ever ſo much over-charg'd with Blood, they yet always prefer Abſtinence to Bleeding; but then they frequently make him faſt ſo long, that he quite loſes the Habit of Eating; by which Means he is unable to ſwallow, when they afterwards think proper to give him Suſtenance.

WHEN the Symptoms of Death appear, a Bramin is ſent for to pray with the ſick Perſon, and Alms are given to the Poor. In the mean Time, the ſick Perſon is repeating continually the Name of God; and when he is no longer able to do it, his Friends ring it inceſſantly in his Ears. The Vedam declares, that as God has promiſed to aſſiſt thoſe who think on his Name, and repeat it, he is obliged to ſuccour them in this Extreme; but in caſe their Speech fails them, and their Friends do this Office for them, it is the ſame Thing as if they themſelves had performed it. If the ſick Perſon is married, and his Senſes are not yet gone, he asks his Wife whether ſhe will be burnt or buried with him. If ſhe anſwers in the Affirmative, ſhe is obliged to ſtand to her Promiſe, and it then becomes her Duty, becauſe of the Oath by which ſhe bound herſelf at her Marriage, in preſence of the Bramin and the Fire Homan. She then had taken an Oath, that her Soul ſhould not be ſeparated from that of her Husband, and ſhe could not, without being guilty of a great Sin, violate an Oath which the Preſence of the Bramin and the Fire had made ſacred. In caſe ſhe has any Children, and loves them better than ſhe did her deceaſed Husband, then ſhe is at Liberty either to live with them or die with him. If ſhe dreads the Fire, ſhe muſt not be forced to throw herſelf into it, but the general Opinion is, that no virtuous Woman will refuſe to make herſelf a Sacrifice on this Occaſion; for, according to the Vedam, the Duty of a Wife conſiſts in the three following Particulars:

THE firſt is, a blind and implicit Complacency for all the Deſires and Wiſhes of her Husband. The Example of Draupeti, who was a complete Model of Virtue and Patience, is quoted on this Occaſion. Her Husband deſtroy'd his Health and conſum'd all his Subſtance in maintaining ill Women. Diſeaſe, which is the juſt Puniſhment inſeparable from ſo diſſolute a Way of Life, tho' it depriv'd him of Strength and Vigour to continue it, did nevertheleſes permit his Paſſions to rage with the ſame Impetuoſity. He declared he ſhould die in caſe he was not indulg'd to frequent thoſe Strumpets; but the generous Draupeti replied, Do not grieve; I myſelf will carry you to them. Upon which ſhe took him on her Back, and was carrying him to the Place where they were, tho' the Night was pitchy dark; but as ſhe was going along, ſhe ſtruck againſt a Poſt or Stake, on which a holy Man was fix'd, whoſe Name was Gallova, and put him to ſome Pain. The choleric Saint, inflam'd with Anger, cry'd out, He who has put me to this Pain ſhall die before the Sun riſe. But Draupeti being reſolved not to loſe her Huſband, ſhe alſo cry'd out, The Sun ſhall not riſe; and accordingly it continued for ſeveral Years under the Horizon, whereupon Mankind in general pray'd that it ſhould riſe again. At laſt Brahma and the Devetas went to the Woman above-mentioned, to gain her Conſent, if poſſible, that it ſhould riſe again, and deſired to know what Satisfaction ſhe demanded: But the only Anſwer ſhe made was, My Husband, my Husband; upon which it was ſaid, This ſhall be granted thee in the next Life. She died, and went towards [a] Surgam; then returning again into this World, married five Husbands, who were the five Brothers above-mentioned: But as ſhe would have been polluted, had ſhe enjoy'd five Men together, Brahma ordered that ſhe ſhould always enjoy one of them during a Year, at the Expiration of which ſhe ſhould fall into the Fire, and cohabit with another Husband according to her Wiſhes.

THE ſecond Duty of a virtuous Wife, is to obſerve a great Modeſty and Simplicity in her Dreſs, and not to junket when her Husband is out of Town.

THE third is to die when her Husband leaves the World. However, ſome Women before they marry, put in this Clauſe, viz. that they [b] ſhall not be burnt with him, and oblige their Husbands to ratify it; however, the Bramins, as was before obſerv'd, leave a Woman, whom her Husband asks in his expiring Moments, Whether ſhe is willing to follow him to Death, at her Liberty to anſwer either yes or no. They themſelves confeſs, that the forcing a Woman to it, either by Violence or Threats, is a Crime that merits Hell. But the Settreas, who are the Nobles, conſtrain their Wives to ſubmit to this cruel Cuſtom, who would think that their ſurviving them would caſt a Stain on their Honour; and once a Settrea dying, threeſcore Women threw themſelves on his Funeral Pile, and were there conſumed.

THEY believe that when the ſick Perſon is at the Point of Death, two [c] Jamma-doutas always appear to him, whoſe hideous Figure terrifies him; but then a Viſtnou-douta is preſent at the ſame Time. In caſe the dying Man had led a virtuous Life, the latter carries away his Soul in a magnificent flying Chariot; but if he had been a wicked Wretch, one of the Jamma-doutas carries him to Jamma-locon, or the Place where Jamma preſides. This Judge orders his Regiſter to acquaint him with the Particulars of the Life of the Deceaſed, purſuant to the Informations he had receiv'd from Viſtnou; when theſe being read, he ſends him back into the World, where he skips up and down like a Hob-goblin for ten Days together, till ſuch Time as his Doom is pronounced.

[b] Joh. van Twiſt, Deſcription of Guzurat, Chap. 13.
[c] Douta a Servant, Jamma a Judge of Hell.

'Tis for this Reaſon that the Bramins, after the Death of a Relation, feed a Magpye for ten Days, from a Notion they entertain, that his Soul may poſſibly be among thoſe Birds.

As ſoon as the ſick Man has given up the Ghoſt, his Beard is ſhav'd, he is waſh'd, is clothed in a clean Suit, and his Mouth is rubb'd with Lime and pounded Betel, and the Women alſo rub it with raw Rice. When he is carried from his Houſe to ſome Place adjacent to the City, he is attended by his Friends, who waſh their Hands, and put a little Rice on his Mouth. They waſh their Hands a ſecond Time, and begin a Beteaui round the Pile on which his Body lies. This Beteani is a kind of Proceſſion which a Perrea makes, who is follow'd by certain Perſons that beat on a little Drum, when they go thrice round the Corpſe. This being done, one of the Company preaches to the reſt, in Death's Name, and obſerves that his Empire equally extends over all Things, over the Young and Old, Rich and Poor; that thoſe who lead a Life of Virtue ſhall be happy after Death, but that ſuch as tread the Paths of Vice muſt expect nothing but Torment.

All the Bramins are not burnt after their Deaths; for ſome of them are buried. The Viſtnouvas and Smartas are always burnt, from an Opinion which prevails among them, that though they have ſerv'd Viſtnou ever ſo faithfully, they yet contract certain Impurities, which are thoroughly purg'd by Fire. On the contrary, the Seivias and Sansjaſiis maintain, that their Sins will not be imputed to them, though they have not exactly fill'd up all the Duties of Life; conſequently that they have no Occaſion for this Purification, and therefore may be quietly laid in the Ground. The one have an Eye chiefly to God's Juſtice; the other rely more on his Mercy.

CHAP. XIV.

Of thoſe Women who are burnt or buried with their Husbands.

When a Woman has promis'd to follow her Husband, either to the funeral Pile or the Grave, he is no ſooner expir'd, but Preparation is immediately made for the Interment of both, nor can ſhe retract or ſuſpend the Performance of her Promiſe. She muſt be conſum'd on the ſame Day, and in the ſame Fire in which her Husband's Body is burnt. The Bramins and Veinsjas are vaſtly rigorous on this Article; but the Settreas allow their Wives to burn themſelves at different Times, and in different Places, when their Husbands either died in a foreign Country, or many Years before.

Notice being given of the Husband's Death, the Woman is ſet in a Chair before the Door, ſplendidly dreſs'd after the Manner of the Country. Then the Inſtruments begin to ſtrike up; the Drums beat; upon which Betel is given her to chew, and ſhe is entertain'd with Diſcourſe, for fear leſt by thinking too intenſely on her impending Fate, it ſhould make her repent her Choice. The Settreas and the Soudras mix ſomething with the Betel, which has the Property of benumbing all the Senſes, and locking up the ſeveral Faculties of the Soul; but the Bramins, ſay they, never do this, becauſe they would have this Sacrifice a voluntary one.

At

AT her leaving the Houſe ſhe bids her Friends farewel, having a Citron or Lemon in one Hand, and a Looking-Glaſs in the other, and all the Time repeating the Name of God inceſſantly; ſome uſe the Word Naraina, others Ramma, or ſome other Name. If ſhe is of the Caſte of the Bramins, or of the Veinsjas, ſhe then, inſtead of a Lemon and a Looking-Glaſs, holds ſome of thoſe red Flowers in her Hand which are ſtrew'd in the Temple and before the Idols, and 'tis neceſſary that theſe Flowers ſhould have been preſented to it. An Idol is alſo hung about her Neck.

THE Woman being thus equipp'd, walks on Foot to the Place where the Corpſe of her Husband was burnt; and if ſhe be of the Caſte of the Settreas, or that of the Soudras, ſhe is accompanied by her Relations, who employ a great many Exhortations, and cheer up her Spirits; but if ſhe's the Wife of a Bramin, ſhe is drawn on a kind of Sledge. Not far from the funeral Pile is a Pond, where ſhe goes and waſhes herſelf. They take off her Jewels and other Ornaments; when a Bramin prays by her, and Alms are diſtributed among the Bramins. Being come out of the Water, ſhe wraps herſelf up in a yellow Shroud, and draws near to the Pile. 'Tis rais'd in a pretty deep Hole, the Earth of which being all thrown on one Side, forms by that means an Eminence, on which ſhe aſcends. The Wood with which the Corpſe of her Husband had been conſum'd, is half burnt, and caſts a dreadful Blaze; but to prevent this Sight from terrifying her, they place a Mat betwixt her and the Fire, ſo that ſhe does not ſee it. 'Tis on this Eminence that ſhe takes the laſt Farewel of her Relations, who all exhort her to behave with great Bravery on this Occaſion. She then takes ſome Kitchen Utenſils ſuch as a Pilang, or a Peſtle to pound Rice, a Soup, or little Fan to winnow it after 'tis pounded, and toſſes them into the Fire over the Mat. She afterwards takes a Pot full of Oil, Part of which ſhe pours on her Head, repeating inceſſantly the Name of God; when at laſt, the Mat being taken away, ſhe throws herſelf into the Fire with the Pot of Oil. She then is immediately cover'd with Wood five or ſix Foot deep, while others pour Oil and Butter on the Fire to make it blaze the more. Sometimes, when the She-Slaves find their Miſtreſs is greatly afflicted for the Loſs of her Husband, they promiſe her, in caſe ſhe is reſolv'd not to ſurvive him, to burn themſelves along with her, and are always as good as their Words. There is leſs Ceremony uſed upon their Account; they dance near the funeral Pile, and throw themſelves into it, one after another [a]. Thus have we deſcrib'd the Manner in which the Women of the three inferior Caſtes burn themſelves.

THE burning of the Women of the firſt Caſte is accompanied with ſtill more barbarous Circumſtances. Theſe aſcend the funeral Pile, and lay themſelves down by the Corpſe of their Husbands, as if they were going to ſleep with them. Being plac'd, the funeral Pile is raiſed over them; when the Fire is ſet to that Part of it that is neareſt their Heads, on which Oil and other unctuous Subſtances had been pour'd, in order to make the Fire ſooner catch the funeral Pile, the Wood whereof is of a coarſer or more precious kind, according to the Condition and Circumſtances of the Deceaſed. Some of them uſe a Wood call'd Aquila Brava, a ſort of Aloe, which grows in the Iſle of Ceilan, and on the Coaſts of Coromandel, and others employ [b] Sandal-Wood, on theſe Occaſions.

AT Surat, over the funeral Pile, a ſmall Hut, made of thick Millet-Straw, entwin'd with ſmall Wood, is rais'd; the Woman goes into this Hut, ſits down on the funeral Pile, takes her Husband's Head into her Lap, and puts Fire to it with a Torch, which ſhe holds in her Hand; while a great Number of Bramins, with Pokers in their Hands,

Hands, ſtir up the Fire, which they alſo light on the outward Part, and even puſh the Woman forward, in caſe the Dread of the Fire ſhould make her Attempt to leap out of it; but this does not any way correſpond with the Liberty [a] which they pretend to indulge the Women in on this Occaſion.

THE ſame Preparations are made whether the Woman is to be burnt or buried; but the Circumſtances of the Burial are different. When ſhe is come to the Grave where the Corpſe of her Husband lies, ſhe goes down into it, and ſeats herſelf on a Bench made of Earth, which is made under a kind of Vault dug in the Earth. Having ſeated herſelf, ſhe takes the Corpſe in her Arms, throws Incenſe into a Fire that is juſt by her, and perfumes her Body. This being done, they begin to fill the Grave gently, and the Woman draws the Earth to her, and diſpoſes it about her with her Hands. When ſhe is up to the Neck in it, two of thoſe who fill up the Grave, take a Carpet, and hold it before the Grave, to prevent her ſeeing what they are going to do. After this they give her Poiſon in a Shell, which ſhe ſwallowing down, they then twiſt her Neck round, ſo very dextrouſly, that 'tis impoſſible for any of the Spectators to perceive it, unleſs they happen to ſtand very near her. Both theſe infernal Tragedies are exhibited to the Sound of Inſtruments, the Noiſe of Drums, and the Shouts of all the People preſent, which drown the Cries of the unhappy Victims; ſome of them devote themſelves to Death with inexpreſſible Reſolution.

ANY Woman that ſhould refuſe to die with her Husband, would be look'd upon as a moſt infamous Wretch: Their Hair is cut off, they are not allowed to touch any Betel, to wear precious Stones, or marry again, but are expos'd to Inſults of every kind; for which Reaſon ſuch among them as are inform'd with heroic Sentiments, prefer Death to ſo wretched a Life. As they are incapacitated from enjoying the moſt inconſiderable Trifle, and are not allow'd to have the leaſt Honours paid them, they don't inherit the ſmalleſt Portion of their Husband's Eſtate, but lie at the Mercy of their eldeſt Son, who ſucceeds to it, and has an abſolute Empire over them. If ſuch a Woman has none but Daughters, the Inheritance devolves on her Husband's Brother, who is oblig'd only barely to maintain her and her Daughters; but this they never fail to reproach her with ſo long as ſhe lives, and are often hitting her in the Teeth with not loving her Husband, ſince ſhe had not the Courage to die with him. Add to this their artful Inſinuations, in aſſuring them that if they either burn or bury themſelves with their Husbands, they will ſave their Souls from Hell, although they had a thouſand Times deſerv'd to go thither; as alſo, that all ſuch who thus ſubmit to Death out of pure Love and Affection, feel none of thoſe Torments which the Fire cauſes on other Occaſions. Theſe Things conſider'd, we may eaſily account for their devoting themſelves to Death in this Manner. To conclude, the Story of [b] Calanus, who liv'd in the Time of Alexander the Great, not to mention ſeveral Teſtimonies of antient Authors, are a Proof that the Indians have been long uſed to look upon ſo dreadful a Death as a mere Trifle.

CHAP. XV.

Of Mourning, and the Prayers for the Dead.

THE Bramins have various Methods of expreſſing their Sorrow for the Death of their Relations. When one who was older than themſelves comes to die, they ſhave their Beards, and cut off their Whiskers, abſtain from Betel ten Days, and eat but one Meal a Day during that Term, which is preciſely the Time that his Soul may poſſibly be condemn'd to skip up and down the World. But in caſe the Deceas'd were younger, they don't enjoin themſelves this Penance: As their Wives are always ſo, they are conſequently never oblig'd to mourn in this Manner for them, much leſs for their Children. The Soudras don't make this Diſtinction, for they mourn for the Young as well as the Old, and not only ſhave their Beards, but alſo their Heads, leaving only a Tuft on the Crown of it, and wrap the reſt with a Punger, inſtead of a Piece of Linen, which they commonly uſe for that Purpoſe, and likewiſe abſtain from Betel for three or four Days. When a Soudra loſes a Child, he neither has his Beard or Head ſhav'd, but deprives himſelf of Betel for the three firſt Days, and puts a Punger about his Head.

WHEN any Perſon in a Houſe dies, all the bearded Slaves ſhave themſelves; and if the Deceaſed were a Ploughman, of the Family of the Vettalas, or of that of the Ambrias, which are the two principal among the Soudras, twelve Sorts of Perſons are to pay him the laſt Duties, viz. 1. The Bramins, who ſerve the Pagods. 2. The Beteanis, or Perreas, who beat the Drum. 3. The Pannejevas, who play on long horn Flutes. 4. The Goldſmiths. 5. The Carpenters. 6. The Lockſmiths. 7. The Vaſſeris. 8. The Barbers. 9. The Poumaliandes, who ſcatter Flowers round the Dead. 10. The Canapules, who are Writers or Secretaries. 11. The Salevadis. 12. The Kaicules, or Curtezans. But now the Bramins, the Canapules, and Poumaliandes, don't practiſe this Cuſtom. A certain Tax or Duty is paid to all thoſe who come on this Occaſion, and a Vaſſeri gives to each Perſon preſent a Punger, which they fix on their Heads ſo as to let it hang half an Ell down their Backs. They proſtrate themſelves in the Place where the Alms call'd [a] Nili are beſtow'd.

THE Fire of the Pile being out, they gather up the Aſhes of ſuch of the Bones as are not conſumed, and throw them into the Ganges; for the Waters of that River being reputed very holy, are therefore of great Comfort to the Soul of the Deceas'd. They alſo think they ſhall procure him an abundance of Felicity, by building, purſuant to his laſt Will, Tampandals, or Huts, in the Highways, where all ſuch Paſſengers as are a-thirſt have cold and warm Water given them, or Canje, i. e. Water in which Rice has been boil'd, and ſometimes a few Beans. If this be of no Service to the Dead, 'tis not ſo with regard to the Living, who in their Journies in that very hot Climate would be almoſt ſpent, were it not for ſome ſuch Refreſhment.

THEY often build Pagods over the Graves of the Dead; but as they are thought to be impure, no religious Act is therefore ever perform'd in them. We indeed meet with ſome Figures, but theſe are not the Object of any religious Worſhip, and are at moſt no more than barely the Images of ſuch Perſons as were either burnt or buried in that Place. If they pay them any Honours, ſuch as the preſenting them Victuals, or incenſing them, 'tis only with this View, viz. to engage the Soul of the Deceaſed, in caſe it be a Ratsjasja, or Devil, not to do them any Harm, or frighten them in any Manner. They alſo dig Wells and Tanks for the Service of the Public, and imagine that the Benefit which will thereby accrue to every Individual, will be of advantage to the departed Soul.

A DISSERTATION ON THE RELIGION and MANNERS OF THE BRAMINS.

PART II.

Of the Tenets and Religious Customs of the BRAMINS.

CHAP. I.

Of GOD, and the Creation of BRAHMA.

THE Viſtnouvas look upon Viſtnou as the ſovereign Deity, whom they alſo call Permal. Not to take notice of the almoſt numberleſs Multitude of other Names they give him, I ſhall only obſerve, that the Seivias don't allow that Sovereignty which they aſcribe to Eſwara; however, they unanimouſly believe there is but one God, and that Brahma created the World. Here follows the Story of the Creation, according to the Vedam.

WHEN as yet nothing but God and the Water exiſted, the ſupreme Being, deſirous to create the World for his own Amuſement and Pleaſure, caus'd the Leaf of a Tree, in the Shape of a Child, who play'd with its great Toe in its Mouth, to float on the Water. From its Navel there iſſued out a Flower call'd Tamara, whence Brahma drew his Original, who was greatly ſurpriz'd to ſee himſelf form'd, and not to know by what Power; but the divine Being clear'd up his Doubts, and acquainted him with his Origin. Brahma gave him ſuch ſtrong Teſtimonies of his Gratitude for what had been indulg'd him, that God was affected with it, and therefore gave him the Power of creating the World.

BRAHMA had at firſt five Heads; his mighty Power elated him with Pride, ſo that he forgot the Reſpect and Veneration he ow'd to Eſwara, who, in his Anger, created Beirewa, Chief of ſuch human Souls as are chang'd into fluttering Devils. Beirewa, to revenge the ſlighted God, ſplit one of Brahma's Heads, viz. the middle one, with his Nail. Brahma endeavour'd to appeaſe Eſwara by Hymns, which he compos'd in his Praiſe, and the God, moved with his Repentance, put the wounded Head on his own, own, and promis'd Brahma that he ſhould live with four Heads in as great Credit as before. The Bramins are of opinion, that his Pride is not yet quite rooted out, and aſſert, that when the World which now exiſts ſhall be deſtroy'd, and give way to that which is to ſucceed it, Brahma will be in an inferior State to that he now enjoys, and that his Place will be fill'd up by Annemonta, the faithful Servant of Viſtnou.

BRAHMA did not only create the World, but alſo preſides over it with abſolute Sway: He alone is intruſted with the Care of every particular Being; for God does not give himſelf the Trouble to ſuperintend over the leaſt Thing in Nature. Thus 'tis Brahma indulges with long Life, and aſſigns to each Individual his Deſtiny, which is irreverſible. However, he is not ſingle, but has ſeveral Subalterns, who have each their particular Juriſdictions. The moſt conſiderable of his Deputies is Devendre, who has Command over all the Chiefs of the eight Worlds, and has alſo Lieutenants in each of theſe eight Worlds, which are ſeated over the Globe inhabited by us. They call the laſt Bou-Locon, i. e. the Place below. That where Brahma reſides is the higheſt, which, however, is under the Heavens, and is call'd Brahma-Locon. One of theſe two Worlds is ſituated towards the North, and the other towards the South; the eight others lie between, and are rang'd according to the Order of the Winds. 1. Indre-Locon, where Devendre preſides, who is alſo call'd [a] Indre. 2. Achni-Locon. 3. Jamma-Locon, which is Hell. 4. Niruti-Locon. 5. Warouna-Locon. 6. Cubera-Locon. 7. Wajouvia-Locon. And 8. Iſangja-Locon.

Achni, Jamma, Niruti, Warouna, Cubera, Vajouvia, and Iſangja, all hold of Devendre, who is ſubordinate to Brahma. Theſe eight Chiefs have each their particular Functions. Achni preſides over the Fire, Varouna over the Water, Vajouvia over the Winds, Cubera over Riches, and ſo of the reſt.

CHAP. II.

Of the Wives of Viſtnou and Eſwara.

WE have ſeen in the firſt Part, that when the Mountain Merouva was whirled about in the Sea, the Motion produced a Foam which was like the Cradle of a beautiful Woman nam'd Latſami. This ſecond Venus was beſtow'd on Viſtnou, preferably to the Devetas, who were all in Love with her. The Seivias, who aſſert that Eſwara is the ſovereign God, ſay alſo, that he has a Wife call'd Parvati. They tell us that ſhe had a double Birth; firſt, ſhe was Daughter to Datsja, Son of Brahma, and of Saraſvati his Wife. Her Father gave her in Marriage to Eſwara, and ſome Time after intended to perform a Jagam or Sacrifice, to which he invited the Devetas, ſuch as Devendre, the Sun, the Moon, and the reſt, but neglected Eſwara his Son-in-Law. Parvati told him he ſhould alſo have invited him, but he, inſtead of agreeing with her, made her the following injurious Anſwer: Eſwara, ſays Datsja, is not worthy of that Honour; he is a Fellow that ſubſiſts only on Alms, and has no Clothes to put on. We are to ſuppoſe that Eſwara was at that Time Incog. and veil'd under ſuch a Shape as made him unknown to all. Paravti, inflam'd with Rage, cried out to her Father, I myſelf am therefore not worthy to aſſiſt at it; and ſaying theſe Words, ſhe leap'd into the Fire that was prepar'd for this Solemnity. Eſwara, exaſperated in the higheſt Degree at this unhappy Accident, was all over in a Sweat, and one of the Drops of it happening to fall on the Earth, Virrepadra ſprung from it, who immediately ask'd his Father what Commands he had for him. Eſwara bid him go and deſtroy the Jagam of Datsja, and was obey'd; for he kill'd ſome of the Gueſts, drove away others, cut off Datsja's Head, kick'd the Sun, and broke all his Teeth, ſo that he has not one left at this Time, and drubb'd the Moon ſo heartily, that her Face was cover'd all over with the Marks of the Blows he gave her, which continue to this Day. The Devetas implor'd Eſwara's Mercy, and obtain'd it; he was ſoftened by their Intreaties, and reſtor'd Datsja to Life, on whoſe Body he fix'd the Head of a He-Goat inſtead of his own. Parvati being conſum'd in the Fire into which ſhe had thrown herſelf, was indulg'd a new Birth, and was Daughter of the Mountain Chimawontam, who married her to Eſwara. Her Husband was ſo paſſionately in love with her, that he gave her half his Body, ſo that ſhe became half Man and half Woman; for which Reaſon the Bramins call her Ardhanari-Eſwara, a Name implying ſuch an Union.

THESE People are of opinion, that both Viſtnou and Eſwara can procreate Children without the Commerce of the other Sex, ſince they aſcribe to them a Power of getting them by the bare Act of the Will, ſo that they ſuppoſe they only have them for Dalliance Sake. Eſwara is repreſented in the Temples under a very immodeſt Shape, expreſſing the Union of both Sexes in an Act, which Modeſty will not allow me to explain farther. This is grounded on a Tradition which the Bramins themſelves are partly aſham'd of, and is as follows: It fell out one Day that a Moniſwara came to viſit Eſwara in a Place where the latter uſed to careſs Parvati. The Moniſwara came at a very unſeaſonable Hour; in vain the Porter ſhut the Gate upon him, and even told him the Reaſon why he could not be admitted; for the Moniſwara was ſo enrag'd to find he muſt be forced to ſtay till Eſwara ſhould pleaſe to ſhew himſelf, that he broke out into an Imprecation, which he immediately repented of. Eſwara had overheard him, but pardon'd him when he found he was ſorry for it. The Moniſwara, not ſatisfied with being pardon'd for his Offence, requeſted that all who ſhould worſhip the Image of Lingam, which is that Figure repreſenting the Union of the Sexes in the Manner above-mention'd, ſhould reap greater Advantages from it than if they were to worſhip Eſwara when repreſented with his whole Body. He obtain'd his Deſire, and 'tis to this Circumſtance that thoſe ſcandalous Images, under which Eſwara is worſhipp'd in the Pagods, owe their Original; but he is repreſented under the Figure of a Man, in that Statue of him which is carried about in public.

CHAP. III.

Of the ten Corporeal Shapes which Viſtnou aſſum'd.

THE Viſtnouvas believe that Viſtnou had ten different Births.

1ſt, [a] Like Matja, or a Fiſh; for a Devil having carried off the four Parts of the Vedam, threw himſelf into the Sea with his Booty, when immediately Viſtnou changing himſelf into a Fiſh, purſued and kill'd him.

[a] See the Figures of theſe ten Transformations. The Reader will meet, in the Sequel of this Work, with ſome Figures which differ a little from theſe, together with new Remarks.

2d, Like Courma, or a Tortoiſe; for the Mountain Merouva being thrown into the Sea, in ſearch of Amortam, 'twas ſo prodigiouſly heavy, that the World, unable to ſupport the Weight of it, was beginning to ſink into the Abyſs, when immediately Viſtnou transform'd himſelf into a Tortoiſe, and took the World on his Back.

3d, Like Warraha, or a Hog. Among the Idols of Viſtnou, in a Pagod in the City of Trimottam, near Zinzi, is the Head of a Hog, which the Bramins aſſert to have come out of the Earth; they pay very great Honours to it.

4th, Under the Shape of a Naraſimha, or a half Man and half Lion.

5th, Under the Name of Vainana, a young Bramaſari, born of the ſame Mother as Devendre, who gain'd a Victory over Belli, which we ſhall mention hereafter.

6th, Under the Name of Paresje-Rama, who was a Settrea.

7th, Under the Name of Dajerrata-Rama; and the Reaſon of his aſſuming that Shape is as follows: Ravana and Kompacarna, Sons of Caſſiopa, being now become Ratjasjas or Devils, were as miſchievous as they were powerful. Theſe ſubdued the whole World, and afterwards went and declared War with Devendre, but Ravana was not able to vanquiſh him. In his Grief and Confuſion he made a Requeſt to Eſwara, who granted him the following Privilege: That he ſhould neither be kill'd, nor be ſubdued by the Chiefs of the ſeven Worlds ſeated under Heaven, but, on the contrary, ſhould be victorious over them. He did not ſtand ſo much in awe of Men, as to be forc'd to pray that they might not be allow'd to take away his Life. Eſwara promis'd him alſo two hundred Lakes of Years, i. e. a Life of twenty Millions of Years. Kompacarna likewiſe made a Wiſh, and requeſted the ſame Indulgence as his Brother, together with a Grant of ſleeping ſix Months, and of being afterwards awak'd every Day. Eſwara granted him alſo, that on the Day he wak'd he ſhould overcome all thoſe againſt whom he waged War, not excepting Eſwara himſelf. The two Brothers, extremely well ſatisfied with what they had obtain'd, built ſeven Caſtles, the firſt of which was of Gold, the ſecond of Silver, the third of Copper, the fourth of Iron, and ſo on. They fell upon Devendre and the other Chiefs, whom they took Priſoners, and carried their Inſults to ſuch a Pitch, that Brahma acquainted Viſtnou with all the Complaints which were made on that Account; upon which he reſolv'd to owe his Birth to a Settrea, Deſſeratha by Name, in the City of Ajot-ja. This Settrea, though he had three Wives, had no Children by any of them, and had therefore been advis'd to prepare a Sacrifice, in order to remedy this Barrenneſs. The Fire Homan being lighted, a Man was ſeen to iſſue out of it, having a Baſon in his Hand, fill'd with Rice boil'd in Milk, with Butter and Sugar, who commanded him to take it and give ſome of it to his Wives. The Settrea obey'd, but divided it into two Parts only, one of which he gave to Kauſal-ja, and the other to Kaica. Theſe two Women gave ſome of it to the third, named Somitra. They all became fruitful. Kauſal-ja brought forth Viſtnou, who was named Ramma; Kaica was delivered of Bharata; and Somitra had two Sons, who were call'd Latſmana and Settrugna, the firſt of which adher'd to Ramma, and the ſecond to Bharata. In Proceſs of Time they married, and Ramma had a Wife named Sita. Kaica having done ſomething that pleaſed her Husband vaſtly, he engaged himſelf to grant her whatever ſhe ſhould ask. She deſir'd that Ramma ſhould be oblig'd to go and live for twelve Years in the Woods, and that her Son ſhould be a Prince. Ramma taking his Wife and his dear Latſmana along with him, ſet out in obedience to his Father's Commands. 'Twas with Grief that Bharata heard what his Mother had obtain'd in his Favour, ſo that he would have kept him back, and endea-vour'd to get the Sentence which had paſs'd upon him revers'd; but Ramma oppos'd it, and made him conſent that their Father's Commands ſhould be obey'd. Accordingly he ſet out, and became the Tenant of the Woods, where he was the Terror of the Wicked, and the Support of the Good. During his Reſidence there, Ravana the Devil hearing that Sita, Ramma's Wife, was a Miracle in Beauty, he commanded a Devil to aſſume the Shape of a golden Stag, and he was immediately obey'd; when he appearing before Sita, ſhe beſought her Husband to let her have him. Ramma immediately purſued the Stag, which taking to his Heels, drew him at a great Diſtance from the Place where he had left his Wife. Immediately Ravana preſented himſelf before her, under the Shape of a Sanjaſi, and ask'd Alms of her, and afterwards drawing near her upon the ſame Pretence, he ſeiz'd and carried her off. He endeavoured to conquer her Reſiſtance by good Uſage, for a Saint had told he ſhould die in caſe he forced her. Ramma being return'd, was prodigiouſly ſurpriz'd not to find his Wife, when he met with the Bird Yataw, mortally wounded, who told him that he had fought againſt Ravana, who had forced her away. If you, ſays the Bird, ſhould purſue him alone, you'll loſe your Labour; but go towards that Mountain, and you there will meet with the Ape Suggriva, who is flying from his Enemies, take him into your Service. Ramma follow'd his Advice; he met with Annemonta, who engag'd in his Intereſt, becauſe he perceiv'd a Light ſhining on the Face of Ramma, and that of his Brother, which ſtruck him with Awe. They met with the Ape Suggriva, who join'd himſelf to them, and after they had reveng'd him of his Enemies by their Overthrow, he was declar'd Chief of the Apes. They afterwards advanc'd towards [a] Ramacovil, in their Way to [b] Lanca; but as there were ſeveral Floods in their Paſſage, the Ape was commiſſioned to bring Mountains, and to throw them into the Sea, in order to make a Bridge with them, which he accordingly perform'd. Now the Raviſher had a Brother, Viphiſena by Name, who acquainted him with the Danger they were in; I am inform'd, ſays he to him, that Ramma is a God; reſtore his Wife to him. Ravana laugh'd at his Advice, when Viphiſena ſeeing him obſtinately bent to perſiſt in his Reſolution, abandon'd him, and went over to Ramma, who took him into his Service; after this they beſieg'd Lanca, when various Battles enſuing, Ravana was at laſt put to Death, and his Brother put into his Place, after which Sita was reſtor'd to her Husband. Ramma, unwilling that this Bridge ſhould be of Service to any other Perſon, broke it down, by throwing ſeveral of thoſe Mountains into the Sea, of which it was form'd, and built a Pagod in Ramacovil, in honour of Eſwara, with this Indulgence, that whoever ſhould viſit it ſhould obtain the Remiſſion of all their Sins. 'Tis in Commemoration of this Succeſs that Ramma is repreſented, in all the Pagods of Eſwara, with ten Heads and twenty Hands.

8th, The eighth Appearance of Viſtnou under the Name of Kriſtna, the Reaſon of which will be given when we mention the Feaſt of Gogolaſtemi, redounded, as the Bramins tell us, more to his Glory, and was more wonderful than any of the reſt. At his former Deſcents upon Earth, he uſed only to bring a Spark of his Divinity along with him, but on this Occaſion he appear'd in all the Pomp and Majeſty of it, inſomuch that Heaven itſelf was emptied.

9th, He took the Name of Bouddha.

10th, And laſtly, he aſſum'd the Shape of Kelki, or a Horſe. The Author from whom we borrowed theſe Names, does not inform us on what Occaſion they were given.

[a] 'Tis call'd by the Portugueſe, Ramanacor, and is an Iſland, between the weſtern Peninſula of Indus, and the Iſland of Ceylan.

[b] By the Country of Lanca the Bramins underſtand the Iſland of Ceylan and the Kingdom of Achem, which, according to them, antiently made but one Iſland.

CHAP. IV.

The ORIGIN of the Bird GARROUDA, and of ANNEMONTA.

KADROUVA-VINNETA and Diti, two of the Wives of Caſſiopa, who was the firſt Bramin, happening to be walking in a Garden, a little Way out of the City, they perceiv'd Outſeirevan, the Horſe of Indre. Diti in Admiration cry'd out, How beautiful! how white this Horſe is! he has not ſo much as the leaſt black Sport about him! Her Companion affirmed that he had a black Spot near his Tail; upon which they fell to diſputing, and laid a Wager, the Conditions whereof were, that ſhe who loſt ſhould be the other's Slave. As it was then Night, they ſuſpended the Examination till the next Day; but Kadrouva-Vinneta, whoſe Sons were Devils under the Shape of Serpents, taking Advantage of the Night, commanded one of them to go and place himſelf near the Horſe's Tail, ſo that the next Morning a little black Speck was ſeen upon it. Diti, who knew nothing of the Trick, ſubmitted to her Companion, and was as holy and pious as the other was wicked: But the Saints comforted her in her Affliction, with this Aſſurance, that ſhe ſhould bring forth Children who would be her Deliverers; and accordingly ſhe conceiv'd, and laid two Eggs. She waited a long Time in Expectation of their being hatch'd, but growing impatient, ſhe broke one of them, whence iſſued a Child with only the Upper Part of its Body, the reſt not being yet form'd. Annura, for that is the Name of the immature Babe, was very angry with his Mother for having been the Cauſe of his Deformity, and aſſur'd her ſhe would continue in Slavery five hundred Years longer, for her not ſtaying till the Egg had hatch'd itſelf. He enter'd into the Service of the Sun, flew up into the Air, and undertook to guide the Chariot. Five hundred Years after, the other Egg being hatch'd, Garrouda iſſued out of it, who went and ſerv'd Kadrouva-Vinneta and her Children. Diti growing weary of her Servitude, Garrouda ask'd her why they were Slaves, and if there were no Poſſibility of their getting free? Yes, there is, ſays ſhe, provided you will go and fetch the Amortam, which is kept in Devendre-locon. Garrouda no ſooner heard theſe Words than he flew away, and went in Search of the Amortam, which he got Poſſeſſion of, after having conquer'd the Devetas who guarded it, and put out the Fire which ſurrounded it. 'Twas to no Purpoſe that they intreated him not to force it away, it being a Truſt; however he aſſur'd them, that after he ſhould have made Uſe of it to reſcue his Mother out of Slavery, they then might have it again if they thought proper. But he requeſted of Devendre, that he might be allow'd to eat the Serpents, which accordingly was granted him. He then ſet out, in order to return to his Mother; but the treacherous Kadrouva-Vinneta ſeiz'd on the Amortam, and reſolved that ſhe and her Sons ſhould drink it. Immediately Devendre ſent a Deveta, under the Shape of a Bramin, who going to her, ſaid as follows: Take care how you profane this Drink, by not taking it with the Preparations requiſite. You muſt firſt waſh your Body, and put on ſuch Clothes as are pure. Kadrouva-Vinneta cauſed the Amortam to be laid on a kind of Straw, called Arphha, which is of a very holy Nature, and that they in the mean Time ſhould go and purify themſelves. In the mean Time the Amortam was carried off, ſo that only a few Drops remain'd of it on the Straw. The Serpents, after their return, fell to licking it, and the Straw being very ſharp, cut their Tongues; ſince which Time the Tongues of Serpents have always been forked. The Beak of the Garrouda having touch'd the Amortam, became white, and alſo its Neck, and Viſtnou made choice of this Bird to carry him, in the ſame Manner as the Greeks and Romans relate that Jupiter was mounted on an Eagle. The Garrouda is the Vahanam, or ordinary Vehicle of Viſtnou; the Baſwa, or Ox, that of Eſwara; and the Ampſa, a Bird reſembling a Teal, that of Brahma.

Nor is the Origin of the Annemonta, which is properly the Wind, leſs wonderful. Whilſt Viſtnou lived under the Name of Ramma, in order to wage War with Ravana, an Ape called Keſſeri had a Female named Augena, who, tho' ſhe had no Commerce with her Male Conſort, brought forth an extraordinary kind of Ape; who, the Moment after he was whelp'd, engag'd in the Intereſts of Viſtnou. The great Services he did him in the Expedition of Lanca, were rewarded by his having a little Pagod erected in his Honour, within that of Viſtnou; and he attends on him in the ſame Quality upon Earth, as Garrouda does in Heaven.

When Viſtnou withdrew from the World, after having reſided in it under the Shape of Ramma, all the People of Ajot-ja were for following him; but Ramma told them, they could not aſcend into Heaven with their Bodies, but that if they were deſirous of accompanying him, they muſt leave them in the Serriou, a River which runs near Ajot-ja. Theſe gave Credit to what he ſaid, and followed him with new Bodies with which they had been clothed after Death. Annemonta was not allow'd this Privilege, but was obliged to remain upon Earth, with this Promiſe however, that he ſhould live as long as Brahma; and that when the World ſhall be renew'd, he ſhall ſucceed him, and that Brahma will then come and take his Place.

Garrouda and Annemonta are worſhipped by the Viſtnouvas, but the Seyvias honour the Sons of Eſwara. The firſt is Wigneſwara, whom ſome make the Son of Parvati, while others aſſert, that he is brought forth by the bare Act of Eſwara's Will. The ſecond is Verrepadera, whom Eſwara begot in his Anger, to puniſh his Father-in-Law Dats-ja. Beirewa is the third, whom he likewiſe begot in his Wrath, in order to revenge himſelf on Brahma for his inſupportable Pride and Haughtineſs; and who exerciſes Juſtice in this World over ſuch fluttering Devils as were once human Souls. The fourth is Comara-Swami, Son of Eſwara and Parvati. Nandi, who is alſo called Baſwa and Baſanna, is the Fifth, and is honoured under the Shape of an Ox. The Sun and Moon have alſo their particular Worſhip.

CHAP. V.

Of the four Ages of the World, according to the Bramins.

The Bramins aſcribe four Ages to the World: The firſt they call Critaigom, the ſecond Traitagom, the third Dwaparugom, and the fourth Kaligom. The three firſt are already paſt, and we are now in the fourth, 4835 Years whereof are already elapſed this preſent Year 1735. The Duration of the firſt was one Million, ſeven hundred twenty eight thouſand Years; the ſecond, one Million two hundred ninety two thouſand Years; the third, eight hundred ſixty four thouſand Years; which, added to thoſe already paſt of the fourth Age, amount in all to three Millions, eight hundred eighty eight thouſand, eight hundred, and thirty one Years, from the Creation, according to this Calculation. They have aſcrib'd various Degrees of Virtue to the four Ages, and aſſert, that all Things are continually degenerating, which correſponds with the Golden, the Silver, the the Braſs, and the Iron Ages of the Poets. The Univerſe, they ſay, is like an Egg, which includes the Heaven, the Earth, and the Abyſs. They ſuppoſe that Heaven contains various Worlds, and [a] Bartrouherri has number'd fourteen, which are all comprehended in that Egg. The eight which have been already ſpoken of, are under the Heaven where Brahma reſides, and go by the general Name of Surgam; ſo that inſtead of ſaying a Man is dead, they ſay he is gone to Surgam. Theſe Worlds are over the Globe inhabited by us, and are called Bou-locon. Over Surgam is Brahma-locon, and over that Kailaſom, Lilaveicontam and Viecontam, in which three Places God himſelf reſides. They place Patalam or the Abyſs, under Bou-locon. In the Middle of Bou-locon, they feign a Mountain, whoſe Summit riſes higher than the eight Worlds, and the Foot of it deſcends beneath Patalam. This Mountain, which is the ſame with Merouwa, that was mentioned when we related the Diſcovery of the Amortam, is of pure Gold; and the Revolution of the Sun, Moon, and Stars round it, occaſions the Difference of Day and Night. Tho' Gold is not of a Nature proper to nouriſh Trees, the Mountain Merouwa is nevertheleſs cover'd with Fruits which have this Property, that whoever eats of them, is never hungry or a-thirſt, or ſubject to the Inconveniencies of old Age. But theſe delicious Climes were not made for Men to reſide in, but are reſerv'd for the Sons of Diti, the Wife of Caſſiopa.

BOU-LOCON is divided into ſeven Worlds, each of which has its Sea round it. That in the Center floats in a Sea of freſh Water, the ſecond in a Sea of Milk, the third in a Sea of Butter, the fourth is ſurrounded with a Sea of curdled Milk, the fifth with a Sea of Wine, the ſixth with one of Syrup, and the laſt, which is ours, with a Sea of Salt Water. Each of theſe Worlds borrows its Name from the Sea with which it is ſurrounded.

[b] THIS World will have an End, but 'tis as yet far removed, for a thouſand Revolutions of four Ages make no more than one of the Days of Brahma's Life, who, it is ſaid, will certainly live an hundred Years, each Day of which is of the Length above-mention'd; and in 1639 they computed he was but fifty Years of Age, and that he was then entring into his fifty-firſt Year. The firſt Month, and the firſt Day, after the Expiration of theſe hundred Years, the World will be conſumed by Fire. The Sun, who now lends us only a few of his Rays, will then dart them all at once on the Earth. The Sea will be dry'd up, the Mountains will crumble into Duſt, after which the Rains will deſcend with Violence, in the ſame Manner as the Water ruſhes out of an Elephant's Trunk, and then Brahma will give up the Ghoſt.

[b] We need not remind the Reader, that this Syſtem of the four Ages of the World, according to the Bramins, is very different from that of the Banians in the preceding Diſſertation. This Difference is alſo found in the Circumſtances of the Creation. 'Tis manifeſt that both theſe People have imbib'd their Notions from the ſame Source, viz. from the Doctrine of the antient Egyptians, which probably both have diſguiſed after their own Mode. All human Inſtitutions are liable to change; and to ſay Truth, one Age has as much Right to invent Tenets as another, when they are only the Product of a wild and romantic Imagination.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Devetas, and ten Ratjasjas.

THE Devetas, who are happy and beneficent Intelligences, did not all ſpring from the ſame Original. Brahma created the Sun, the Moon, and the Stars, which are all ſo many Devetas. He alſo created others for the more immediate Service of the Deity, ſuch as Wiſtnoudouta and Sevadouta, who are both Servants, the former of Viſtnou, the latter of Eſwara. Caſſiopa the firſt Bramin, had not Reaſon to be equally ſatisfy'd with his Children. Thoſe he had by his Wife Aditi were agreeable to God, who rank'd them among the Devetas; and their Number is increaſed by the Souls of ſuch as die after having led holy Lives.

BRAHMA alſo created Ratjasjas, or unhappy and noxious Intelligences, among which are the Jammadoutas, or Servants of Jamma, and certain others. The Children which Caſſiopa had by his Wife Aditi, were all Ratjasjas, which is alſo the Fate of all ſuch as have led a Life of Guilt. Theſe are all condemned to flit up and down, to be oppreſs'd with Hunger and Thirſt. They cannot enjoy any Thing that is given them by Men, and therefore often aſſume a human Shape, in order to beg Alms. Beireva, who is their Chief, does not allow them ſo much as to tear up a ſingle Blade of Graſs.

SUCH Ratjasjas as were once Men, have no longer the Power to hurt, and are no more than a Set of wretched Beings; but the Children of Aditi are very powerful, and hurt even the Devetas. Some of theſe are even in Surgam, but they cannot ſoar up ſo high as Brahma-locon, much leſs to Weicontam, where the Divine Being reſides corporally. From their unwieldy and miſhapen Bodies, there exhales an inſupportable Stench. They are Anthropophagi or Man-Eaters, have Children, and are ſubject to Death: They aſſemble in the Iſland of Andamans, ſituated to the South of Pegu.

CHAP. VII.

Of the Pagods, and Religious Worſhip.

THE Diviſion of the Nation between Viſtnou and Eſwara, gave riſe to the Building of Pagods in Honour of both theſe Deities. As their Sects live together in the ſame Place, there is not a ſingle City but has one Temple at leaſt dedicated to each of them. Theſe are built with very lofty Spires, and are larger and more finely embelliſh'd than thoſe Pagods which are erected in Honour of the inferior Divinities. But this is not the only Diſtinction between the Pagods; there is likewiſe another which is founded on the Degree of Holineſs, they not being all equally ſacred. Here follows the Principal in the Kingdom of Carnate.

JOCKETENA, a very lofty and very beautiful Pagod at Madura; that of Sriringam, at Triſinapoli; that of Vaderaſou, at Viſnou-Canje; and that of Vire-ragna, at Trivelour: Theſe four are dedicated to Viſtnou. The following are in Honour of Eſwara, who is there there ador'd under the Figure of the five Elements: At Seva-Canje, the Pagod call'd Ekaubranata, for the Earth call'd Pratevi; at Trivanakavere, the Pagod Jembounateſwara, for the Water call'd Apou; at Trinamula, the Pagod Aranajat-Eſwara, for the Fire named Tſejem; at Kaliſt, the Pagod Kaleſt-Eſwara, for the Wind call'd Waijou; at Settamberam, the Pagod Settamberam-Eſwara, for the Air call'd Akasjem: There is alſo the Pagod Winket-Eſwara at Tripeti.

THE Bramins are very ingenious in heightning the Fame and Reputation of their Pagods, and have a fruitful Imagination for the Invention of Prodigies, in order to engage the Devotees in their Worſhip. In the Pagod of Triſinapoli is kept the original Image which Brahma himſelf ſerv'd. He gave it to the Anceſtors of Ramma, who had it by Succeſſion, and made a Preſent of it to Viphiſena, Brother to Ravana; the Occaſion of which was as follows:

RAMMA, after he had ended the War which he had waged againſt this Ratjasja, perceiving that it was with Regret he left him to go and live in his Dominions of Lanca, gave him this Image to comfort him, commanding him to worſhip it agreeably to his Intentions; upon this Condition however, that he ſhould never ſet it on the Ground, but on that Spot where he intended it ſhould always continue. Being one Day at Sriringam, he had Occaſion to make Water, when Vicgneſwara, Son of Eſwara and Parvati, aſſuming the Shape of a Bramaſari, preſented himſelf before him at that very inſtant. Viphiſena beſought him to hold the Image, till ſuch Time as he had ſatisfy'd Nature; which the other promiſed, upon Condition that he ſhould not be above half an Hour: But Viphiſena was full two Hours, whereupon the counterfeit Bramaſari ſet down the Image. Viphiſena having done that very Moment, he beat him, and endeavour'd to lift up the Image, which open'd its Mouth, and bid him not remove it from that Place; but to compenſate his Loſs, it told him, he might come every Day from Lanca and pay him Homage, which he might eaſily perform, as he was a Giant and a Ratjasja. The Boranes or Chronicles relate, that he uſed to go regularly to it every Day, bringing Flowers with which he adorn'd the Image, inſtead of thoſe which the Bramins had laid there. They ſay further, that as no one could poſſibly find out how thoſe Flowers came to be changed, a Bramin, in order to diſcover the Matter, ſhut himſelf up in the Pagod, and ſaw what he did. The Bramins pretend that he ſtill comes there once every Year.

As Viphiſena tarry'd ſo long before his Return, there was a myſterious Reaſon for his ſo doing. During the Continuance of the World which preceded this, ſeven Rivers, viz. the Ganges, Jimmena, Godaveri that flows near Narſapour, Saraſvati, Marmada, Tſindou, and Cavari happening to meet together, diſputed for Pre-eminence. Five of them gave it up, but Cavari would not. The Ganges went and proſtrated itſelf at the Feet of God, who was ſo much the more enclined to favour him, as five had already allow'd him the Superiority he ſtickled for. But Cavari made a very ſeaſonable Vow, which was ſo agreeable to that God, that he promiſed to come into his Boſom. 'Twas in order that this Promiſe might be performed, that Viphiſena was prevented making Water ſo long, in order that the Patience of the Bramaſari being worn out, he might ſet the Image upon the Ground, which by that Means would be confin'd at Sriringam, a Place ſurrounded with the Waters of the River Cavari.

THE Pagods erected in Honour of Viſtnou and Eſwara, are more lofty and ſpacious than thoſe of the inferior Divinities; but they are not to be compar'd to our Churches. Thoſe Buildings are flat, but the Spires are very lofty, and among the reſt, that of the Pagod which ſtands in the Neighbourhood of Tegnepatram, which generally goes by the Name of the white Pagod.

THESE

THESE Pagods conſiſt of three Parts: The firſt is a vaulted Roof, ſupported on Stone Columns; it lies open, and all Perſons without Diſtinction are allow'd to enter it. Some Images are within, which are placed for Ornament ſake, and to repreſent ſome Incident in the Parones or Chronicles, under ſymbolical Figures. Theſe are Elephants, Oxen, Horſes, &c. and are made of Wood. Some of theſe are carried with great Solemnity through the Streets on certain Days. The ſecond Part is open in the Day-Time, and ſhut at Night; but the Bramins who ſerve and attend in the Pagods, forbid the Entrance of it to all but themſelves. 'Tis filled with groteſque and monſtrous Figures of Men with many Heads, and a great Number of Arms. The third, which is a kind of Chancel, is ſhut up with a very ſtrong Gate. It is here that the Statue of Viſtnou, in the Shape of a Man with four Arms, is placed; or that of Eſwara, under the Figure of Lingam, or that of a Man; but in this Caſe he is repreſented with three Eyes, viz. two in their natural Place, and the third in the Middle of the Forehead. A great Number of Lamps burn Day and Night before theſe Idols.

THIS Edifice ſtands in the midſt of a Green which is ſurrounded with a Wall, within which are Pagods, which are uſually plac'd round thoſe of Eſwara and Viſtnou. Thoſe of the latter have generally thoſe of Laſtemi his Wife, of Garrouda and Annemonta, near them. It is very proper for Garrouda to be placed in the Pagod of Viſtnou, he being his Vahaman; Anemonta, whom they repreſent with an Ape's Head, becauſe, ſay they, he was whelp'd in this Manner, is ſometimes on the Outſide. Near the little Pagod dedicated to Garrouda, ſtands a kind of Maſt, on which ſeveral Sticks are nail'd; he himſelf is repreſented under an human Shape, with Wings on each Side. The Bramins, who rank him among the red Sparrow-Hawks, and pay him very great Honours, might poſſibly have borrowed this Superſtition from the Egyptians who had the Sparrow-Hawk in great [a] Veneration, and always puniſh'd thoſe with Death who kill'd one of thoſe Birds, tho' it were by Chance. In the Green where the Pagod ſtands, is a Stone Bucking-Tub, in which the Plant Tolege is ſet.

THE Pagod of Eſwara ſtands alſo on a Green ſurrounded with a Wall, having ſeveral other Pagods within it, viz. thoſe of Parvati his Wife, of Suria, of Chindeca, of Comaraſwari, and of Nandi or Baſwa. The laſt is repreſented under the Shape of an Ox as big as the Life, and made of blue Stones. Baſwa, who is Eſwara's Vahaman, is ever with him. Schendra or the Moon, has no particular Pagod, but ſhe is always over Eſwara's Head.

THE Cuſtom of placing Figures of the Moon over-head is of great Antiquity. The Moabites uſed to adorn the Necks of their Camels therewith, [b] as we read in the Book of Judges; and the Creſcent of the Mahometans poſſibly owes its Original to this. The Pagod of Eſwara has likewiſe two other Statues in it, viz. that of Vicgneſwara, which is alſo call'd Pullari and Vinnaiki. He is repreſented with the Body of a gor-belly'd Man, and the Head, the Trunk, and one of the Tuſhes of an Elephant. The other is that of Virreparda, which has one Head, but a great Number of Arms, all graſping Weapons: He is ſometimes imag'd with no leſs than thirty-two Arms.

WHENEVER the Bramins go upon the Green, they, out of reſpect, always obſerve to have the Pagod to their Right; and before they enter it, they always leave their Shoes at the Door, and throw an upper Garment over their Shoulders, as though it were a Cloke.

[b] Judic. viii. 21.

FOR

FOR the Maintenance of the Pagod, there is a Duty laid on all Goods imported and ſold in the City, and a kind of Poll-Tax which is levied on the ſeveral Families.

THE Perquiſites ariſe from the Offerings of the Pilgrims, who come in Shoals to the Pagod, on ſuch Days as are ſacred to it; as for inſtance, that of Tripeti, a few Days Journey diſtant from Paliacate, has three Feſtivals every Year; one in September, on which the Soudras particularly, and the inferior ſort of People meet there; the ſecond in December, on which the Bramins aſſemble from all Parts; and the third, whoſe ſtated Time is not mentioned by Mr. Roger, does not produce a leſs Revenue than the former. The yearly Perquiſites of this Pagod amount to ſixty or eighty thouſand[a] Pagods, which we are told is much leſs than formerly; conſequently it muſt, in thoſe Days, have amounted to prodigious Sums.

THE antient Kings uſed to glory in increaſing the Treaſures of the Pagods, but King Veincapati happening to be in want of Money, and unwilling to incur the Odium of having plunder'd the ſacred Treaſure, took the Money that was depoſited therein, and gave a Promiſſory Note for the Payment of it, when the State of his Affairs ſhould permit him to do it. Rama-Develo his Succeſſor, had not ſo much Probity, but was for ſeizing the Jewels, and among the reſt a Crown of Gold, enrich'd with Rubies and Diamonds, which was on the Head of the Idol. But thoſe who had given him this wicked Counſel, died at the Foot of the Mountain on which the Pagod ſtands, and were ſoon after followed by the King himſelf.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the IDOLS, and their WORSHIP.

DIVINE Worſhip among the Bramins does not, as with the Chriſtians, conſiſt in Aſſemblies of People who meet regularly to pray, hear Sermons, and ſing the Praiſes of God. There are certain Nights on which the Image of Viſtnou, and others on which that of Eſwara are carried in Proceſſion through the City. This Ceremony is perform'd monthly in Honour of Eſwara, on the Day of Amavali, or the firſt Day the Moon does not appear; and the ninth after the New Moon, viz. the Day of Jeccadeſi, in Honour of Viſtnou. Here follows the Manner of this Proceſſion:

THE Image of this God is ſet on a prancing Horſe carv'd in Wood, ſtanding only on his hind Legs, which are fix'd on the Board whereon he is carried. The Men who carry this Machine upon their Shoulders, do not walk ſtrait forward, but wheel up and down, in Imitation of the Pacing of a Horſe in the Manege or Riding-Horſe. Torches are carried before the Idol, who has a Sumbreiro or Uumbrello over its Head: By the Horſe's Side is a Man, who fans the Idol, and drives away the Flies. When they have gone their Rounds they place it again in the Pagod, when a Set of young Proſtitutes, conſecrated to the latter, dance in Honour of the God; they likewiſe ſing Hymns, and play on Inſtruments made of Horn, the Drums beating at the ſame Time.

[a] The Pagod in India is a Piece of Money, Value four Florins, four Stivers, Dutch Money.

THO' the Bramins think the bare Touch of a Soudra would pollute their Pagods and Images, they yet do not look upon public Proſtitutes as unworthy of dancing before the Objects of their religious Worſhip; nor do they ſuppoſe they are excluded the Felicities of the next Life, eſpecially if they keep conſtant to the Man to whom they firſt made a Sacrifice of their Chaſtity: For to ſay the Truth, this kind of Fornication is not more criminal than the Marriages of thoſe People, ſince neither of them are ſanctified by the Chriſtian Religion.

THEIR Poranes relate, that Devendre aſſuming the Shape of a Man, went one Day to viſit a Courtezan, in order to try whether or no ſhe would be faithful to him. A Bargain was ſtruck up between them, and he agreed to give her a handſome Recompence, which was accordingly perform'd. She indulg'd him the utmoſt of his Wiſhes on the Night he had paid her ſo very generouſly, but did not ſleep a-wink. Devendre feign'd himſelf ſick, and appeared to his Miſtreſs as tho' he had been really dead; whereupon ſhe the next Day declared to her Relations, that ſhe was reſolv'd to burn herſelf with the Body of her Lover, nor could all their Prayers and Intreaties diſſuade her from ſo doing. Hereupon the Funeral Pile was prepar'd, and ſhe was going to follow him, when Devendre diſcover'd himſelf to be alive; and to reward her Fidelity, promiſed her a Place in Heaven where he preſides, and accordingly was as good as his Word.

THE Worſhip of Images conſiſts in honouring them, and in dreſſing them up in ſuch Ornaments as Tradition aſſures are moſt agreeable to them. As for inſtance, Viſtnou delights in having his Statues deck'd with Flowers, rich Clothes and precious Stones; and the Viſtnouvas never fail to indulge him in his Deſires. Eſwara has a different Taſte, and delights in having his Statues waſh'd with Eſſences, and his Worſhippers are very careful to ſprinkle them with Water in which pounded Sandal had been ſteep'd, or with other odoriferous Waters. They teſtify the Veneration they have for thoſe Idols, by lighting up Lamps before them, and thoſe of their Wives, and by preſenting Victuals to them twice a-Day. He who carries the Diſh, having a little Bell in his Hand, is preceded by one who plays on the Flute, and a Drummer. After the Rice has ſtood an Hour before the Idol, the above-mentioned Perſon comes and takes it back, then this Meſs is conſider'd as a Gift which is beſtow'd by the God on thoſe who eat of it.

THE Proceſſions of Viſtnou and Eſwara above-mention'd, are not only made monthly on the Days appointed for that Purpoſe, but have each a ſolemn Feſtival every Year, when they are carried with great Pomp and Solemnity into a Tower as high as a Houſe, which runs upon Wheels, and is drawn by a Maccoas, who are Fiſhermen; a Multitude of People of the four Caſtes crouding before and behind it. The Idol being ſeated on the Top of a Chariot, is ſaluted by the Spectators, who claſp their Hands and lift them up on high. There is alſo another Proceſſion made at Paliacate the Afternoon of the tenth of January. The Statue on Horſeback is carried out of the City, and when that of Viſtnou is carried in this Manner into the Country, ſeveral Games are celebrated in his Honour, ſuch as letting looſe a He-Goat or a Fox, and endeavouring to kill them as they run, with Sticks which they hold in their Left-Hands. In the Evening the God is brought back to the Place of his Reſidence, and the Feſtival Ends with a Concert of Muſick, and the Dances of young Proſtitutes. The next Day is Eſwara's Turn, who is alſo carried into the Country. The ſame Ceremony is again perform'd the eleventh of June, but the Day following he is only put on Horſeback and carried on their Shoulders.

CHAP.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Feſtivals of Viſtnou and Eſwara.

THE Bramins diſtinguiſh their Feſtivals by three different Names. Thoſe of Viſtnou and Eſwara are call'd Trenala; thoſe of the inferior Divinities, ſuch as their Wives and Sons, go by the Name of Panduga; and Jataro thoſe of the Ganga, which we muſt obſerve not to confound with the River Ganges, though it be the ſame Name.

THE 18th of January the married Women celebrate the Feſtival of Gauvri-Devi, which laſts nine Days. Theſe Days of Devotion are inſtituted in honour of Parvati, Wife of Eſwara, to whom the Seyvias aſcribe a boundleſs Power, which they expreſs by the Word Mahaſecti, or Great Power. They celebrate this Feſtival in order to obtain a long Life for their Husbands, and to deprecate their ever being Widows. They make an Image of Parvati, with Rice Meal, mix'd with red Grain or Corn; after which they clothe it, and adorn it with Flowers; and having ſerv'd and attended on it for nine Days, they carry it the tenth into a Palankin or Sedan out of the City, followed by a Crowd of married Women; and at laſt, throw it into one of the ſacred Ponds, and there leave it; which being done, they all return to their reſpective Homes.

THE 8th of February the Seyvias and Smaertas celebrate the Feſtival of Tſeveratre, which is not obſerv'd by the Viſtnouvas. It conſiſts in faſting and watching a Day and a Night. The Soudras commonly ſpend all that Night in Gaming, to keep themſelves from falling aſleep, but are blam'd for ſo doing. This Feſtival is celebrated in Commemoration of Kalecote Visjam, that mortal Poiſon from which Eſwara deliver'd the World, when they were in ſearch of the Amortam. He had no ſooner ſwallow'd this Poiſon, but he fainted away, when the Devetas ſeeing what had befallen him, commanded all Mankind to faſt during that Day, and to meditate continually on that Deity, which gave him great Eaſe. Being recover'd out of his Swoon, he promis'd that all thoſe who ſhould celebrate this Feſtival, ſhould obtain a full Remiſſion of all his Sins.

THE 14th after the new Moon of Auguſt, the Bramins and Soudras of both Sexes celebrate the Feſtival call'd Ananta Padmanaba Uratam. This Feaſt is ſolemniz'd in order to obtain Health in this Life, and Heaven in that to come. They endeavour to perform this religious Act on the Bank of ſome River whoſe Waters are ſweet, otherwiſe 'tis celebrated in ſome Houſe or Pagod. The Bramins, who only are allow'd the Privilege of officiating at it, take a Handful of long Straws, and make them up into fourteen Knots. 'Tis then the Image of Ananta Padmanaba, which is incenſed, deck'd with Flowers, and conjur'd with a kind of Exorciſm. After this, a red Girdle, with fourteen Knots in it, is tied about the Right-Arm of that Perſon who obliges himſelf to obſerve this Feaſt, and this Girdle goes generally four Times round the Arm. When a Soudra is initiated into this Myſtery, he goes up to a Bramin, who ties the Dſandhem about his Arm; which being done, a little Pot with Water in it is put in his Name, and under it ſome Nili is ſown, and the whole is cover'd with a Linen Cloth, on which a Flower is painted, and natural ones ſtrew'd up and down it. The Bramin has a Danan or Alms for his Trouble, which is made him either in Fruits, in Rice, or in Money.

THIS Feſtival is celebrated annually, and he who has ſolemniz'd it once, is oblig'd to repeat it fourteen Times, after which he is at Liberty either to continue it, or give an Entertainment to the Bramins. If he once begins again, he is oblig'd to repeat it for another fourteen Years. Such as have accompliſh'd the fourteen Years, have the Privilege of having a golden Girdle made inſtead of a red one.

THE Inſtitution of this Feſtival is aſcrib'd to certain Saints, and to excite the Devotion of the People, the following Story is related. The Wife of a rich Bramin who was wholly ignorant of this Ceremony, going to waſh herſelf in a River whoſe Waters were [a] ſweet, was ſurpriz'd to meet with Perſons who were ſolemnizing this Feſtival. After having been inform'd of the Reaſon thereof, the Girdle was tied about her Arm, and ſhe return'd home with it. Her Husband ſeeing it on, and being told how ſhe had come by it, he took it from her Arm, and threw it into the Fire; but he was puniſh'd for ſo doing by loſing all his Poſſeſſions in an Inſtant. This great Loſs affected him very ſenſibly, whereupon he ſet out in ſearch of the God in whoſe Honour this Feſtival was celebrated, and not being able to find him, ſunk down through Wearineſs. However, the Deity appear'd to him under the Shape of an old Bramin, and ask'd him what was the Matter with him. The ruin'd Bramin began to tell him all his Story, but the old Man interrupted him, ſaying, Art thou ſuch a Madman to go in ſearch of God? Doſt thou think thou ſhalt ever be able to find him? Thou hadſt better return home, enjoy thy Eaſe, and not fatigue thyſelf in this Manner. I will not give over the Search, replied the other, but will either find him or die. Theſe Words melted the God to Compaſſion, ſo that he was no longer able to act under this feigned Character, but revealing himſelf, comforted him and reſtor'd him to his Strength. The Bramin was not wanting in his Acknowledgments; for having the Gift of Poeſy, and being skilful in making extempore Verſes, he ſtruck out ſome that Inſtant, and the God was ſo pleas'd with them, that he promis'd him he ſhould, at his Return, find all the Poſſeſſions in his Houſe which he had before been Maſter of, and that he ſhould one Day go to Heaven; all which happen'd accordingly.

THE Bramins have a particular Feſtival call'd Traſvanala Pondema, every Full Moon in Auguſt. On this Day the Dſandhem is given to Children, who are hereby Bramaſariis, and at the ſame Time the Graſaſtas, or married Bramins, take a new one.

THE 8th after the Full Moon of the ſame Month, the Bramins and Soudras celebrate the Nativity of Viſtnou by the Name of Kriſtna. Here follows the Origin of that Feſtival which is call'd Gokoulaſtemi.

IN the Age Duaparagom, or the third Age of the World, Kampſa, who was a powerful Settrea, had a Siſter, Deveki by Name, whom he gave in Marriage to Vaſſoudeva of the ſame Caſte. While they were making merry at the Wedding, an Akaſavani, or fluttering Spirit, came and interrupted the Feſtivity, and ſaid to Kampſa, Why are thou thus gay and jovial? Theſe Nuptials will be fatal to thee, for the eighth Child thy Siſter ſhall bring forth will be thy Deſtruction. At theſe Words, Kampſa put a Stop to the Mirth and Rejoicings, and would have kill'd his Siſter. He was prevented, and afterwards contented himſelf with confining her and her Husband, upon condition that ſhe ſhould deliver up all her Children into his Hands. He aſſign'd them a Habitation or rather Priſon, and ſhut them up therein, together with an Aſs, who bray'd every Time ſhe was deliver'd of a Child, when Kampſa ruſhing in at the Signal, took the Babe and threw it from the Top of the Houſe to the Bottom. He had already deſtroy'd ſeven in this Manner, and was preparing the ſame Fate for the eighth, but miſs'd his Aim.

[a] There are a great many Rivers in Perſia and India whoſe Waters are very noxious, and are call'd by the Inhabitants Bitter. Such is the Aaggiſou mention'd by Tavernier in his Voyage to Perſia. T. 1. c. 4.

By

By the City they were in there run a River, on the other Side of which was another pretty large City named Gocalam, inhabited by Herdſmen, whoſe Chief, call'd Nanda, had a Wife, Hiſſchoda by Name, who kept a great many Cows, by which ſhe got her Livelihood. This Chief of the Herdſmen and his Wife, in the other Life before that they then led, had made a Vow to Viſtnou, who reveal'd himſelf to them under the Shape of a moſt beautiful Boy, and ask'd what they requeſted of him. They were fill'd with ſo much Admiration, that without once reflecting on what they had before deſir'd, they pray'd to have a Son like to the Child that ſtood before them. Viſtnou promis'd to indulge them their Wiſh in the next Life, and the Time of his fulfilling his Promiſe was now come, when Kampſa's Siſter was deliver'd of her eighth Child, which happen'd to be a Son, who was born with four Hands, and was called Kriſtna; and 'tis thus, ſay the Bramins, that Viſtnou beſtows in Heaven the Pleaſures call'd Lila-Veicontam: They add, that he reſides in the Veicontam, where he is a pure Spirit without any corporeal Form. The Child's Parents were ſurpriz'd at his Birth, they diſcovering Something divine it, and therefore had Recourſe to Prayer; but how much was their Aſtoniſhment increas'd, when they heard it ſpeak in this Manner? You are now going to be freed from your Captivity; however take care not to diſcover my Birth, but carry me to Gocalam, on the other Side of the River, to the Houſe of Nanda, whoſe Wife is juſt now deliver'd of a Daughter; there leave me, and put this little Girl in my Stead, when the Aſs will bray. The Guards did not ſee Kriſtna's Father and Mother when they went out; the Gates flew open at the bare Touch of his Foot, and the River having divided its Waters, they croſſed it as on dry Land, when they went to Nanda, and there made the Exchange unobſerv'd. This being done, they return'd to their Confinement, and Deveki laying herſelf down in Bed with the little Girl by her Side, the Aſs immediately began to bray. Kampſa comes in a little after, fully reſolv'd to ſacrifice this eighth Son to his Jealouſy; whereupon his Siſter beſought him to ſpare her, ſince ſhe was a Girl; but he being inflexible, threw the Child aloft, in order to catch it upon the Point of his Sword; but the Babe was ſuſpended in the Air, and ſaid to him, Thou ſhalt not kill me, thy Enemy is at Gocalam, and he will take vengeance of thee. Kampſa was going to vent his Fury on his Siſter and his Brother-in-Law, but his Friends adviſed him rather to wreck it upon the Child who gave him thoſe fatal Alarms: He took their Advice, and accordingly they went in purſuit of them, but Kriſtna kill'd them all in ſport. Being grown up, he went to Madura, where he kill'd his Uncle, deliver'd his Father and Mother, and perform'd a great many other aſtoniſhing Exploits. 'Tis to be obſerv'd, that he was born at Midnight, when the Devetas and ſome Saints having Notice of it, they faſted all the Day following; and as that Night was not a fit Seaſon for ſolemnizing any Feſtival, they put it off to the next Day, and faſted till the Morrow, when they began to make merry. The Bramins, in commemoration of Kriſtna's Birth, dreſs themſelves in their fineſt Clothes, treat one another, ſend mutually Taier, or Milk taken off with the Cream, Cocoa-Nuts, and ſuch Refreſhments as are uſually met with in Herdſmen Cottages. On this Day, the Streets of all the Cities and Towns are adorn'd with Greens, and hung with Leaves.

THE Firſt of the New Moon of September, the Wives of the Bramins celebrate among themſelves the Feſtival of Maherna Houmi; it continues nine Days, and was inſtituted in honour of Latſemi, in order to obtain their Husbands Riches and a long Life. They mutually invite one another, and on the ninth Day the Bramins celebrate the ſame Feſtival in their Turn, in honour of Viſtnou; and in gratitude to their Wives, they implore of him all ſuch Things as may contribute to their Satisfaction.

THE Soudras imitate the Bramins in this Cuſtom; they invite each other reciprocally, kill He-Goats, and perform Sacrifices. On this Day the Soldiers ſcower their Arms, which for that Reaſon is call'd the Feſtival of Arms. They are unanimouſly of opinion, that the Day after is a perfectly propitious one, and that they have no Occaſion to ſelect any particular Hours in it.

A WEEK after the New-Moon of October is the Feſtival of Dipavali, which is celebrated in manner following. Before Sun-Riſe, they waſh their Heads, put on their fineſt Clothes, invite their Friends to their Houſes, and the Night following illuminate their Houſes and the Pagods, and the Children go up and down the Streets with lighted Candles; which Feſtival is inſtituted in honour of Viſtnou. We are told on this Occaſion, that while he reſided upon the Earth under the Name of Kriſtna, a Ratjasja, Nara-Kaſora by Name, who was living at that Time, had ſeiz'd on the whole World, and particularly on ſixteen thouſand Virgins, whom he kept Priſoners. Kriſtna having Compaſſion on them, overcame the Raviſher, killed him, went into his Houſe, and reſtor'd the Maidens to their Liberty; who being ſtruck with his Beauty, wiſh'd each of them in ſecret to have him for her Husband. Kriſtna, who knew their Deſires, fulfill'd them. As the Ratjasja was dead only to live again, he was not angry at his having got him ſo great a Number of Miſtreſſes, ſince he ſet a Crown upon his Head, and order'd him to conduct himſelf with Prudence for the future. When Kriſtna left this World, he commanded them to celebrate a Feſtival in his Honour, and promis'd, that whoever ſhould aſſiſt at it, ſhould have a full Remiſſion of all his Sins, and be very happy in this Life. The Malabarians have likewiſe a Feſtival in July, call'd Adi Panduga, and another in November, call'd Cartica Panduga; the Motives of the Inſtitution whereof we are not well acquainted with. Beſides the Feaſts above-mention'd, they have certain Days which are look'd upon as holy; and they believe, that an Alms beſtow'd on thoſe Days to a ſingle Perſon, is as meritorious as a thouſand Times as much given to a thouſand Perſons at another Seaſon.

CHAP. X.

Of Pongol, or the Feaſt of the Sun, and of the Worſhip of the other Devetas.

THE Beauty of the Sun, and his great Uſefulneſs to the Univerſe by the Light he diffuſes, and the prolific Heat with which he animates all Nature, were ſome of the firſt Cauſes of Idolatry. The Bramins have not only given his Name to that Day which we call Sunday, by them call'd Suria-vanam, but alſo celebrate a Feſtival in his Honour, call'd Pongol, which falls out on the Ninth of January. The Bramins of the firſt Caſte, look upon this Day only as a happy and propitious one, but the Soudras make a Feſtival of it. They viſit one another, make mutual Preſents, and their moſt conſiderable Perſons are viſited by the Bramins. They boil Rice in Milk; and if they have not Milk enough, they mix Water with it. At other Times they throw away the Water in which the Rice has been boil'd, but on this Day they keep it on the Fire till all the Water is evaporated. They boil the Rice without the Houſe, in ſome Place which lies open to the Sun, and place it in ſuch a Manner that it may receive its Meridian Rays. When they perceive that he withdraws himſelf, they cry Pongol, and repeat it four Times. The Rice which is thus boil'd on this Day, is look'd upon as very holy, and is kept as long as poſſible. Some of theſe People renew this Feſtival every Sunday. One of the Reaſons of the Inſtitution of this Feaſt, is from a Notion they entertain, that Ratjasja Belli, of whom mention will be made in the Sequel, deſcends that Day upon the Earth, in order to ſurvey the State of Things. 'Tis pretended, that when this Ratjasja was baniſh'd to Patalam, or the Abyſs, after having been conquer'd by Viſtnou, he obtain'd leave to come once a Year upon Earth.

BUT Mankind are not the only Beings who rejoice at this Feſtival, but their Cows, Buffles, or wild Oxen, partake in it. The Day after the Pongol, in the midſt of their Mirth and Jollity, and when Viſtnou is carried into the Country, the Beaſts above-mention'd are alſo led thither early in the Morning, their Necks being adorn'd with Crowns and Cakes. I took notice when I mention'd the daily Exerciſe of the Brahmins, of what was perform'd every Morning and every Evening in honour of the Sun. This Deveta has a little Pagod, in which his Idol is honour'd by lighting up a Lamp before it, when they lift up their Hands before it, and pay it divine Honours.

ALTHOUGH Garrouda, Annemonta, Vicgneſwara, and Virrepadra, are not Deities, they yet are honour'd, and are conſider'd as the Diſpenſers of Health, and the reſt of the Bleſſings of Life. Prayers are likewiſe made, and Offerings preſented to them. Vicgneſwara has the greateſt Attendance, being generally worſhipp'd and ſerv'd in private Houſes as a kind of tutelary Divinity. But they have not the ſame Affection for Virrepadra, though he is alſo one of Eſwara's Sons. His Birth, which was the Effect of the Anger of that God, and the Weapons with which they repreſent him arm'd, are very inconſiſtent with the Genius of ſo pacific a Nation. The Women addreſs themſelves to Vicgneſwara, in order to obtain Children, and for that Purpoſe offer her Rice, Cocoa-Nuts, and Flowers.

NOR is Devendre or his Subalterns without theſe Honours, but are alſo worſhipped, and have Sacrifices offer'd up to them. The Jagam is made in honour of Devendre, by which the Priſoners implore to be carried up into that Heaven where he preſides. They invoke Achni, in order to enjoy a good Reputation in the World; Varouna, for Water; Vajouvia for Strength and Vigour; and Iſania for a great Credit and Authority. They don't conſider them as the Authors, but the Diſpenſers of theſe temporal Bleſſings, and add, that Mankind muſt raiſe their Thoughts higher.

A VERY ſurprizing Circumſtance is, that Brahmà, who is look'd upon as the Creator and univerſal Governor of the World, ſhould not have any peculiar Worſhip eſtabliſh'd in a Nation, who ſo far from confining their Tenderneſs to thoſe to whom they fancy themſelves indebted for any Benefit, but extend it even to ſuch as have the leaſt Relation to them. As for inſtance, they have all red Sparrow-Hawks in the utmoſt Veneration for Garrouda's Sake; and Cows and Oxen are very much rever'd upon account of Baſwa; but as for Brahma, he has not ſo much as one Pagod, or a ſingle Statue erected in his Honour.

CHAP.

CHAP. XI.

Of the Worſhip of Ganga Gramma, of Gournata, and the other Ratjasjas.

THESE Idolaters do not only honour all happy and beneficent Deities, but have alſo inſtituted ſeveral religious Ceremonies, in order to procure the Favour of thoſe whom they conſider as the Inſtruments of divine Vengeance; of theſe there are a very great Number, among which Ganga and Gournata are the moſt famous.

THE Name of Ganga is common to the River Ganges, which, for Diſtinction Sake, is called Ganga Nadi; and to a Devil, Ganga Gramma by Name, whom the Bramins declare to be of the Female Sex. Some will have it, that ſhe's one of Eſwara's Wives, while others aſſert that ſhe is not married. Be that as it will, Ganga Gramma is repreſented with one Head and four Arms; ſhe holds in her Left Hand a little Bowl, and in her Right, a Trident. There are few Places but we meet with Pagods erected in her Honour; whereas Gournata, who is thought to have a more extenſive Power than Ganga, and is by the Seyvias's look'd upon as one of the Sons, and the moſt faithful Servants of Eſwara, has not ſo much as one Pagod dedicated to him, and only a few Statues placed in the Fields. We often meet with the Statue of the latter ſurrounded with Ratjasjas, made of Brick, ſtanding round him like his Council. The People go and worſhip him under a Tree, and perſuade one another that they have ſeen him perſonally.

IN India there are ſome Feſtivals inſtituted in honour of Ganga, on certain ſtated Days, at Paliacate excepted, and perhaps certain other Cities, whoſe Governors appoint the Days of their Solemnization. This Feaſt, which is alſo call'd Pongol, differs from that dedicated to the Sun. Rice is alſo boil'd at this Solemnity, either in the Pagod, or at a little Diſtance from it; but the Bramins never celebrate this Feaſt.

IN the Morning the Rice is boil'd; and in the Afternoon the Idol of Ganga, being ſeated on a Chariot, is carried up and down before the Image of Viſtnou. A great Number of He-Goats is ſacrificed in his honour, and their Heads are cut off by the Men who ſerve in the Pagod, with a Knife made purpoſely for that Ceremony. A Machine is carried in theſe Proceſſions, like thoſe Engines, which are uſed for drawing of Water out of Wells. All ſuch Perſons who, in a Fit of Sickneſs, or any imminent Danger, have made a Vow to Ganga, receive a voluntary kind of Strapado at that Time. Two Hooks are fix'd in the Skin of their Backs, and with theſe they are lifted up into the Air, where they act a great many apiſh Tricks, ſuch as ſhooting off a Gun, and charging it again, or brandiſhing Swords. Women very often offer to perform theſe Feats, deluded and impos'd upon by thoſe who aſſure it puts them to no Manner of Pain. And to prevent the People from being undeceiv'd by the Cries of thoſe who are hook'd together in this Manner, they all ſhout aloud at that very Inſtant.

SOME ſuffer a Pack-Thread to be run into their Fleſh, which they draw while they are dancing, and theſe deluded Wretches undergo this grievous Operation purely to pleaſe Ganga.

WE are aſſur'd, that in certain Places ſome Perſons are ſo infatuated with Zeal, as to fall proſtrate before the Chariot of Ganga, purpoſely to be run over, and that ſeveral of theſe are cruſh'd to Pieces upon the Spot.

NIGHT being come, they ſacrifice a Buffal, of whom they ask a great many Queſtions, and conſult the Idol on each of them; which being done, they cut its Head off with a Knife made purpoſely for that Uſe, and bury the Body in the Street before the Pagod. They let his Blood run into a Pot, which being preſented before the Idol, they pretend, that not a Drop of it is found in it the next Day. Antiently it was uſual to ſacrifice a [a] Man to Ganga, but ſome Perſon had Credit enough to engage him to be ſatisfied with a Buffal. When a Mortality rages at any Time among the Cattle, He-Goats are immediately ſacrific'd. The ſame is done when a Ship is launch'd, at beginning any new Work, ſuch as the making a Ditch, a Hut, &c. Whatever they undertake, they do their utmoſt to obtain the Favour of Ganga and Gournata.

THE Bramins of the firſt Caſte condemn theſe Sacrifices, which are very common among thoſe of the fourth; however they dare not oppoſe them. They hold, that ſuch as have obſerv'd this Cuſtom, die, and are born again ſeveral Times; that they muſt expiate theſe Sacrifices by a Multitude of Miſeries, which they are oblig'd to ſuffer in this World, after which they go into Hell, out of which God delivers them after an unlimited Time.

CHAP. XII.

Of the Human Soul; its Origin, and State after Death.

MANKIND, according to the Bramins, were created by Brahma, who having received the Power of creating the ſeveral Worlds, gave Being to nine Men, who, with the Children which he had by his Wife Saraſwati, peopled the Earth.

THEY make no Diſtinction between the Soul of Man and that of Brutes, but ſay, that its whole Dignity conſiſts, in that Man has a Body in which the Soul is at greater Liberty to diſplay itſelf, and perform ſuch Operations as are more worthy of its Nature. According to this Doctrine, the Spirit of Man is not ſuperior to that of Beaſts, but only in the different Conſtruction of the Organs which it animates; and that the Beaſts would be able to reaſon and expreſs their Thoughts, were their Bodies capable of co-operating to the Functions of the Soul, which is, as it were, chain'd down to this earthly Tabernacle. To prove their Aſſertions, they alledge the Imbecility of Childhood, and the Weakneſs and Crazineſs of old Age. The Soul, ſay they, is ſtill the ſame, but when the Organs are not as yet form'd, 'tis impoſſible for it to exhibit the ſame Thoughts outwardly, till ſuch Time as thoſe very Organs have attain'd their due Perfection; and in the ſame Manner, when Age makes any Alteration in them, the Soul falls into its former Impotency.

[a] 'Tis ſurprizing that this Nation, which does not offer any bloody Victim either to Viſtnou or Eſwara, although they look upon him as the Supreme God, ſhould yet ſhed the Blood of Animals before Ganga. This is alſo a Relic of the antient Superſtition of the Egyptians, which the Learned among the Greeks had adopted in their Writings. Porphyry, who would not allow the Offering of living Animals to the Supreme Being, thought the Worſhip of evil Spirits neceſſary, in order to divert their pernicious Influences from Corn, Fruits, Fields, and Cities. Plato would have Animals ſacrific'd, and their Blood offer'd to the Spirits of the Air. The Manicheans, who divided the Government of the Univerſe into two Principles, the one good, the other bad, came originally from the Eaſt, and their Opinion is no more than a Refinement on that antient Error.

THE Bramins are not agreed with regard to the Origin of Souls. Some aſſert, that they began to exiſt by the bare Will of God, before the Univerſe was created; that they reſided in the divine Eſſence; and that after the Creation, they were lodged in the Bodies of Men, or thoſe of Beaſts, in order to expiate the Sins they had committed. Others aſſure, that the Soul is eternal, that it has ever exiſted in God, and explain their Doctrine by the following Compariſon. In like manner, ſay they, as all Rivers empty themſelves into the Sea, and compoſe one Whole therewith, juſt ſo Souls come from God, and re-unite with his Eſſence. They employ the ſame Arguments with Plato to prove the Eternity of the Soul. A People who believe the Soul to be eternal, are far from diſputing its being immortal.

THEY allow of Rewards and Puniſhments after this Life, but ſay, that the Wicked are not all puniſhed alike. Some will be puniſh'd in this World after Death, and others in that to come.

IF ſuch a Soul as the above-mentioned, may, for the Sins it has committed, be impriſon'd as it were in a Body, it may alſo, from the ſame Reaſon, be diſlodged from it to be in a worſe Condition, whether in the Body of a Man or that of a Brute. This Doctrine of the Tranſmigration of Souls was not peculiar to the Egyptians; for the Druids, according to Cæſar, had the ſame Notion. [a] Ovid and [b] Tibullus among the Romans have written agreeable to that Doctrine; the [c] Germans had alſo imbib'd the ſame Notion, and the [d] Getes had received it from Zamolxis. Plato approv'd it, and Plotinus his Diſciple, but Porphyry received it with certain Reſtrictions; for he allow'd that Souls tranſmigrate from one human Body into another, but thought it beneath the Dignity of Man, for a human Soul to paſs into that of a Brute. He found too much Abſurdity in a Syſtem, according to which it might ſcandalouſly have happen'd, that when the Soul of a Woman had tranſmigrated into the Body of a Mule, her Son might mount her ignorantly, and claſp her Sides with his Hoofs. But the Bramins, who are leſs ſcrupulous, admit the whole Syſtem without the leaſt Reſtriction. Theſe don't meet with any Remora in their Way, which ſhould prevent their believing, that the ſame Soul may reſide ſucceſſively in the Body of a Man, of a Beaſt, or that of a Plant.

THE moſt honourable Tranſmigration, next to that of the human Body, is into the Cods of an Ox or a Cow. Beſides the Reaſons already brought with regard to the Preference which is given to that Animal, I ſhall add further, that 'tis a Relic of the Worſhip which the antient Egyptians paid to their God Apis; and that Baſwa, or the Ox, which is the Bahaman or Vehicle of Eſwara, had probably no other Origin. Mr. Rogers tells us, that an Ox dedicated to a Pagod, happening to die a natural Death, his Obſequies were performed in as honourable a Manner as if he had been a Perſon of Diſtinction.

I HAVE already obſerved, that ſome Souls at their quitting the Body, don't immediately tranſmigrate into others, but become Ratjasjas becauſe of their Sins; and that to expiate them, they flutter for ſome Time in the Air; that they labour under extreme Want, and are not able to enjoy any Thing that is given them by way of Alms.

[a] Metamor. Lib. xv.

Their

Their Power is ſo ſmall, that 'tis not dreaded in the leaſt, notwithſtanding the firm Perſuaſion which prevails of thoſe Ratjasjas often aſſuming human Shape. Their Puniſhment is not ſo great as that of thoſe Souls who go and expiate their Sins in the Hell where Jamma preſides.

THE laſt are of two Sorts. The firſt continue there but a limited, tho' very long Time; and after having been ſufficiently purg'd by their Sufferings, return back upon the Earth, and are there clothed with new Bodies. The ſecond are hurl'd into Antam-Tappes, or the Dark-Well, whence they can never return. They there ſuffer infinite Torments, both with regard to the Violence of them, and their Duration; and among other Tortures, are torn with Thorns, by mad Crows with Steel Beaks, and by Dogs, and Gnats, who are continually ſtinging them. Beſides the exceſſive Cold which prevails in that Well, it abounds with every kind of Torture which can poſſibly heighten the Rigour of their Puniſhment.

As the Law-givers among the Bramins have appointed Puniſhments for the Wicked, they have alſo prompted Men to the Practice of Virtue, by the Hopes of enjoying the utmoſt Felicity in the Life to come. Here follows what they promiſe the Virtuous. They allot them ſeven different Places under Heaven, where Indre or Devendre, Achni, Niruti, Vajouvia, Cubera, Iſangia, and Varouna, preſide. 'Tis there that ſuch Souls as are deſtin'd to return again upon the Earth, go and enjoy that Felicity which is the Reward of Virtue. Such as have led ſtill more perfect Lives, are raiſed to the Heaven of Brahma, but both are to return again upon Earth; however with this Difference, that when the laſt have liv'd their appointed Period here below, they infallibly go into Heaven, and there continue to all Eternity.

SURGAM is the general Name they give to the ſeven inferior Heavens, and all the Souls which go thither are real Devetas; but after they have enjoy'd all the Pleaſures that are to be found in them, not excepting thoſe of the Senſes, the Moment their deſtin'd Time is come, they are oblig'd to abandon thoſe Delights, and tranſmigrate into another Body, when they leave that with which they were clothed in Paradiſe. The Bramins cannot tell what becomes of that Body which has adminiſtred to their Happineſs; it poſſibly may ſerve to lodge ſome Soul that is newly arriv'd. However, ſome Devetas always live in Surgam, ſuch as the Sun, the Moon, the Stars, and ſeveral others. It is impoſſible for the Souls who are in Surgam to ſin any more, becauſe God reveals himſelf ſometimes there, and inſtructs him.

VEICONTAM is allotted to thoſe who are reſerv'd to a State of greater Felicity. There are two Places which go by this Name; the firſt is call'd Veicontam, where God himſelf reſides; the ſecond is Lila-Veicontam, or the Heaven of Pleaſures. The Bramins are not agreed whether the Souls admitted into the latter are to return again upon Earth; but they are unanimouſly of opinion, that whoever is receiv'd into the former, enjoys an Eternity of Bliſs in it. After all, ſay they, very few lead ſo virtuous a Life as to be entitled to the Enjoyment of ſo ſupreme a Felicity. But 'tis not ſo difficult nor rare to be admitted into Surgam.

CHAP. XIII.

Of good Works and Religious Auſterities.

A LIFE to come, in which Mankind is either to be rewarded or puniſh'd, according as their Actions have been good or bad, implies the Neceſſity of good Works. A Bramin was for falling proſtrate before the Devetas, but calling to mind that theſe Deities humble themſelves before Brahma, he thought it more proper to pay his reſpects to him. However, he again chang'd his Reſolution, when he recollected that Brahma is obliged to render to every one according to his Works, and concluded that he ought to rely wholly upon the Merits of his own Works.

THE Bramins think that Rewards and Puniſhments are not diſtributed in this Life; as Man, in their Opinion, has a Variety of Births, they believe that divine Juſtice is exerciſed only in the Life to come. Thus every Man who ſuffers, expiates the Sins he had committed in the preceding Life, and before he aſſumes the Body which is puniſh'd. As very few have ſo good an Opinion of their Purity, as to imagine it will abſolutely entitle them to a Place either in Veicontam, or in Surgam, moſt of them rely entirely on the Merits of certain Exerciſes, which convey a Forgiveneſs of Sins along with them. Beſides thoſe Auſterities which are expreſly enjoined by the Vedam, there are others which are exerciſed out of pure Whim by certain Devotees, who aſpire at a greater Perfection than other People. Mr. Rogers ſaw an Inſtance of this Mortification in the little Pagod of Parvati, near that of Eſwara, which, according to the Account he has given of it, exceeds all the Auſterities that were ever practiſed by any religious Order.

THIS Bramin abſtain'd from whatever is uſually eaten, and fed only on a little ſweet Milk, and a little Fruit. He continued ſitting all the Day long without once ſtirring from his Place, and never laid down to Sleep, but keeping himſelf in a very uneaſy Poſture, endeavoured to refrain from Sleep as long as poſſible, repeating inceſſantly the thouſand Names of Eſwara. He had the Idol repreſenting that Deity, which he adorn'd with Flowers, lighted up a Lamp before it, and incenſed it. He had no ſooner finiſh'd this Exerciſe, but riſing up, he ſet his Head in the Place where his Heels ſhould be, and in this Poſture repeated ſeveral pretty long Prayers; which being done, he went and ſat down in the ſame Place where he had ſtood before, and began again the ſame Exerciſe. This being ended, he went into the Green on which the Pagod ſtood, where ſtood two Bamboos rais'd like Poles, in the Shape of a Gibbet, at the Top of which two Ropes were fix'd with a Slip-knot. Underneath was a ſquare Pit, where he lighted a Fire, and laid ſome Sticks near it. After this he turned himſelf thrice round the Fire, obſerving, by way of Reſpect, to have the Pit always at his Right; then proſtrating himſelf ſeveral Times, he went up, twiſted the Ropes about his Feet, then [a] ſuſpending himſelf with his Head downwards, and his Face turn'd towards the Flame, he ſwung himſelf up and down like a Bell, and increas'd the Fire by throwing Wood into it which was in his Reach. After this painful Exerciſe, which laſted half an Hour, he came down, went round the Pit, and returning into the Pagod, ſeated himſelf as before. In this Manner did this Bramin exerciſe himſelf daily, not in the View of obtaining Heaven, for that he look'd upon as granted, but in order to attain a pure exalted Degree of Fe-

ANOTHER Bramin had his Head thruſt through an Iron Collar of twenty-four Pound Weight, made like a Rail, four Foot in Diameter at Top. He had enjoin'd himſelf to carry it till ſuch Time as he had collected a great Sum of Money, in order for the building an Hoſpital.

Two others had [a] long heavy Chains upon their Legs, one End of which came over their Shoulders, and the other dragg'd upon the Ground after them.

ANOTHER had got himſelf chain'd by the Foot to a Tree, with a firm Reſolution of dying in that Place.

CHAP. XIV.

Of ſuch PLACES as are Holy, and the Forgiveneſs of SINS.

MAN is not indued with Juſtice ſufficient for approaching God; and by Sin is excluded eternal Life. 'Tis the Buſineſs of Religion to furniſh Expedients for the Remiſſion of Sins. That of the Bramins teaches ſeveral Methods of Purification. The firſt is to viſit thoſe Places which are famous for their Holineſs, ſuch as Ajot-ja, Matura, Caſi, Canje, Aventa-Capouri and Duareveti, which, according to the Bramins, are the ſeven moſt holy Places upon Earth. All ſuch Men and Beaſts as die at Caſi aſcend ſtrait up to Heaven; but thoſe who expire in the ſix others, go to that Place where Brahma reſides, whence they are to return again upon the Earth. But this is their laſt Stage or Life, after which they go up into Heaven, and there continue to all Eternity. All theſe holy Places are not of equal Extent, and the Promiſes which are made to ſuch as die in them, are confin'd to themſelves only. Caſi includes a [a] quarter of a League in Diameter, and that of Ajot-ja, twelve.

AJOT-JA lies Northward about twelve Leagues from Caſi; it is holy, becauſe Viſtnou, under the Name of Ramma, was born in it.

[a] St. Epiphanius relates, that in his Time the Prieſts of Saturn in Egypt uſed to load themſelves with Irons, and run Rings through their Noſtrils; that they wore long Hair, very dirty Clothes, &c. The Deſcription he gives of them anſwers pretty near to that of the Joguis Indians. See Epiph. lib. 3. contra Hæreſ. 344, and following.

[b] By this Word Leagues, we are to underſtand thoſe of the Country that are called Coſſes, and which are near 2500 geometrical Paces in Length. I ſay near, for there are ſome Leagues that are not above 2400.

MATURA, not far from Agra, which is the Reſidence of the Great Mogul; Viſtnou was born there under the Name of Kriſtna.

CASI, call'd alſo Varanaſi, is in the Kingdom of Bengal, on the Banks of the Ganges, twelve Leagues from Ajot-ja and Preyaga. Caſi is thought to be ſo holy a Place, that all who die in it enjoy the Privilege which Eſwara formerly honour'd it with. When any Perſon there is juſt going to expire, he never fails to come and blow in his Right Ear, and by that Means purify him from all his Sins; for which Reaſon not only Men, but even Beaſts, when they die, always lay themſelves down with their Left Ear turn'd to the Ground. Should any one, ſay they, be ſo imprudent as to lay his Right Ear downwards, he would certainly turn about, juſt when he was going to yield up the Ghoſt. This they confirm by a Story of a Native of Mogul, who doubting the Truth of this Miracle, was reſolved to ſee an Experiment of it. He had a Horſe that was quite ſpent and juſt ready to die, when he order'd his four Legs to be ty'd, and had him laid on his Right Side, which was accordingly done; but no ſooner was he juſt yiedling up his laſt Gaſp, but the Ropes with which he was ty'd broke of themſelves, and he turn'd about upon his Left Side. As the Souls of thoſe who die at Caſi are not to return any more upon the Earth, their Bodies become petrified.

CANJE or Canjeſwaram, a large and famous City of the Kingdom of Carnate, has a great Number of Pagods.

AVENTE-CAPOURI or Aventeutica, a City ſituated to the North of Agra, is rever'd for the holy Places that are in it.

DUARACA or Duareveti, near Surat, was antiently a holy Place, but the Sea has quite ſwallow'd it up. Kriſtna died there, and was, according to their uſual Cuſtom, to have been burnt in it, but the Sea wafted him from thence to Siangernata or Prouſotamai, at the Extremity of the Gulf of Bengal, upon which Account this laſt Place is thought to be very holy. If a vulgar Tradition is to be credited, The Bodies of all ſuch as die there grow as hard as Wood. Every Thing is pure in this Place: In any other a Bramin would not dare to touch a Soudra, nor eat of any Thing he had touch'd; but here he may venture to take it from him, and if he were to ſay, this is unclean, Worms would immediately iſſue out of his Mouth.

PRAJAGA lies twelve Leagues diſtant from Caſi in going up the Ganges, and is nearer the City of Agra. Here three Arms of the Ganges meet, or rather, two other Rivers empty themſelves into it. This Water has the Property of waſhing away Sin; and Suicide, which in all other Places is a Crime, is not ſo in this.

Too great a Number of People would be deprived of the Advantages which accrue from the Holineſs of theſe Places, were they indulg'd only to ſuch as have an Opportunity of going to them. But to render their Efficacy more univerſal, it has been eſtabliſh'd, that whoever ſhall repeat their Names, and direct his Thoughts to them, will reap as much Benefit as if he were to viſit them in Perſon; for which Reaſon, all who ſet themſelves up for Devotees, repeat them over very carefully every Morning, as if they were ſo many Prayers.

ALL

ALL ſuch as ſolemnize the appointed Feſtivals, have likewiſe their Sins pardon'd, whereof I have already given ſome Inſtances in the foregoing Chapter.

THE Bramins alſo make a mighty Merit of Ablutions, for which they employ either freſh or ſalt Water. The latter has the Property of cleanſing from Sin, only with regard to the Diſtinctions of Times and Places; for being itſelf impure, 'tis conſequently incapable of producing this Effect. The antient Egyptians hated the Sea as much, and look'd upon all Iſlanders as unclean. The above-mention'd [a] Egyptians fancied the Sea was form'd from Saturn's Tears; nor do the Bramins aſcribe a more natural Origin to it. Here follows what they tell us on that Head.

AGASTEA, [b] who was a very holy but very little Man, and no bigger than one's Thumb, who exiſted from the Beginning of the World, and will continue to the End of it, was walking near the Sea. This Element laughing at the Littleneſs of his Stature, he reſented it, and ſwelling with Rage, he drew the whole Ocean into his Hand as tho' it had been a ſingle Drop of Water, and ſwallow'd it all down. The Devetas were extremely uneaſy at what had happen'd, and telling him how much they ſhould ſuffer for want of this neceſſary Element, they conjur'd him to throw it up: Agaſtea, unable to reſiſt their Prayers, evacuated it all like ſo much Urine, which occaſion'd its Saltneſs. The Sea is pure the firſt Day of every Month, and during Eclipſes, and the Conjunctions of certain Stars; and in all Seaſons, in that part of it which is oppoſite to the Pagod Rameſwara, call'd by the Malabarians Ramanatacovil, whether the People flock in Crouds to cleanſe and purify themſelves.

AMONG the ſeveral Rivers of freſh Water, the Indians aſcribe a very great Holineſs to the Ganges. Its Virtue is ſo great, that it has an Effect even on all ſuch as barely waſh themſelves in it, without any Deſign of thereby obtaining the Remiſſion of their Sins. The Inhabitants of Bengal repoſe ſo much Confidence in it, that ſuch of them as live on the Banks of that River, never fail to carry their Sick to it when they are juſt ready to give up the Ghoſt, and plunge them into the Water as high as the Waiſt. But as this Bleſſing would extend to a few Perſons only, and that all who live at a great Diſtance from it may enjoy its Efficacy, it is univerſally agreed, that whatever Waters a Man may waſh himſelf with, they all will have the ſame Property, provided that while he is uſing them, he thinks on thoſe of the Ganges, and ſays Ganges ſianam, or O Ganges waſh me. But this is not all, this Water is put in Bottles and carry'd up into the Country, in the ſame Manner as thoſe of Pyrmont and other mineral Waters in Paris, &c.

CHAP. XV.

The mythological Origin of the GANGES. The Hiſtory of Belli, of Sagara and Bagireta.

THE River Ganges does not ſpring, as others do, out of the Bowels of the Earth, but came originally from Heaven into that of Devendre, and from thence into Indoſtan.

BELLI, the Ratjasja, having made a Vow to Eſwara, and obtained from him the Power of overcoming all his Enemies, was ſo puffed up with this Privilege, that he had the Inſolence to attack Devendre and the Chiefs of the other Worlds, which are under Heaven: Of theſe he poſſeſs'd himſelf, and drove them out of the Places where they preſide. Hereupon they complain'd of it to Brahma, and he related the whole to Viſtnou. This God, who had ſome Friendſhip for Belli, becauſe of the great Service he did him, thought proper to employ Artifice rather than Strength, and for that Purpoſe came into the World under the Name of Vamana, a young Bramin; and one Day as Belli was offering a Jagam or Sacrifice, he took that Opportunity of begging a Favour of him. What doſt thou require of me, ſays Belli? Make me a Preſent of three Foot of Earth, replied the young Bramin: Which he accordingly did; whereupon he began immediately to meaſure the Earth. He ſtamp'd upon it with one of his Feet, and drove it down as low as Patalam, or the Abyſs, when he touch'd the Egg-Shell with which all the Worlds are ſurrounded, then lifted up his other Foot acroſs all the other Worlds, and ſet it on the oppoſite Side of the ſame Shell. He afterwards ask'd where he ſhould place his third Foot, (for the Poranes, or Chronicles, beſtow Arms and Feet very liberally.) Set it on my Head, replied Belli. Vamana took him at his Word, and gave him ſuch a dreadful Kick upon the Head, as ſtruck him to the Bottom of the Abyſs, where he has remain'd ever ſince. The only Fruit he got by his Repentance, is, that he enjoys as much Happineſs in that Place as if he were in Heaven. The Moment Vamana reſted his Foot acroſs, he not only touch'd the Egg-Shell in which the Worlds are inclos'd, but unfortunately crack'd it, when the Water in which this Egg-Shell ſwims, began to ruſh in at the Crack. Brahma immediately taking up a Veſſel, catch'd part of the Water that run from it, and therewith waſh'd the Feet of Viſtnou; and as for the reſt, it flow'd like a River in the Paradiſe of Devendre; but it was brought down upon the Earth by another Accident.

A SETTREA named Sagara [a] Jackraverti, a Perſon of great Authority, was for offering a white Horſe in Sacrifice. This kind of Jagam is attended with great Difficulties, and is not to be perform'd by all Perſons indifferently; for a Man before he attempts it muſt be ſure that he will not be oppos'd by a Perſon more powerful than himſelf. The Perſon who intends to make this Oblation, ſends the Horſe appointed for the Sacrifice up and down the whole County. On the Tail of the Victim a Writing is fix'd, containing the Name of the Perſon who intends to celebrate the Jagam; when it is asked, whether any Perſon dares ſeize upon that Horſe, ſpecifying at the ſame Time the Number of Perſons who attend upon him. If any Man offers to oppoſe them, and the Eſcorte of the Victim happens to be routed, the Jagam is laid aſide; but if there be no Obſtacle, the Jagam is offer'd at the Time appointed. Sagara Jackraverti being deſirous of obtaining that Honour, cauſed the white Horſe to be eſcorted by a great Number of Women, who were accompany'd by ſixty thouſand young Men: They met with no Oppoſition, but Devendre obſerving they march'd with too haughty an Air, ſtole away the Horſe, hid him under the ſeventh World, and tied him behind a very devout Viſtnouva. Thoſe who attended upon the Horſe finding him gone, ſought for him every where, but to no Purpoſe; nor would they ever have had any News of him, had it not been for an Akaſvani, or fluttering Demon, who heard where he was. The Multitude, in order to arrive at the ſeventh World, dug ſo deep into the Bowels of the Earth, that they at laſt were at a Loſs how to throw it up; however they thought of an Expedient, which was to eat it, and in order to ſwallow it down the more eaſily, they drank a great Quantity of Water. At length they got to the Place where the Horſe was, and imagining the Viſtnouva had ſtole it away, they fell to beating him. The Saint being hurt by their Blows, curſed them; upon which they were immediately reduced to Aſhes, together with their Leader. This Son being in great Pain for his Father, deſcended into the Pit which had been dug, and got down to the Viſtnouva; however he, inſtead of uſing opprobrious Language, conjur'd him to declare what was become of his Father whom he was ſeeking after; but how great was his Grief upon his being told, that he was now no more than a Heap of Aſhes; and, to heighten his Diſtreſs, that all thoſe Souls were unhappy! The Saint told him, that there was but one way left to ſave them, and that was to ſprinkle the Water of the Ganges upon their Aſhes, which would infallibly procure them Admittance into the Paradiſe of Devendre. The young Man hearing this, took the Horſe, leap'd upon him, went to his Grandfather, and beſought him to grant him Leave to do all that lay in his Power for procuring ſome of that Water. He made a Vow to Viſtnou, and never broke it once for thirty thouſand Years together, and at laſt died without having compleated his Deſign. Two others made the ſame Vow one after another, and obſerv'd it for the ſame Term of Years, but to as little Purpoſe as the firſt. A fourth, Bagireta by Name, had his Petition granted, after having obſerv'd the ſame Things ten thouſand Years; becauſe all theſe Years added together amount to an hundred thouſand, which was the Time appointed for the Accompliſhment of their Wiſhes. Viſtnou having therefore promiſed Bagireta to grant him whatever he ſhould ask, he begg'd that his Family, which had been reduc'd to Aſhes, might be ſprinkled with the Water of the Ganges. He obtain'd that the Ganges ſhould go where-ever he ſhould think proper to conduct it, and finding himſelf in ſo fair a way of being indulg'd in all his Deſires, he wiſh'd that the River might deſcend on the Mountain Chimmavontam, which is ſituated pretty far Northward. The Mountain declared, that ſo heavy a Burthen would cruſh it to Pieces, and that no one but Eſwara was able to bear ſo great Weight. Eſwara civilly offered Bagireta to take the River upon his Head, but the Ganges had ſo mean an Opinion of Eſwara's Strength, that it fancied it could cruſh him to Pieces, and to puniſh him for his Raſhneſs, was preparing to oppreſs him with his Weight, when Eſwara, to ſhew this River how ſtrong he was, receiv'd it and ſupported it upon his Head, ſo as not to ſuffer one Drop of it to run off. Bagireta, who did not find his Account in this Revenge, beſought Eſwara to ſuffer the River to run on the Mountain Chammavontam, which was accordingly granted. As the Ganges was now following Bagireta, they met with a holy Man in their Way, who was offering a Jagam, upon which the River dragg'd all the Things which were prepar'd for it with its Waves, which made him ſo angry, that he commanded it to come into his Hand, and immediately ſwallow'd it all up. Bagireta ſeeing his Hopes fruſtrated by this Accident, beſought the Saint to reſtore him the River. This was difficult to effect, without at the ſame Time depriving the Water of its ſanctifying Quality, ſince it would be unclean whether he threw it upwards or downwards; whereupon it was agreed, that it ſhould iſſue out of his Thigh. From thence it follow'd Bagireta to Bengal, where it divided itſelf into ſeveral Branches: the Aſhes of the ſixty thouſand were water'd therewith, their Bodies roſe again, and after having return'd Thanks to their Deliverer for the Service he had done them, they aſcended to the Heaven of Devendre. Theſe Particulars which we meet with in the Vedam, furniſh niſh us with the Explication of three other Names that the Indians give to the Ganges; for firſt they call it the Celeſtial River, becauſe they ſuppoſed it really deſcended from Heaven: This poſſibly might have been borrow'd from the Account Moſes gives of the four Rivers that iſſued out of Eden, or the terreſtrial Paradiſe; which having been known to the antient Heathens, and explain'd according to the falſe Notions they had of it, 'tis not impoſſible but they may have confounded this Paradiſe with Heaven, and that the Name of Heavenly River, tho' fabulous in the Senſe they give it, may yet be founded on Truth. Secondly, they call it Jennadi, or the River of the Thigh. Its third Name is Bagireti; but 'tis commonly called Gange, which the Indians pronounce Ganga, a Name of ſome Antiquity, ſince it was uſed by the Greeks and Romans, except that they chang'd the Termination a little, in order to accommodate it to the Genius of their reſpective Languages.

CHAP. XVI.

The Pilgrimages of the Bramins.

ACCORDING to the Bramins, the Condition of a Man who dies in Sin is not altogether deſperate; and theſe imagine, they have certain Reſources, by which they procure the Remiſſion of ſuch a Perſon's Sins, as effectually as if he himſelf perform'd what they do for him. The Ganges is to theſe Peogle an inexhauſtible Fund of Holineſs. Whenever they meet with any human Bones, they gather them up in a very devout Manner, and throw them into this River, and fancy that for every Year they continue therein, the Soul of the Creature to whom they belong'd, enjoys a thouſand Years of Felicity in the Heaven of Devendre. Its Waters however have not the Virtue of cleanſing Sinners ſo thoroughly, as to procure their immediate Admiſſion into Heaven; it only ſecures them from being excluded it as they deſerv'd, ſince after they have reſided a certain limited Time in the Heaven which that River obtains them, they are doom'd to return again upon the Earth, to be born again, and begin another Life. However, they have this Advantage when they return again upon the Earth, which is, that they are not in a worſe Condition than in the preceding Life, but on the contrary are happier; and this laſt Stage or Life is ſo meritorious, that the Moment the Soul leaves the Body, it inſtantly takes its Flight to the Regions of perfect Bliſs and Felicity.

THE Pilgrimage to Gaya, a City ſituated to the South, and thirty Leagues from Caſi, enjoys a particular Privilege, and Salvation is there eaſily obtain'd for the Dead. Here a Rock is ſhewn, in which, they ſay, God left the Print of his Foot; and for the Security of ſo precious a Relique, this City is fortify'd on all Sides. Here follows the Order which is obſerv'd in this Pilgrimage.

THE Pilgrims go firſt to Preyaga, where they are allow'd to ſpend a Month. Every Morning before Sun-Riſe, they waſh themſelves in the Ganges, to cleanſe themſelves from their Sins; the Month being expir'd, they go to Caſi, where they again bathe themſelves in the River; from hence they go to Gaya, where they make a particular kind of Dough. They break off ſome little Pieces of it, and every Time they put one of them upon the Rock, they repeat the Name of one of their deceas'd Friends; and in this Manner repeat the Names of their deceas'd Friends and Relations to the ſeventh Generation, and even higher. The Vedam promiſes, that all whoſe Names are repeated in this Manner, feel the immediate Efficacy of it, and that though they were in the Hell of Jamma, they yet would be immediately wafted into the Manſions of Devendre.

THE Bramins are not the only People who pay a ſuperſtitious Honour to ſuch kinds of Prints or Marks. [a] The Scythians uſed to ſhew a Stone, two Cubits in Length, on which they affirm'd Hercules had imprinted the Mark of his Foot. There are certain Heathens who go in Pilgrimage at this Day to the Pike of Adam, a high Mountain in the Iſland of [b] Ceylan, where, "on a Stone-Table, is the Print of a human Foot of a "gigantic Size, two Spans in Length, and eight Inches over, and Travellers aſſure, it "could not poſſibly have been better ſtamp'd on Wax. All the Heathens in general "look upon it as a very holy Place, and go in Pilgrimage from all Parts to this Table, "either to gain a Sight of it, to worſhip it, or for the fulfilling of ſome Vow." I myſelf have ſeen in ſome Parts of France, particularly at Feſcamp, ſuch like Prints or Marks, which Tradition aſſures were made by the Foot of an Angel. But the Bramins exceed all other Nations in the Account they give of the Cauſes of theſe pretended Miracles.

THEY tell us, that in antient Times a Ratjasja, Gayaſora by Name, made a Vow to Eſwara, and having accompliſh'd it, the God appear'd to him, and ask'd him what he deſired. 'Tis with the deepeſt Affliction, ſays the Ratjasja, that I behold the Torments which Souls are oblig'd to ſuffer for the Expiation of their Sins. Grant Salvation to all thoſe who ſhall be ſubject to me. His Requeſt being granted, he immediately ſet out to travel, and made ſuch an aſtoniſhing Progreſs in all Places wherever he came, that there was not ſo much as one Sinner in the World left, ſo that he was univerſally honour'd.

VISTNOU was ſtung with Jealouſy upon this Account, and therefore ſought to kill Gayaſora, and actually put him to Death at Gaya. When the Ratjasja ſaw 'twas impoſſible for him to eſcape Death, he beſought Viſtnou to obſerve at leaſt the Promiſe which Eſwara had made him. Viſtnou granted his Requeſt, and gave his Word that all thoſe whoſe Names ſhould be repeated, at the ſticking on of thoſe Pieces of Dough, ſhould certainly be ſav'd: This being done, Viſtnou ſet one Foot upon his Head, when Gayaſora was immediately chang'd into a Rock; and this, according to the Bramins, is the very ſame with that which is now at Gaya.

CHAP. XVII.

Of the Proverbs of Barthrouherri, and the Concluſion of the Work.

THE blind and implicit Belief which this Nation gives to the moſt romantic Traditions, plainly ſhews, that they make but very little Uſe of their Reaſon. Their Studies are confin'd to the Vedam, the Jaſtra, and the Proverbs of Barthrouherri. I have already taken notice of the two firſt Books, and will now ſpeak of the third. The Reader has already ſeen, that Sandragoupeti Naraja was grievouſly afflicted when Barthrouherri his Son, whom his Wife, that was of the meaneſt Caſte, had brought to him, had married three hundred Wives. Barthrouherri, who was now become famous for his Wiſdom, pitied Mankind, in that as Knowledge was compriſed in a great Number of Volumes, it was a very great Task to read them all. To remedy this, he extracted the Subſtance of them, and work'd them up into three hundred Proverbs, which he divided into three Books. Every Book contains ten Chapters, and in each of theſe there are ten Proverbs or ſententious Sayings. The firſt Book is entitled, Of the Way which leads to Heaven; the ſecond, Of the Conduct of a rational Creature; and the third treats of Love.

PADMANABA the Bramin, of whom Mr. Rogers receiv'd all his Informations concerning the Bramins, had communicated the two firſt to him, but he [a] ſcrupled to tranſlate the third into Flemiſh.

BARTHROUHERRI was naturally of an amorous Caſte, ſo that the Dread his Father was under that he would get a great Number of Children, was very juſtly grounded. Their Father having ſent for his four Sons, declar'd to the three firſt, that he was very well ſatisfied with their Conduct, but that he could not look upon Barthrouherri, who was the fourth, without Grief and Uneaſineſs. The laſt gueſſing the Occaſion of it, went out of the Room, got his Hair cut off, put on the Habit of a Sanjaſi, and return'd into the Room. His Father, overjoy'd at this Change, bleſſed him, and promiſed he ſhould live to the End of the World; nor was this Promiſe an idle one, for Barthrouherri is actually upon the Earth at this Time, but inviſible, after the Manner of Spirits. After the Death of his Father he began his Travels; and his three hundred Wives deſiring to follow him, he bid them ſtay where they were, and told them they need not give themſelves the Trouble of accompanying him in his Travels. Hearing this, they ask'd him what would become of them in their deplorable widow'd State; upon which he gave them leave to marry other Men, and aſſur'd them they might do it without incurring any Guilt. They obey'd his Commands, and 'tis from them that ſprung the Family of the three hundred, or of the Cauvreas, a numerous Family among the Soudras. Theſe Women are allow'd to live in Widowhood with Impunity, and may marry again without injuring their Reputations, or being guilty of Sin. All other Families are admitted into that of the Cauvreas, and 'tis compar'd to the Sea, into which all Rivers in general empty themſelves.

[a] Theſe are found in the Book, whoſe Title is inſerted at length in one of the Notes in my Preface.

THUS have I given the Reader the moſt eſſential Particulars I obſerv'd in Mr. Roger's Relation, but have omitted a great Number of Refutations, as judging them to be needleſs. 'Tis enough, when we are deſirous of confuting any wild or extravagant Poſitions, barely to quote them. I choſe to make uſe of this Author rather than any other, becauſe as he was by Profeſſion a Divine, it was more natural for him to enquire into the Religion of the Bramins, than either Phyſicians or Merchants. His great Familiarity with Padmanaba the Bramin, ſtamps a certain Credit on what he ſays, which neither [a] Father Kircher, nor many others who have written after him, can boaſt, ſince they receiv'd it from the ſecond or third Hand. Proper Names are not always ſpelt as in other Relations; for ſince every Writer made uſe of ſuch Letters as he imagin'd would beſt expreſs the Sound of thoſe Words, they muſt conſequently have employ'd the Orthography which was moſt natural to their Mother Tongue. 'Tis for this Reaſon that in a Confeſſion of Faith of the Bramins, which we are told one of them gave to Arnaud Heuſſen the Dutch Governor, we find Iſura inſtead of Eſwara; Bromha for Brahma; Wiſnauwa for Viſtnou, and ſo on. I choſe rather to follow Mr. Roger's Orthography, becauſe he was a Man of Letters, and therefore thought I might better depend upon it, than that which had been uſed by mere Traders; however, I muſt inform the Reader, that I retrench'd certain mute or ſuperfluous Letters.

ALL I have now to add, is, that what I have related with regard to the Original of the Brachmans, whom I take to be ſprung from an Egyptian Colony, is ſufficiently prov'd by the Conformity of their ſuperſtitious Practices with thoſe of that antient Nation; this will appear ſtill more evident, if we compare what Herodotus has written on that Subject with the foregoing Diſſertation. But it would have been impoſſible for me to have drawn this Parallel, without exceeding the Bounds and the Plan which I had laid down.

AN HISTORICAL

DISSERTATION

EAST-INDIANS.

A new born girl substituted to KRISTNA Miraculously suspended in the AIR and speaking to the KING KAMPSA who would catch her on the point of his Sword.

AN HISTORICAL DISSERTATION ON THE GODS OF THE EAST-INDIANS.

CHAP. I.

THE Indian Idolaters, whom we call Gentiles, unanimouſly agree that there is one God; but there is not one among them, who does not form ſuch Ideas to himſelf, as are altogether unworthy the Holineſs and Majeſty of the Supreme Being.

THESE miſtaken People have certain Books, in which all they are to believe is contain'd, which are of as great Authority among them as the holy Scriptures with us. In ſome Parts of theſe Books, God is declared to be a ſpiritual, an immenſe, and eternal Subſtance; in others we are told, that there is no other God than the Air we breathe; in others again, that the Sun is God, and that he only creates, preſerves, and deſtroys all Things. This laſt Opinion is one of the moſt general, inſomuch that the greateſt Part of the Idolaters worſhip this Planet, proſtrating themſelves ſeveral Times on the Ground at his Riſing and Setting. This unhappy People being thus blinded by the Sun's dazzling Light, confine themſelves to the Creature, and pay him that Homage which is due to the Creator only.

GREAT Numbers among the Gentiles are of Opinion, that [a] boil'd Rice only merits to be worſhipped as God; theſe before they begin to eat it, always pay it the moſt profound Veneration.

THESE Worſhippers of the Rice they feed upon, do yet agree in, and acknowledge the Being of another God call'd Parama-Bruma, that is, very ſublime and moſt excellent Knowledge; and affirm that the Letter O is this Divinity; or rather, repreſent it by this Symbol or Hieroglyphic, and believe that thoſe who are propitious enough to repeat it with their dying Breath, are infallibly ſure of going directly to Heaven, and of their enjoying a Fulneſs of Glory.

THESE bleſſed Souls, ſay they, iſſuing out of their Bodies through the Crown of the Head, fly with the Swiftneſs of an Arrow through the Sun, when they go and enjoy an Eternity of Bliſs. The Indian Sect that follows this Opinion is very numerous, and a very conſiderable one; and they alſo believe that there are three hundred and thirty thouſand Millions of Gods, beſides Parama-Bruma, and that thoſe are all ſubordinate to Devandiren, another God, of whom we ſhall ſpeak at large in the Sequel, after having explained the wild and extravagant Notions thoſe Infidels have of the Trinity; Notions which are altogether unworthy not only of God, but even of Men, who had the leaſt Senſe, Modeſty, or Reaſon left.

CHAP. II.

The Notion the Heathens have of the TRINITY, expreſs'd under the Names of BRUMA, VIXNU, and of RUTREM.

MOST of the Doctors among the Heathens, ſay, that there was in the Beginning a Woman call'd Paraxacti, ſignifying very excellent and very ſublime Power. This Woman had three Sons, the firſt whereof, who was born with five Heads, was call'd by his Mother, Bruma, that is Knowledge, and ſhe gave him the Power of creating alone all Things viſible and inviſible. Vixnu was the Name of the ſecond, whoſe Mother inveſted him with the Power of preſerving all Things his Brother had created. Paraxacti call'd her third Son Rutrem, and gave him the Power of deſtroying and annihilating every Thing his Brothers had created and preſerv'd: Rutrem like his Brother Bruma had five Heads; and theſe three Brethren married their Mother who had brought them forth.

THE Gentiles, who never agree in Point of Doctrine, are divided, with regard to this Article, into ſix principal Sects, who all differ very widely from one another. Some of theſe maintain, that Paraxacti is alone the firſt Cauſe of all Things, and conſequently ought to be worſhip'd as the only true God; others aſſert, 'tis Bruma; and again, others,

[a] Boil'd Rice is the common Food of the Indians; and as it preſerves Health and Life, they are therefore prompted to think, it is either God, or has ſomething Divine in it.

who compoſe the greateſt Number, maintain, that Vixnu ought to be look'd upon as the firſt Principle. Some aſcribe this ſupreme Quality to Rutrem. There are others again, who in order to reconcile theſe different Opinions, will not allow that any of the three Brothers ſeparately is God, but that this ſublime Name belongs in an inviſible Manner to all the three, and that they ought to be jointly acknowledg'd, and worſhip'd as ſuch: In fine, there are ſome who deny that theſe three Brethren are the ſupreme God, either jointly, or ſeparately, but teach that there is another God, infinitely ſuperior to them all, and that his Eſſence is incomprehenſible.

THIS laſt Notion would undoubtedly be the moſt rational, was it not ſullied by a numberleſs Multitude of fabulous, ridiculous, and contradictory Articles. Inſomuch that the various Opinions of theſe miſtaken People, verify literally what the Holy Ghoſt has ſpoken by the Mouth of the [a] Wiſe Man, viz. That the Fool changes like the Moon.

WE ſhall now ſee what thoſe Books, which contain the Law and the Doctrine of theſe Heathens, relate particularly of the Lives and infamous Actions of their deteſtable Deities.

CHAP. III.

The Adventures of BRUMA.

THIS related in the HISTORY of the GODS of the Heathen Eaſterns, that Bruma, who is the eldeſt Son and Husband of Praxacti, ſprang originally from the Navel of his Brother Vixnu, which certainly is incomprehenſible; and that Bramens, or Bragmens, iſſued from the Face of this God Bruma.

THE Heathen Indian Prieſts compoſe the moſt noble, and at the ſame Time the moſt abominable Tribe or Caſte among the Indians, ſince there is none ſo fill'd with Self-Love, or ſo much reſpected by the People as this, tho' there is not any one whoſe Manners are more diſſolute, or more corrupted. Theſe Bramins have not only the Arrogance to aſcribe to themſelves the above-mention'd Oiginal, but even preſume to aſſert expreſly, that they are really and actually the very Subſtance of the God Bruma.

THE Rajas, or Gentlemen, that compoſe the moſt noble Tribe after that of the Bramins, ſprang from the Shoulders of the above-mentioned God.

THE Comatis, who are as our wealthy Citizens, and of a Rank between the Nobility and the Traders, iſſued from his Thighs; and laſtly, the Xutres, whoſe Tribe is ſubdivided into a numberleſs Multitude of others, and which includes all the inferior ſorts of People, ſprang originally from his Feet.

THE Xutres are chiefly employ'd in Traffic, by which Means ſeveral require great Wealth; for this Reaſon a great Number of poor Bramins, notwithſtanding the mean Extraction of the Xutres, apply to them, and do them certain Services notwithſtanding their being of a much ſuperior Caſte.

[a] Stultus ut luna mutatur: Eccleſiaſticus.

THE God Bruma, according to the Heathen Divines, never fails at the Inſtant of each Man's Birth, of what Tribe or Nation ſoever he be, to write on his Head in indelible Characters, every Thing he is to do, as well as whatever is to befall him during his Life; and that 'tis not in the Power of either Man, or Bruma, or any other God, to prevent what was written from coming to paſs.

We are told in the above-mention'd Hiſtory of the Gods, that Bruma, deſirous of taking his own Daughter to Wife, and foreſeeing that ſhe would not only ſcruple to conſent to it, but alſo that their Nuptials would be diſapprov'd by the reſt of the Gods, aſſum'd the Shape of a Stag, upon which he purſued his Daughter, who fled from him, till ſhe got into a very dark and gloomy Foreſt, when overtaking her, he there conſummated their inceſtuous Marriage. However, notwithſtanding Bruma conceal'd himſelf as much as poſſible, yet Vixnu, Rutrem, and the thirty thouſand Millions of Gods, heard what he had done, and all reſented it ſo much, that they unanimouſly agreed to puniſh him for his Incontinency by cutting off one of his Heads. Rutrem was ordered to put this Sentence in Execution, when immediately he ſearch'd for his Brother Bruma in all Places, and at laſt meeting with him, he, without employing either a Sword or Hanger, took off one of his Heads at one Stroke of his Nails, which were very long and ſharp; and ſince this Time Bruma has but four. To commemorate this Action, no more Temples have been dedicated, nor any more Statues been erected to his Honour under an human Shape.

THE Bramins, who are the moſt artful and moſt inſolent Set of People among the Heathens, aſſert, that as they themſelves are ſubſtantially the God Bruma, the People ought therefore to venerate and pay their Vows to them only; and that there is not a more ſure Means of attaining an Eternity of Bliſs after Death, than to beſtow liberally upon them the good Things of this World. In ſhort, whatever the Bramins give out on religious Matters, the Eaſterns receive as ſo many Articles of Faith.

BRUMA, not being ſatisfied with having married his own Daughter, took another Woman call'd Saraſſuadi to Wife, who was prodigiouſly learned. Her Name is had in ſo great Veneration among the Heathens, that in Teſtimony of their Reſpect, and the Confidence they repoſe in her Virtue, they repeat it a numberleſs Multitude of Times every Day.

SINCE the Time that Statues have been no longer erected to Bruma, as was the Cuſtom before he had loſt one of his Heads, the Bramins worſhip him under the Idea that the Greeks and Romans had antiently of the God Priapus, and look upon that as a Deity, which the Heathens of all Nations have ſhadow'd under this Name. The Idols, or Repreſentations of Priapus, which were erected in honour of Bruma, are, in the Indies called Lingam.

CHAP. IV.

The Adventures of VIXNU.

THE Books of the Indians, which contain the Hiſtory of their Gods, relate that Vixnu is the ſecond Son of Paraxacti, and alſo her Husband. This Vixnu is in ſome Places call'd the firſt Cauſe, and the Principle of all Things created. 'Tis ſaid that he married a Wife, Laximi by Name, who is at one and the ſame Time, a Cow, a Horſe, a Mountain, Gold, Silver, and whatever can be wiſh'd or imagin'd. Moſt of the Indians wear the Name of this Woman ty'd about their Necks, or Arms, as a Charm capable of procuring them Happineſs, and preſerving them from all ſiniſter Accidents.

WE alſo find in the ſame Books, that Vixnu, whoſe Sect is very numerous, had made himſelf Fleſh, or metamorphos'd himſelf, nine Times. He firſt aſſum'd the Shape of a Fiſh, but the Occaſion of this Metamorphoſis is not known.

IN the ſecond he aſſum'd the Form of a Tortoiſe, and that for a very whimſical Reaſon, which is as follows: The Indians relate, that there are ſeven Seas in the World which we inhabit; one of theſe is of Milk, whereof a moſt delicious Butter is made, and of this the Gods are very dainty. Now it happen'd, that as they were one Day going to take of this Butter, as was the uſual Cuſtom, they brought, but not without the utmoſt Labour and Difficulty, on the Shore of that Sea of Milk, a high Mountain of Gold, call'd Magameru Parruvadam; which, the Heathens tell us, ſupports the fourteen Worlds whereof this Univerſe is compoſed. The Top of this Mountain ſerv'd them for a Beam, over which they brought an Adder of a prodigious Size, having an hundred Heads, on which the fourteen Worlds are always ſupported. The Gods made uſe of this Adder as of a Rope, in order to get the Butter more eaſily; but while they were labouring on one Side, the Giants, who have ever been Enemies to the Gods, drew the Adder on the other Side with ſo much Violence, as at once ſhook the World, and made it ſink lower down, ſo that it was juſt going to be turn'd topſy-turvy, when Vixnu perceiving it, he immediately aſſum'd the Shape of a Tortoiſe, and plac'd himſelf under the World in order to ſupport it. On the other Side, the hundred-headed Adder, unable any longer to endure the Pain which the Gods and Giants put it to, by their drawing it ſeveral Ways, vomited ſuddenly on the latter a Liquor of ſo malignant a Quality, that it kill'd the greateſt Part of them on the Spot.

HOWEVER Vixnu did not ſtop here; for being afraid leſt the ſurviving Giants ſhould eat Part of this excellent Butter, which had been got with ſo much Labour and Danger, to prevent them, he aſſum'd the Shape of a very beautiful Woman, and theſe Giants immediately fell diſtractedly in love with her. By this Artifice he amus'd them, till ſuch Time as the Gods had either eat or carried off all the Butter; which being done, he vaniſh'd away in an Inſtant, leaving the Giants in the utmoſt Aſtoniſhment at their having loſt the Sight of the Woman whoſe Beauty had dazzled them, and of the divine Butter for which they had taken ſo much Pains.

IN the third Incarnation, Vixnu chang'd himſelf into a Hog, which was as follows.

THERE one Day aroſe a Conteſt between the Gods Bruma, Vixnu, and Rutrem, about who was the greateſt of the three. Upon this, Rutrem propoſed to Bruma and Vixnu, his Brethren, to go and hide himſelf, and promiſed to ſubmit himſelf to him who ſhould find out his Head and his Feet, and that the other two ſhould acknowledge him as Chief; to which Bruma and Vixnu giving their Conſent, Rutrem immediately vaniſh'd, and hid his Head and Feet in Places that were at a great Diſtance one from the other.

BRUMA immediately ſet out in ſearch of the Head, and the better to ſucceed in it, transform'd himſelf into a Swan, flew about on every Side, and uſed his utmoſt endeavours to get Information of what he was looking for; but finding that all his Care and Pains were to no Purpoſe, he began to deſpair of Succeſs. He was juſt going to give over his Search, when he met with the Thiſtle-Flower, which came and ſaluted him in a very courteous Manner, and ſhew'd him the Place where Rutrem had hid his Head. Bruma overjoy'd with this Information, ran immediately to the Place which the Flower had pointed out to him, and there found his Brother's Head, who was vex'd to the Soul at Bruma's having ſucceeded in what he had thought an Impoſſibility. Being now highly exaſperated againſt the Flower which had thus diſcover'd him, he pronounc'd a Curſe againſt it, and forbid it ever to appear in his Preſence; and for this Reaſon, the whole Tribe of thoſe call'd Andis, who are the Followers of Rutrem, never put any of thoſe Flowers in the Temples dedicated to that God. He alſo curſed his Brother, and far from acknowledging him to be his Superior, as had been agreed upon between them, he on the contrary vented the moſt horrid Imprecations againſt him, and wiſh'd he might thenceforward be no longer worſhipp'd, have no more Temples or Statues dedicated to him, or any more Sacrifices offer'd in his Honour; all which is very ſtrictly obſerv'd in thoſe Places where the Sect of the Rutrem prevails.

RUTREM's Head being thus found, all they had to do was to ſeek out the Place where they had hid his Feet, for which Purpoſe Vixnu transform'd himſelf into a Hog. In this Shape he ran up and down every where, digging as low as the very Bowels of the Earth, but in vain; he came out of the Earth as much a Hog, but much dirtier than he had gone into it, and without having found what he ſought. 'Tis nevertheleſs in Commemoration of this noble Metamorphoſis, that Vixnu is worſhipped under the Shape of a Hog by Perſons of the greateſt Diſtinction among the Heathen Indians.

CHAP. V.

Sequel of the Adventures of VIXNU.

THE fourth Time that Vixnu aſſum'd the Fleſh, he chang'd himſelf into a Man and a Lion at one and the ſame Time; the Occaſion of which was as follows: There was a mighty Giant in the World, Iranien by Name. Rutrem, to whom this Giant had religiouſly devoted himſelf for a certain Time, had granted him a very ſingular Privilege, which was, that no one could kill him, either by Night or by Day, in his Houſe or out of it. This extraordinary Grant, far from making a virtuous Impreſſion on the Mind of this Giant, made him on the contrary ſo proud, ſo haughty, and ſo inſolent, that he not only ceaſed to honour his Benefactor, but alſo reſolv'd to prevent any one from that Time forward, from invoking either Rutrem, or any other of the Gods; and threatening to inflict very grievous Torments, on all ſuch as ſhould even preſume to repeat repeat their very Names. But while the World thus trembled and groan'd under the Tyranny of Iranien, no one daring to implore the Aſſiſtance of the Gods, the Son of this impious Giant, Pragaladen by Name, deſpiſed his Father's Threats, and inſtead of repeating his Name in ſuch Prayers as his Tutor had made him ſay before he ſaid his Leſſons, he always repeated the Name of the God Vixnu, to whom he very religiouſly adher'd.

THE Child's Maſter frequently reprimanded him upon that Account; and fearing, in caſe it came to his Father's Knowledge, he ſhould be puniſhed, as one who had conniv'd at his Son's Diſobedience, he himſelf went and accuſed his Scholar, and told Iranien, that he could not poſſibly prevail upon the Child to leave off addreſſing his uſual Prayers to Vixnu, tho' he had employ'd his utmoſt Endeavours. This put the Giant into a great Rage, when ſending for his Son, he reprov'd him in very harſh Terms, and threatened, in caſe he did not change his Conduct, to caſt him among Adders, Bears, Tygers, and Elephants. The Child was not to be wrought upon by theſe Threats, but continued to direct his Prayers to Vixnu, whoſe Protection ſecur'd him from all the Dangers to which his Father's Cruelty expoſed him. However the God being at laſt enrag'd at the Gian'ts invincible Obſtinacy, he reſolved to kill him, and by that Means put an End to all the Difficulties which young Pragaladen labour'd under. However Vixnu could not eaſily compaſs his Deſign, becauſe of the Privilege which Rutrem had granted the Giant, not to mention that one God ſeldom deſtroys the Work of another; but then on the other Side, as the Gods very ſeldom fail in any Thing they once undertake, Vixnu had recourſe to a Stratagem. He ruſh'd out in a Moment from a Pillar of Air, and appear'd ſuddenly before the Giant under the Shape of a Monſter who was half Man and half Lion, and that at the very inſtant after Sun-Set, at which Time 'tis properly neither Day nor Night. He then flung himſelf on a ſudden upon Iranien, who happen'd to ſtand on the Threſhold of the Door of his Houſe, and conſequently was neither in nor out of it. By this Artifice Vixnu, without violating the Giant's Privilege, tore him to Pieces, pluck'd out his Bowels, and drank even to the very laſt Drop of his Blood. But this infamous Liquor had ſuch an ill Effect upon Vixnu's Brain, that he has been a little out of his Senſes ever ſince.

VIXNU, the fifth Time he aſſum'd the Fleſh, chang'd himſelf into a Dwarf, upon the following Occaſion.

DURING a certain Period, there was but one King upon the Earth, Magapelixacravarti by Name, who was a Giant of an enormous Size, and the moſt blood-thirſty Wretch that had ever liv'd upon the Earth. Mankind, after having long groan'd under his Tyranny, addreſs'd themſelves to the Gods in order to be freed from it. Vixnu had Compaſſion on their Miſery, and therefore reſolv'd to deſtroy this deteſtable Monarch; and the better to ſucceed in it, aſſum'd the Shape of a Bramin Dwarf, one of the moſt Diminitive of that kind, and went by the Name of Chamavamanen. Thus diſguiſed, Vixnu went to the City where Magapelixacravarti uſually kept his Court, when he enter'd his Palace, preſented himſelf before him, and beſought him to grant him three Foot of Ground, to build a Houſe for himſelf to live in. The King look'd upon this as ſo trifling a Requeſt, that he was going to grant it immediately, when the Morning-Star, who attended upon him in the Quality of his Counſellor of State, fearing there was ſome Treaſon conceal'd under it, reſolv'd to hinder the Grant paſſing. The Morning-Star knew it was neceſſary at that Time, in order to a Favour's being granted in a ſolemn Manner ſo as not to be repeal'd, that the King ſhould take ſome Water in his Mouth, and pour Part of it into the Hand of the Perſon who receiv'd the Grant. The Star, to prevent this eſſential Ceremony, without which the Grant would be invalid, employ'd Magic, in which it was greatly skill'd, and metamorphoſing itſelf in an Inſtant, ſlipp'd unperceiv'd perceiv'd down the Prince's Throat, in order to keep the Water which he had in his Mouth from coming up again. However the Magic the Star made uſe of had not all its deſir'd Effect; for the King finding his Throat ſtopp'd without knowing the Cauſe of it, and being unable to breathe but with extreme Difficulty, he order'd an Iron Stilleto to be brought him, which being come, he thruſt it a pretty way down his Throat; but unhappily, he, with this Weapon, thruſt out one of the faithful Star's Eyes, who undoubtedly had deſerved a better Fate, and at the ſame Time open'd a Paſſage for the Water to go through, which he accordingly pour'd on the Hand of the God, who was changed into a Dwarf, and by this ſolemn Oath ratified the Gift he had made him of the requeſted Land. Vixnu deſirous of taking poſſeſſion of it, chang'd his Shape, and aſſum'd one very different from what he had before appear'd under, when he firſt ſpoke to this wicked Prince. He ſwell'd to ſuch a prodigious Size, that all the Air and the whole Earth ſcarce afforded him room to ſet one of his Feet, when addreſſing himſelf to the King, he ſaid to him as follows: Thou haſt given me three Foot of Earth, ſcarce is there Room enough in all the viſible World for the placing of one of my Feet, where therefore muſt I ſet the other? The unhappy Magapelixacravarti, who now was ſenſible, tho' too late, that he had been over-reach'd by a Stratagem, fell proſtrate before Vixnu, worſhipped him, and preſented him his Head, in order for the placing of his other Foot. The angry God accepted the Offer, ſet his Foot upon his Head, and with a ſingle Kick drove him to the loweſt Abyſs of Hell. This wretched Monarch, notwithſtanding the unhappy Condition to which he was reduc'd, ſtill addreſs'd himſelf to Vixnu, (who abuſing his Credulity, had ſo cruelly deceiv'd him) and ask'd him how long his Torments ſhould continue. The God anſwer'd they would be eternal, however he ſhould be permitted to come annually out of Hell on a certain Day in November which he named; when he might go upon the Earth in order to aſſiſt at a Ceremony, which ſhould be eſtabliſh'd and celebrated in commemoration of this ſad Adventure, and is ſtill obſerv'd very regularly every Year by Vixnu's Followers.

CHAP. VI.

Sequel of the Hiſtory of VIXNU.

VIXNU chang'd himſelf into a Man, and went by the Name of Rameni, or Ram, in his ſixth, ſeventh, and eighth Incarnation.

THE firſt of theſe three Metamorphoſes, happen'd upon occaſion of a certain Tribe or kind of Men call'd Rajas, or petty Kings, who were become ſo haughty and inſupportable, that it was impoſſible for any Mortal to be longer ſafe upon the Earth.

THESE petty Tyrants behav'd with the utmoſt Inhumanity towards every one, threw all Things into Diſorder and Confuſion, and even prevented the Religious from fulfilling the Penances they had enjoyn'd themſelves in honour of the Gods. Vixnu bore the Inſolence of theſe Rajas for a long Time, but at laſt his Patience being worn out, he aſſum'd the Fleſh, made himſelf a Ram, or Ramen, and in that Quality declared War againſt them, which continued for twenty-one Generations. Several Battles were fought between the Rajas and Ram, who always came off victorious; he often waſh'd himſelf in the Blood of theſe impious Wretches. and at laſt utterly deſtroy'd them, ſo that not ſo much as one of them ſurviv'd.

VIXNU

VIXNU aſſum'd the human Shape a ſecond Time, and went by the ſame Name of Ram, purpoſely to extirpate a dreadful Giant, whoſe Name was Cartaſuciriargunen. This Monſter had a thouſand Arms, and was become ſo formidable, that no one dar'd to reſiſt him. Ram preſented himſelf before him, and fought him with no other Weapon than a Plough-Share, knock'd him down, and cut off his thouſand Arms. He did not obtain this Victory without vaſt Difficulty, and to perpetuate the Remembrance thereof to Poſterity, he raiſed a kind of Trophy with the Bones of the Giant, which he had broke, and heap'd up one upon another, and theſe are ſince ſwell'd to a very high Mountain.

THE laſt of the three Times that Vixnu made himſelf Ram, was on the following Occaſion.

THERE was upon the Earth three mighty Giants who were Brothers, the firſt was call'd Ravanen, the ſecond Cambucarnem, and the third Vibuxanen. Theſe three Brethren had for many Years waged War with the Gods with very great Armies, compoſed of other Giants, but ſomething inferior to them in Stature. They had even frequently rallied Vixnu in ſecret ſince his becoming Ram, and had carried their Inſolence to ſuch a Pitch, as to carry off his Wife, named Sidi. Ram was greatly offended at their injurious Proceedings, but notwithſtanding his ſtrict Search, he yet was not able to find where they had conceal'd her. A Thirſt of Revenge made him redouble his Efforts againſt the Giants, but finding he had fought them for a long Time with very little Succeſs, he addreſs'd himſelf to the Apes, and deſir'd their Aſſiſtance.

THESE Animals, overjoy'd to meet with ſo glorious an Opportunity of doing Service to Vixnu, aſſembled in a Body, made a numerous Army, and went and join'd him with this Reinforcement. Ram gave the Giants Battle, defeated them, and delivered his Wife from the Captivity under which ſhe had groan'd for twelve Years. We ſhall afterwards relate the Particulars of that War, in which Ram and his Allies performed the moſt ſurpriſing Exploits.

RAM at firſt made no Difficulty of taking his Wife Sidi back again, and living with her as before; however, not long after he left her, and went and travelled up and down the World like a Pilgrim. The Reaſon of this abandoning her, was, that happening one Day to paſs by a Pond, he overheard ſome Waſher-women rallying him, for having taken his Wife ſo eaſily back again, after ſhe had liv'd twelve Years among the Giants.

IN fine, Vixnu aſſum'd the Fleſh for the ninth Time; he again appear'd under an human Shape, and was call'd Chrixnen, ſignifying Black Man. The Reaſon of this Metamorphoſis will be ſeen in the following Chapter.

CHAP. VII.

The laſt Incarnation of the God Vixnu.

ONCE upon a Time the whole World was govern'd by a ſingle Monarch, Campſen by Name, who was a very vicious Prince, an Enemy and Perſecutor of all good People, and of Penitents in particular. He had a Siſter whoſe Name was Exudi, and the Soothſayers having told him he ſhould be kill'd by the eighth Child which ſhe ſhould be deliver'd of, he conceiv'd ſo great a Hatred againſt Exudi and her Children, that he cauſed them to be murder'd the Moment they were born. This barbarous Treatment threw the Princeſs into the deepeſt Affliction, who nevertheleſs was again big of her eighth Child. She did not know that the God Vixnu was within her, who had then aſſum'd the Fleſh a ninth Time; or that the Child ſhe then went with, was he, who, according to the Prophecies, was to put his Uncle to Death, becauſe the King had conceal'd from every one what the Soothſayers had told him. She only remember'd, and with the deepeſt Pangs, that her ſeven firſt Children had been all inhumanly butcher'd in her Preſence; and not doubting but the Child ſhe was then going to be deliver'd of would meet with the ſame Fate, ſhe wiſh'd to ſecure him from the Fury of her Brother Campſen. For this Purpoſe, the Moment it was born, ſhe gave it to her Husband, whom ſhe adviſed to fly away, together with the Child, and hide it in ſome deſart Place at a great Diſtance from the Court. But the King, who had a great many Spies in the Country, had exact Information ſent him of the Time when his Siſter was to be deliver'd, ſo that he had diſpoſed every Thing in order to deſtroy this Infant as he had the other ſeven, whoſe Birth muſt neceſſarily have given him leſs Uneaſineſs and Dread. He had poſted Guards every where to prevent the young Prince from eſcaping his Clutches, and expected every Moment to have him deliver'd into his Hands; however his Expectations were baulk'd, for the Child's Father had been ſo happy as to elude the Vigilance of the Spies, and had convey'd him to a diſtant Foreſt, where he had entruſted him with certain Shepherds, whom he enjoin'd to educate him with the utmoſt Care and Secrecy, and above all, to conceal him from the King.

THESE honeſt plain People perform'd their Duty to a Tittle, but notwithſtanding all their Endeavours to keep it ſecret from the King, he nevertheleſs got Information where his Nephew was, and accordingly went thither in Perſon to kill him with his own Hand. He had already laid hold of him, and was going to daſh out his Brains againſt a Rock, in order to ſecure his own Life by the Child's Death, when Chrixnen vaniſh'd on a ſudden, and left him in great Surprize to find he graſp'd only a little Girl whom his Nephew had ſubſtituted in his Place. But not even this ſecond Child was to fall a Sacrifice, to the Fury with which the Prince was inſpir'd, when he found himſelf diſappointed; for ſhe gave him ſo furious a Blow, as knock'd him backward; after which, not ſatisfied with having treated him thus roughly, ſhe ſaid to him, Ceaſe, Wretch that thou art, to wiſh for, or endeavour to kill a Perſon, whom thou ſhalt never be able to hurt; and know, that at the very Inſtant I am ſpeaking to thee, he whom thou ſo cruelly perſecuteſt, is in a Place of Safety, and has no Occaſion to be in any Dread upon thy Account.

'TWOULD be almoſt impoſſible to expreſs the Rage with which Campſen was fir'd, when after having heard the Child utter theſe Words, ſhe alſo vaniſh'd in an Inſtant; and that he found his Nephew had not only eſcap'd him, but alſo laugh'd at all his Fury.

Fury. He did his utmoſt to find the Place where he was, commanded all his Subjects to make a ſtrict Search for him, and to bring him dead or alive; he laid the ſame Injunction on all the Giants who inhabited the different Parts of his Dominions; however all theſe Precautions were of no Effect, and not one of them were able to execute the King's Orders. At laſt this Prince addreſs'd the Devils, and implor'd their Aſſiſtance, which, he flatter'd himſelf, would give him an Opportunity of deſtroying his Nephew. However Chrixnen eſcap'd the Snares which thoſe infernal Spirits laid for him, with the ſame Eaſe and good Fortune as he had avoided thoſe of the Giants; and as theſe various Cruelties of his Uncle were a Proof of his violent Hatred, and that he was ſtrongly bent on his Deſtruction, he on the other Side endeavour'd as much as poſſible to prevent his falling a Victim to the Fury of that wicked Prince. Chrixnen, though but a very young Child, had yet the Senſe and Penetration to diſcover that the Woman whom they had given him to ſuck was a Witch, and that the Devils, by the King's Inſtigation, had artfully ſubſtituted her in the Place of his real Nurſe. The Deſign of theſe wicked Spirits was, that ſhe ſhould give the Babe Poiſon inſtead of Milk; but Chrixnen diſappointed them, for he ſuck'd her with ſo much Violence, that having firſt drawn out all her Milk, he afterwards ſuck'd out all her Blood, nor left off till ſhe was quite dead, and by that Means deliver'd himſelf from imminent Danger.

CHRIXNEN being now ſomething older, began to play the Shepherds, among whom he had been brought up, a great many roguiſh Pranks. One Day he ſtole a great Quantity of Butter from them, and was going to fly away with his Booty, but did not eſcape the Shepherds as fortunately as he had done the King. Theſe purſued, came up with him, and took from him the Butter he had ſtole; when tying him to a Tree, they whipp'd him, in order by this Chaſtiſement to prevent his committing any ſuch Tricks for the future. Being grown up to Man's Eſtate, he raiſed an Army, went and attack'd his Uncle, engag'd him in ſeveral Battles, and at laſt kill'd him with his own Hand, and by this Means rid himſelf of an irreconcileable and moſt dangerous Enemy. Being afterwards deſirous of unbending himſelf, after the great Pains and Fatigues he had undergone during this War, he married two Wives of his own Tribe, but theſe not ſatisfying him, he took ſixteen thouſand young Shepherdeſſes for his Concubines. He had not forgot how ſeverely he had been whipp'd formerly in their Father's Houſe, and was afraid that ſomething of the ſame Nature would happen to him, in caſe he ſhould have the ill Luck to diſpleaſe thoſe Shepherds. However, to obviate every Thing of this Nature, and that he might not give them any Subject of Complaint, he multiplied himſelf in ſuch a Manner, that he lay with them all at the ſame Time, and made each of them believe, that he had abandon'd all the reſt to give himſelf to her only, and by this Artifice was equally belov'd by them all.

CHRIXNEN, or rather Vixnu under the Shape of Chrixnen, ſtood one Day on the Side of a Pond, in which a great Number of very beautiful and very virtuous Women of Quality were bathing themſelves. Chrixnen on a ſudden took up all their Clothes, and carried them to the Top of a very high Tree, which ſtood not far from the Pond, ſo that the Ladies would have been obliged to come naked out of the Water, and walk to their Houſes in that Manner. Whilſt they were in this Perplexity, and looking about on all Sides, they perceiv'd certain large Leaves growing in the Water, which very much reſembled thoſe of the Water-Lilly; immediately they each gather'd ſome of theſe, cover'd themſelves as well as they could, and all drew near the Tree on which Chrixnen had climb'd. Then all the afflicted Ladies beſought him earneſtly to return them their Clothes; but their Intreaties were ineffectual, till after they had ſaluted him, by each laying her two Hands on her Head; which they no ſooner did, than the Leaves fell from them, when they were ſtark naked, which was juſt what Vixnu wanted, and the only Motive of his carrying off their Clothes.

THE Heathens pretend, that Vixnu will aſſume the Fleſh once more, and come under the Shape of a Horſe, and that till ſuch Time as this Metamorphoſis is to happen, he wallows in the Sea of Milk, where he lies in a delicious Manner on a large beautiful Adder with five Heads, which at the ſame Time ſerves him both for a Throne and a Bed.

CHAP. VIII.

The Hiſtory of Rutrem.

RUTREM, the third Son of Paraxacti, is alſo one of her Husbands, and has the greateſt Share in her Affections. Rutrem having once upon a Time a Deſire of living among Men, he for that Purpoſe turn'd Andi or Friar. He was call'd Artanari, i. e. half Man, and half Woman, and never was there ſeen or heard of, a Man ſo infamous, ſo irregular, and ſo abominable as this Wretch. He married a Daughter of the King of the Mountains, whoſe Name was Parvadi, and liv'd in ſtrict Union with her for a thouſand Years. So unprecedented a Conduct in a God was diſapproved of by Bruma, by Vixnu, and the three hundred and thirty thouſand Millions of Gods, who all thinking Rutrem was out of his Wits, they thereupon went in ſearch of him, and having found him, forc'd him away from Parvadi. This Woman, who was as laſcivious as her Husband, was greatly offended at the Violence which had been uſed in tearing her from the Object of her Affections; and therefore to revenge herſelf of this Inſult, ſhe vented Imprecations againſt all the Gods, curſed them heartily, and wiſh'd that thenceforwards not one of them might have either Children or lawful Wives, but only as many Concubines as they pleaſed; all which came to paſs according to her Wiſhes. Rutrem, after he had been thus forced from his Wife, went away like one diſtracted, wander'd up and down the World, and left in all Places through which he paſs'd certain Indications of his [a] Lewdneſs. Now it happen'd, that as he was going through a certain Place, the Earth in a Moment gave him a Son with ſix Heads; but as there was no Nurſe there to give him ſuck, the ſeven Stars did him that good Office, and gave him the Name of Camaraſſuammi, which is as much as to ſay, the Lord-ſon.

ALL the Idolaters in India have ſo profound a Veneration for him, and ſo extraordinary a Confidence in his Power, that all their Writings and Records begin always with theſe Words, Arrumagamtumei, i. e. O thou with ſix Faces be with us! The Books of the Heathens relate, that Parvadi, who died with Grief for having been torn from her Husband, was born a ſecond Time, after that the Child above-mention'd had been miraculouſly brought forth in the Manner related; that at this ſecond Birth ſhe was Daughter of a King, Daxaprojabadi by Name, and that Rutrem married her a ſecond Time. That after her Marriage, as ſhe was one Day bathing herſelf, while her Husband was Abroad, ſhe had ſo ſtrong a Deſire to have a Child, that at that Inſtant there appear'd one before her in her Head, who ſprang from the Sweat ſhe had got together on her Boſom; that this Child was in an Inſtant as full grown as one of twenty, and that ſhe had named him Vinayaguien, i. e. who has no God; that a little after Rutrem returning back to his Houſe, altogether ignorant of what had happen'd, and caſting his Eye on Vinayaguien, who was very familiar with Parvardi, his Jealouſy threw him into ſuch a Rage, that he reſolv'd to abandon her that Moment. However, that Parvadi no ſooner perceiv'd it, but ſhe appeas'd him by relating to him how every Circumſtance had happen'd, and that ſhe prevail'd ſo far upon him, that the young Man whoſe Preſence had at firſt given him ſo much Uneaſineſs, was afterwards his Joy and Conſolation.

THE Pleaſure which Rutrem felt, when he reflected on the ſurprizing and miraculous Birth of young Vinayaguien, was ſoon interrupted by the Diſcontent which his Father-in-Law occaſion'd him. This Prince reſolv'd to offer up a Sacrifice, and make a ſolemn Feaſt in honour of his Grandſon's Birth-Day; and as a Teſtimony of the Joy it gave him, he invited all the Gods to it, his Son-in-Law excepted. 'Tis not known whether it was Forgetfulneſs, or Rutrem's ill Conduct that made him act in this Manner. Be that as it will, this God was ſo greatly offended at the Affront which the King of the Mountains had put upon him, that he reſolv'd to revenge himſelf in a very bloody Manner; and for this Purpoſe he went in the higheſt Tranſports of Rage to the Place where his Father-in-Law was regaling all the Gods. Scarce was he enter'd into the Hall where they were feaſting, but he broke out into a thouſand opprobrious Expreſſions againſt the Gueſts; when afterwards tearing off an Handful of Hair, he ſtruck it ſo violently againſt the Floor, that immediately a Giant of an enormous Size ſtarted up from thence.

SCARCE had the Monſter appear'd, when raiſing his Voice, he proteſted to revenge his inſulted Father; upon which he immediately put himſelf in a Poſture to attack the Gods, and perform'd the moſt ſurprizing heroic Actions on this Occaſion; but a Circumſtance which chiefly merits our Regard, is, that he gave the Sun ſo furious a Box o'the Ear, as knock'd all his Teeth out; for which Reaſon the Heathens have ever ſince that Time offer'd ſuch Things only in their Sacrifices to that Planet, as were ſoft and eaſy to be eaten, ſuch as Butter, Milk, Pap, and very ripe Fruits.

THIS Giant, not ſatisfied with treating the Sun in this injurious Manner, gave likewiſe the Moon ſeveral Kicks on the Face, and bruiſed it in ſo terrible a Manner, that the Marks are viſible to this Day; and to this, ſay the Indians, thoſe Spots are owing which are obſerv'd in this Planet. He afterwards kill'd King Daxaprojabadi, with ſeveral of the Gueſts, and cut off Vinayaguien's Head, becauſe he had been the Occaſion, though innocently, of the Affront which had been put upon Rutrem, and of all the Diſorders that were the Conſequences of it.

AT length the Uproar and Confuſion ceaſing, Rutrem perceiv'd among the dead Bodies that of young Vinayaguien, whom, during his Life-Time, he had honour'd ſo far as to call him his Son, and had lov'd him as tenderly as if he had been his real Father.

WORDS can never expreſs the Grief with which he was ſeiz'd at the Sight of this mournful Spectacle. It grew to that Height, that he was quite inconſolable for his Loſs, particularly when he found 'twas the very Giant to whom he himſelf had given Birth, when he ſtruck his Hair againſt the Floor, who had cut off his Head. After a Moment's Reflection, he reſolv'd to raiſe him again to Life, coſt what it would. But as there was no Poſſibility of his joining to the Body the individual Head which had been ſeparated from it, as it had been cut into ſeveral Pieces, and ſcatter'd up and down, he therefore immediately cut off an Elephant's Head, and clapp'd it ſo artfully on Vinayaguien's Body, that it was firmly united to it, and by that means reſtor'd Vinayaguien to Life. The Father, tranſported with Joy to ſee his Son thus reſtor'd to Life, embrac'd him, and commanded him to rove up and down the World in ſearch of a Wife ; upon this Condition however, that he ſhould not marry till he had met with a Woman as beautiful as his Mother Parvardi. 'Tis for this Reaſon that the Heathens place in all the Avenues and the public Roads, the Idols of Vinayaguien in the Form which he aſſum'd after his Reſurrection, viz. an Elephant's Head; that as this gives him an Opportunity of viewing all the Women who paſs by him, he may thereby be the ſooner enabled to pitch upon one who reſembles his Mother. However we are aſſur'd, that he has not yet found one whoſe Beauty was comparable to that of Parvardi. Some Time after Vinayaguien had aſſum'd a new Shape, and that Pullejar had been added to his former Name, becauſe of this Metamorphoſis; Rutrem, by the expreſs Command of all the Gods, ſet out in ſearch of his Brother Bruma, who had transform'd himſelf into a Stag, and cohabited with his own Daughter in the Foreſts, in a very ſcandalous Manner. He was a long Time before he could find out the Place of his Reſidence; but meeting him at laſt, he cut off one of his Heads; however the Bramins aſſure us, that he was guilty of a very heinous Sin in ſo doing. To do penance for it, he immediately ſtripp'd himſelf ſtark naked, cover'd his Head with Aſhes, and taking Bruma's Skull in his Hand, withdrew into the Church-Yards, where he ſpent whole Days and Nights in ſuch inceſſant Weeping, as made him almoſt run diſtracted.

CHAP. IX.

Sequel of the Hiſtory of Rutrem.

RUTREM, grown weary of ſo auſtere a Way of Life as that he had pitch'd upon, reſolv'd to quit this mournful Place, and endeavour to divert himſelf. He was inform'd, that in a neighbouring Deſart there were ſeveral Bramins who led very exemplary Lives, and that they all had very beautiful Wives. Being deſirous of inſinuating himſelf into the Affections of theſe Females, he went ſtark naked into the Village which was inhabited by thoſe Penitents, and ask'd for Alms. He afterwards made a Charm, and thereby inſpir'd all thoſe Ladies with ſo violent a Love for him, that no longer valuing their Husbands or their Families, they left their Houſes the Moment they ſaw him, and follow'd him wherever he went. However Rutrem did not long enjoy the Pleaſure which this agreeable Company afforded him, but in the very ſame Place, one of the moſt mortifying Circumſtances befel him that could poſſibly happen to a Perſonage of ſo exalted a Dignity; for all theſe penitent Bramins, exaſperated at this Outrage, met together in a Body, and vented the moſt dreadful Imprecations againſt him. Their Curſes had ſuch an Effect, that to puniſh him for his unprecedented Laſciviouſneſs, he was ſuddenly emaſculated, and has not ſince been able to repair this Defect. This Accident threw him into the deepeſt Affliction; and 'twas to ſooth in ſome meaſure the Pain it gave him, that he promiſed to crown all thoſe with the Joys of Heaven, who, on the Earth, ſhould pay a peculiar Honour to thoſe Parts of his Body which the Bramins had curs'd, and which had had the dreadful Efficacy to deprive him of the Uſe of them.

THE People of India have been prompted to embrace this infamous and ridiculous Worſhip, purely to obtain the Rewards which Rutrem has annex'd to it. Not ſatisfied with offering Sacrifices to this Deity, who is the ſame with the Priapus of the antient Greeks and Romans, they repreſent him in a numberleſs Multitude of Statues, which they place in the Roads, in their Houſes, and Temples. Theſe Idols, for which the Eaſtern Heathens have an extraordinary Veneration, are generally made of Stone, and are call'd Lingam. The greateſt Part of the Indians, eſpecially the Followers of Rutrem of both Sexes, wear them at their Necks, or tied about their Heads or Arms, and honour them in ſuch a Manner as really merits Pity.

AMONG theſe unfortunate Indians there is a Caſte or Tribe call'd Andis, the Members of which are the moſt infamous, the moſt inſolent, the moſt impudent Wretches imaginable, and the moſt addicted to every kind of Debauchery and Obſcenity. Of all the Indians theſe are the moſt difficult, and the moſt ſeldom converted to the Chriſtian Faith. Theſe abominable Andis make a Trade of imitating the Penance of Rutrem, by rambling up and down naked, cover'd with Aſhes, and asking Alms, and though they lead ſuch deteſtable Lives, yet the reſt of the Indians revere them as ſo many Saints. We frequently meet with People of this Tribe, who make a Vow to continue in ſome painful Poſture, ſuch as for Inſtance, the ſtanding upright in ſome Pagod, for one, or perhaps ſeveral Years. But as it is impoſſible to continue awake ſo long, and that when they were aſleep they might poſſibly, though involuntarily, change their Poſture, and by that means tranſgreſs their Vow, they firſt tie their Hands to Stakes, which are fix'd in the Temples for that Purpoſe, and hang in that Manner till the Time for their fulfilling their Vow is accompliſhed; ſo that they ſleep ſtanding, and continue in the ſame Poſture, though they happen to be ſick, or are juſt going to expire.

THERE are ſeveral Servants in theſe Pagods, whoſe Buſineſs is to give the Penitents Victuals and Drink, and to clean them when they have dirtied themſelves. All the Time that theſe unhappy Victims of Satan continue fix'd in this Manner in the Pagods, they hold continually one of thoſe Idols call'd Lingam in their Hands; and when the Time of their Vow is expir'd, and that they are looſed from the Stake; thoſe whoſe Conſtitutions were vigorous enough to bear up under ſo painful and dreadful a Penance, ſpend the Remainder of their Lives in asking Alms up and down; and we daily meet with ſeveral of them in the Country, whoſe Arms are grown quite ſtiff; are wither'd, extended, and immoveable, becauſe the Joints, from their continuing too long in one Poſture, are quite numb'd, and loſe the Faculty of Motion. A Man who was to ſee theſe Andis at a Diſtance, would take them for ſo many walking Trees, their Arms reſembling pretty much Branches, and their Bodies the Trunk. The only Advantage theſe unhappy Wretches gain by all their Mortification and Auſterities, is, that they are univerſally honour'd as ſo many Saints, whoſe Prayers are thought to have the Virtue to obtain from the Gods whatever they may requeſt of them.

CHAP. X.

Sequel of the Hiſtory of Rutrem.

IT was now a long Time ſince Rutrem had been curſed by the Bramins, when he married the River Ganges, whom the Indians look upon as a very beautiful Woman, but had no Children by her for the Reaſons above-mentioned. He had a Multitude of ſingular Adventures beſides, Part whereof were unhappy, and others very facetious ones. In fine, he one Day found himſelf expoſed to the greateſt Danger he had ever run, and had not his Brother Vixnu come in very ſeaſonably to his Aſſiſtance, 'twould infallibly have been fatal to him.

THERE

THERE was a certain Giant, Paimejuran by Name, i. e. Lord of the Aſhes, who for ſeveral Years together had undergone a very rigorous Penance in honour of Rutrem, whom he earneſtly beſought to beſtow ſome ſignal Favour upon him, which might diſtinguiſh him from the reſt of Mortals. Rutrem, deſirous of rewarding his Zeal and Devotion, inconſiderately granted him a Power to reduce in a Moment to Aſhes, whatever he ſhould lay his Hands upon. The Giant, curious to know if the Privilege which had been granted him, was a real or imaginary one, drew near the God, and was going to lay his Hands on his Head, in order to make a Trial of his Power on the very Deity to whom he ow'd it. Rutrem was then ſenſible, but a little too late, of his great Overſight in indulging Paimejuran ſo uncommon a Favour, and found that his Imprudence had brought him into the moſt dreadful, as well as moſt imminent Danger to which he had ever been expoſed. To ſecure himſelf from it, requir'd all his Cunning, and the great Skill he had in Magic. 'Twas by the Power of this Art, which had already been ſo ſerviceable to him on ſeveral Occaſions, that he contracted himſelf in an Inſtant, ſo as to be able to be ſhut up in the Shell of a certain Fruit, call'd by the Indians, Ayvaralicai, which is no bigger than a Hazel-Nut.

VIXNU was at a great Diſtance from the Place where this Incident happen'd, however he yet got notice of it, when being touch'd with the Misfortune which threatened his Brother, he ran immediately to free him from it. The better to ſucceed in his Attempt, he that Moment aſſum'd the Shape of a Woman ſo exquiſitely beautiful, that the Giant fell diſtractedly in Love with her at firſt Sight, ſo that he thought no more of Rutrem, but left him peaceably in his Shell. He was now wholly employ'd in contemplating the Object which had ſo inchanted him; when after having paid her his moſt profound Reſpects, he begg'd her to give him leave to wait upon her home. The Lady ſeem'd to accept his Compliment with Pleaſure, and promiſed even to indulge the utmoſt of his Wiſhes, provided that before he went with her home, he would go and waſh his Head and his Hair in a neighbouring River. The Reaſon ſhe gave for requiring this from him, was, that as he had led the Life of a Penitent for ſeveral Years, his Hair not having been comb'd, and the Birds having often made their Neſts, and laid their Filth in it, it was grown ſo prodigiouſly dirty, that ſhe could not conſent to his Approaches, before it was firſt clean'd. The amorous Giant, blinded with Paſſion, was not at firſt appriz'd of the Snare which was laid for him; he therefore went raſhly, and without the leaſt Reflection plung'd into the Water. He waſh'd his Body all over, and going alſo to waſh his Hair, in order to pleaſe the Lady, whoſe Beauty had ſo dazzled him, he raiſed both his Hands upon his Head, but ſcarce had he laid them on it, when, by virtue of the fatal Power which had juſt been granted him, he was reduced to Aſhes in an Inſtant.

VIXNU, overjoy'd at the Succeſs of his Stratagem, quitted the Shape of a Woman to aſſume his uſual Form. He went immediately and told his Brother all he had done for his Sake, and in what Manner he had annihilated the Giant. Rutrem at this good News came out of his Shell, reſum'd his firſt Shape, embrac'd his Brother, thank'd him for his ſeaſonable Aſſiſtance, and made a ſtrong Reſolution never to grant any ſuch Favours for the future.—— But being told all that Vixnu had done, to reſcue him from the Danger into which his Inconſiderateneſs had brought him, he earneſtly deſir'd to ſee his Brother under the ſame Form which had inſpir'd the Giant with ſo much Paſſion. Vixnu could not be prevail'd with for ſome Time to gratify Rutrem, and excuſed himſelf by ſaying, that he knew him to be ſo very weak in all Affairs wherein Love was concern'd, that if he ſhould grant him his Requeſt, he would certainly at that very Inſtant be ſo inchanted, and ſo loſt to himſelf, that he would ſcarce have Reaſon enough left to guide himſelf with. Rutrem, not contented with theſe Reaſons, inſiſted upon being gratified, and preſs'd his Brother ſo earneſtly, that Vixnu, to ſatisfy him, reſum'd the Female Form; and ſtood before Rutrem. At the Sight of this lovely Object, the frail God was ſeiz'd with ſuch Tranſports, and his Imagination was ſo intenſely heated with it, that the ſame inſtant there appeared a Child in the Hands of Vixnu, who was called Arigara Putrem, i. e. Son to Rutrem and Vixnu. Such are the abominable Deities which the Indians Worſhip, of whom a thouſand obſcene Circumſtances are related, which Decency will not allow me to mention.

NOTWITHSTANDING that the Heathens are divided into a great Multitude of different Sects, there are nevertheleſs two which may be look'd upon as the Chief; the firſt are thoſe who conſider Vixnu as the greateſt of all the Gods, and theſe are call'd Vixnuvites; the ſecond are ſuch as prefer Rutrem to him, and theſe are call'd Xiven, becauſe this God goes alſo by that Name.

CHAP. XI.

The Notions the Indians have of Paradiſe.

THE Eaſt-Indian Idolaters are of Opinion, that there are [a] five different Places, whither the Souls of thoſe who have lived a holy Life upon Earth go after Death, and enjoy a Fulneſs of Glory.

THE firſt of theſe Places is call'd Xoarcam; 'tis there that Devandiren, King of the Gods, reſides with his two Wives; one of which is call'd Xachi, and the other Indirani. Beſides theſe there are five Concubines ſurpriſingly beautiful, who are continually employ'd in ſerving him. In the ſame Place are alſo the three hundred and thirty thouſand Millions of Gods, with a much greater Number of Concubines, where they enjoy all imaginable Glory, Pleaſure, and Delight. Forty-eight thouſand Penitents ſhare the ſame Bliſs in Xoarcam. The Gods cannot undertake any conſiderable Affair without firſt conſulting them; nor is there one Article, relating to this ſublunary World, treated of in Heaven, but what they muſt be firſt acquainted with. However, this Glory and all theſe Pleaſures do not ſatisfy ſo fully all ſuch as enjoy them, but that they have ſtill a great many Things to wiſh for; and the Gods, not ſatisfy'd with the eternal Delights which are found in Xoarcam, have often envied the fleeting Happineſs of the Inhabitants of the Earth, whereof Devandiren is a Proof. This Sovereign of the Gods, grown weary of the Delights of Heaven, reſolv'd to go in ſearch of other, is this lower Sphere. He knew that a celebrated Penitent, Gaudamen by Name, had retired to a ſweet Solitude not far from the Ganges, and that he there led a Life of Holineſs and Tranquility with his Wife, who was one of the moſt beautiful Women upon Earth. This pretended King of Heaven accordingly ſet out from thence, came down upon Earth, went to the Penitents Hermitage, ſaw his Wife, and fell ſo diſtractedly in Love with her, that he reſolv'd to uſe his utmoſt Endeavours in order to make her violate the Fidelity ſhe owed to her Husband. Finding that this charming Creature was as Virtuous as ſhe was Beautiful, he plainly ſaw it would be impoſſible for him ever to ſucceed without calling in Artifice to his Aſſiſtance. He obſerv'd that Gaudamen never fail'd to riſe every Morning at the Cock-Crowing, when he uſed to go and waſh himſelf in the Ganges, which he imagin'd would furniſh him with an eaſy Opportunity of ſatisfying his raging Paſſion. For this Purpoſe, he one Night aſſum'd the Shape of a Cock, and went and poſted himſelf near the Houſe of the Penitent, and crow'd, but much earlier than the Houſe-Cock was uſed to do. At this Signal, the holy Gaudamen ſtarted up from his Sleep, and notwithſtanding he was very Drowſy, he yet, that he might not fail in his Morning Exerciſe, immediately got up and took his Way to the River. Being come to it, he knew by the Motion of the Water that it could not be more than Midnight, ſo that he imagined the Cock had not really crow'd, but that he had only fancied he had heard him in his Sleep. Beſides, as the Hour in which he uſed to bathe himſelf was not yet near, he reſolv'd to return back Home, in order to take a little more reſt. It would be difficult to expreſs how greatly this poor Penitent was ſurpriz'd, when he ſaw Devandiren, who had lately taken his Place, and did not expect his Return ſo ſoon, lying in Bed by his Wife. He was ſo exaſperated at this ungenerous Treatment, that without having the leaſt Regard to the exalted Dignity of the God, he curſed, and vented the moſt dreadful Imprecations againſt him; and to puniſh him for his Laſciviouſneſs, he wiſh'd that the Body of Devandiren might for ever be cover'd with certain Marks, which ſhould exactly repreſent that Part which had raiſed his Paſſion, and thereby acquaint all who ſhould ſee him with his Brutality and Infamy. This warm and zealous Wiſh had its deſired Effect; the unfortunate God ſaw himſelf reduced inſtantaneouſly to ſuch a Condition, that he did not dare to ſhew himſelf to any Perſon, and was even aſham'd to look upon himſelf. But now he was ſo overwhelm'd with Grief at this unhappy Accident, he fell proſtrate at the Feet of Gaudamen, beſought him with the utmoſt Earneſtneſs to have pity on him, to ſoften the Rigour of his Torments, that were inflicted on him by the Power of his Imprecations, and not ſuffer him to continue in ſo ſhameful and mutilated a Condition. The Penitent was touch'd with the Intreaties and Humiliation of the God, and therefore to calm his Uneaſineſs, he conſented ſo far, that appearing always to himſelf in the hideous Figure he then made, his Body ſhould nevertheleſs ſeem to others to be cover'd over with Eyes; ſo that this King of the Goods has ever ſince that Time been like a ſecond Argus.

[a] In the Diſſertation on the Bramins of Coromandel, mention is made of ſeven. The Names of theſe Places are pretty different.

GAUDAMEN, not ſatisfy'd with having reveng'd himſelf on Devandiren for the Injury he had done him, made his Wife alſo feel the Effects of his Reſentments, who, as a Puniſhment of her Adultery, tho' involuntarily committed, was, by the Power of her Husband's Imprecations, chang'd into a Stone. However it happen'd in Proceſs of Time, that the God Vixnu having aſſum'd the Fleſh under the Shape of Ram, as was before related, happen'd one Day to tread upon that very Stone; which, upon that, was immediately re-metamorphos'd into the ſame beautiful Woman, when ſhe return'd back to her Husband, who pardon'd her Fault, receiv'd her with Pleaſure, and liv'd with her for ever after in the greateſt Harmony and Concord.

THE ſecond Place of Glory and Felicity is Vaicundam. It is here Vixnu reſides with his Wives, and a certain Bird very like a Hawk, call'd by the Indians Papangui. Vixnu employs this Bird as a Horſe, and the Indians have it in ſo much Veneration, that whenever they ſee any of them flying in the Air, they immediately alight from their Horſes or Palankins to ſalute them. They likewiſe believe, that all the devout Followers of Vixnu go into Vaicundam after Death; and that as Fire changes every Thing it acts upon into the ſame Element, in like manner this God changes into his own Subſtance, all thoſe who are ſo happy as to be admitted into the Heaven where he reſides.

THE third Manſion of Glory is Cailaſam. The Heathens ſay, that this is a very high, and wide-extended Mountain of Silver, ſituated towards the North; that 'tis inhabited by Rutrem, his Wife Parvardi, and all his Concubines, and a certain Bull which he makes uſe of for riding. It is here all the Followers of Rutrem go after Death; whoſe Felicity conſiſts in being continually in the Preſence of that God, and in doing him one Service or other. Some are employ'd in cooling him with great Fans; others preſent him with Gold Spitting-Boxes, in order that a Lord of ſuch diſtinguiſhed Majeſty, may not be obliged to ſpit on the Ground. There are ſome who hold continually lighted Torches in their Hands, in order to light him in the Night. Others are employ'd in ſuperintending his Concubines, of which there are numberleſs Multitudes, and to bring to him every Day the She he is pleaſed to call for. In fine, each of theſe bleſſed Souls have a different Function in this Place, and their Felicity conſiſts wholly in doing Rutrem the ſeveral Offices he appoints them.

THE fourth Manſion of Glory is call'd Brumalogam, or the World of Bruma; 'tis alſo call'd Satialogam, that is, the World of Truth. It is here Bruma generally reſides, with his Wife Saraſſuadi, and a large Swan, which he generally makes uſe of to carry him in his Travels.

MELANPADAM, i. e. the moſt excellent and higheſt of all Places; is the fifth Seat of Glory. It is here the firſt Principle, or ſupreme Being reſides; call'd by the Idolaters Parabaravaſtu, that is, the Being by Way of Eminence, or the moſt excellent of all Beings. It is hither alſo that ſuch as have led irreproachable and exemplary Lives upon Earth, are wafted after Death, where they enjoy ineffable and eternal Bliſs; which conſiſts chiefly in enjoying the Preſence of this firſt Being for ever; in knowing him, in being intimately united to him, and in becoming hereafter one and the ſame with him. But as there are very few upon Earth whoſe Lives are perfectly pure and holy, ſo there are not many who have the Happineſs to arrive at this Supreme Degree of Glory.

CHAP. XII.

The Belief the Indians entertain concerning Hell.

THE Idolaters of India believe that Hell is not only under the Earth which we inhabit, but alſo under the ſeven other Worlds beneath ours, whereof mention will be made in the Sequel.

THE Preſident of Hell, whoſe Office it is to ſee the Sentences pronounced by Xiven executed, is called Yhamadar-Maraja. He has a Secretary called Xitragupten, who during the Life of Man, takes care to write down faithfully all his good or evil Actions; and preſents his Memorial to the Preſident the very inſtant the Soul of the Deceaſed appears before him. We are aſſured that this infernal Director is very juſt and equitable; that he never ſuffers any evil Action to go unpuniſh'd, or any good one unrewarded; and as there is ſcarce any one, but has done both Good and Evil in his Life-Time, he firſt asks every Perſon, who is brought before his Tribunal, to take his Choice, either to be firſt puniſh'd for thoſe Faults which he had committed upon Earth, and which he did not take care to expiate, in order to his being afterwards rewarded for his good Works; or to begin by receiving the Recompence due to his Virtue, and be afterwards puniſhed for the Crimes he has been guilty of. As ſoon as the dead Perſon has made his Option, the Preſident pronounces; when thoſe who deſir'd to be firſt rewarded for their good Actions, are carried into Zoarcam, or into ſome other of thoſe Manſions before-mention'd, there to enjoy Felicity and Glory during the Time allotted them, at the Expiration of which, they are dragg'd into Hell, and there puniſh'd for their Crimes, during a certain Time. But on the other Side, ſuch as choſe to be firſt puniſhed in Hell, when the Time for their Chaſtiſement is expir'd, they go and enjoy Bliſs and Felicity, in that Place, and during the Time which Yhamadar-Maraja had appointed.

AFTER a Soul has been thus puniſhed and rewarded according to its Merits, it returns back upon Earth, and there animates a new Body; in ſuch a Manner however, that when a poor Man has done more Evil than Good, he, at his ſecond Birth, is either poorer than he was before, or elſe animates the Body of one of the moſt contemptible Animals; but if on the contrary, his good Actions exceed his evil ones, he then is richer in this new State than he was before.

IF a Bramin in his Life-Time, has either ſerved, or been too familiar with thoſe People call'd Xutres, he then is ſentenc'd to be born ſixteen Millions of Times, in the mean and moſt contemptible Tribe, by way of Puniſhment for having acted ſo derogatory to the Character of a Bramin. Moreover, the Indians believe that the Damned in Hell undergo a numberleſs Multitude of different Torments; and that there are all kinds of ſavage and venomous Beaſts, to torture the Guilty in that Place. Further, the Souls before they arrive at the Palace where the Preſident of thoſe gloomy Manſions reſides, are obliged to ſwim over a River of Fire call'd Vaicarany, whoſe Courſe is extremely rapid, that it is ſometimes a long Time before they can reach the Shore on the other Side; and that this Paſſage is oftentimes more dreadful and tormenting, than all the Puniſhments which are inflicted on the moſt guilty in Hell. But in order to ſoften the Rigour of the Torments which are ſuffer'd in this inevitable Paſſage, theſe Heathen Prieſts give the People to underſtand, that if a ſick Man in his expiring Moments takes a Cow by the Tail with his Hand, and preſents it to a Bramin, if afterwards the Bramin puts a little Water into the ſick Perſon's Hand, and that he immediately pours in on the Ground; if laſtly, the ſick Perſon, after pouring this Water, gives the Bramin a Sum of Money by ways of Alms, and he dies with theſe Circumſtances, he then may be aſſured, that he will not only have a very quick Paſſage over the inflam'd River, but alſo that the Fire will not affect him in the leaſt: For he will find the Cow which he had given the Bramin on the Bank of the River, who will preſent him its Tail to hold by, by which Means he will croſs to the other Side without Pain or Difficulty.

BESIDES this firſt Preſident, or firſt Director of Hell, there is alſo a ſecond, call'd Yhamen, who not only ſuperintends over all the Affairs of this gloomy Region, but is alſo King or God of Death,

THE Heathen Teachers or Doctors aſſure us, that this God himſelf died formerly, and that he afterwards aroſe again, the Occaſion of which is as follows:

A FAMOUS Penitent, Morrugandumagarexi by Name, had during a long Series of Years ſerved the Gods with uncommon and moſt exemplary Piety. This very virtuous Man having no Children, was extremely deſirous of having one, and therefore daily beſought the God Xiven, in the moſt earneſt Manner to grant him one. At length the God heard the Deſire of the Penitent, but before he indulg'd it him, he asked him, which he would rather chuſe, either to have ſeveral Children who ſhould be long-liv'd and wicked, or to have but one that ſhould be virtuous and prudent, but who ſhould die in his ſixteenth Year.

Our Penitent, after a little Reflection, made choice of the latter; but at the ſame Time was very much troubled when he conſider'd how greatly he ſhould be afflicted to loſe, in ſo tender an Age, a Child he had ſo earneſtly deſir'd, and who was to poſſeſs ſo many excellent Qualities.

His Wife conceiv'd, and was happily deliver'd of the promiſed Son, whom they named Marcandem. Scarce had he attain'd thoſe Years when Reaſon begins to enlighten the Soul, but he, like his Father, devoted himſelf in a moſt zealous Manner to the Worſhip of Xiven. He very often offered Sacrifices of Flowers in his Honour, which the Indians call Archinay, and uſed alſo to go frequently in Pilgrimage to a famous Temple, called Tincaddau, dedicated to the ſame God, in which all the Heathens in general pay their Devotions with a particular Zeal and Fervour. In fine, no ſooner had this much loved Child attained his ſixteenth Year, but the Officers of Yhamen, King and God of Death, were ſent on the Earth to remove him from thence.

Young Marcandem being informed of what Errand they were come, told them with a reſolute Air, that he was reſolv'd not to die, and that they might go back if they pleas'd. The Miniſters of the gloomy Prince were offended at his Refuſal, and thereupon return'd back to their Maſter, and told him the whole Affair. The King of Death hearing that Marcandem refuſed to obey his Commands, and was obſtinately reſolved not to die, immediately mounted a great Buffle, on which he uſually rode, and ſet out in order to make him a viſit. Being come, he told the Youth, That he acted very raſhly in refuſing to leave the World, ſince as Xiven had promiſed him a Life only of ſixteen Years, and as that Term was expir'd, it would be unjuſt in him to refuſe to leave the Stage. But none of theſe Reaſons were able to prevail with Marcandem, who ſtill perſiſted in his Reſolution not to die; and fearing leſt the God of Death ſhould attempt to take him away by Force, he ran to his Oratory, and there taking one of thoſe Idols call'd Lingam into his Hands, he claſp'd it eagerly to his Breaſt. In the mean Time Yhamen being reſolv'd not to have the Lye, let what wou'd be the Conſequence of it, came down from his Buffle, threw a Rope about the Youth's Neck, and held him faſt therewith, as alſo the Lingam, which Marcandem graſp'd with all his Strength, and was going to drag them both into Hell, when on a ſudden the God Xiven iſſued out of the Lingam, drove back the King of the Dead, and gave him ſo furious a blow that he kill'd him on the Spot, and ſo deliver'd his Votary from the impending Danger.

The Prince of Death being thus unfortunately ſlain, Mankind were no longer ſubject to his Empire, when they multiplied in ſo extraordinary a Manner, that the Earth was no longer able to contain them. The Gods, who ſaw this Confuſion, did not know how to remedy it; ſo at laſt they reſolve to go in a Body to Xiven, who is the ſame with Rutrem, to ask the Reaſon why he had put Yhamen to Death, who ſeem'd not to have exceeded the Limits of his Power, ſince Marcandem, whom he had ſummon'd to die, had liv'd the Term of Years which had been allotted him. To this Xiven anſwered, that when he granted Marcandem a Life of ſixteen Years, he did not intend thereby that he ſhould die the Moment he was come to that Period, but only that he ſhould always enjoy the Air and Vigour of a Youth of ſixteen, though he were in ever ſo advanced an Age; that the King of Death ought to have enquir'd his Intentions in that Particular, before he had gone to thoſe Extremes; that he had acted very wrong, in attempting to take away Marcandem's Life merely by his own Authority; but that he was much more to blame, in not reſpecting the Lingam, to whom this young Man had fled for Protection; that Yhamen intended to drag them both into Hell, as an illuſtrious Inſtance of his Power; and that to puniſh Yhamen for his Raſhneſs, he had thought fit to put him to Death.

THE Gods heard Xiven's Reaſons, and approv'd them; but told him at the ſame Time, that he now ſhould be ſatisfied with the Vengeance he had taken; that he ought to have ſome regard to the ſtrange Diſorder and Confuſion which aroſe among Mankind, ſince their ceaſing to die; that their Number was ſo prodigiouſly increaſed, that the Earth was no longer able to contain them; and that, as the only Remedy left, was to reſtore the God of Death to Life, they therefore beſought him to do it from the above-mentioned Conſiderations. Xiven yielded to the preſſing Inſtances of the reſt of the Gods, and to the Reaſons they gave; and accordingly reſtored Yhamen to Life, and to all the Rights and Privileges he had before enjoy'd.

THE Prince of the Dead being thus reſtor'd to his former Condition, immediately diſpatch'd a Herald to all Parts of the World, who ſummon'd all the old Men to ſubmit immediately to Death. The Herald got drunk before he ſet out, and without ſtaying till the Fumes of the Wine were diſpell'd, mounted an Elephant, and rode up and down the World purſuant to his Commiſſion. Before him went a great Number of Trumpets and Kettle-Drums, that Mankind might be more attentive to his Proclamation. But as he was not yet quite ſober, he, inſtead of publiſhing the Order in the very Terms he had receiv'd it, declar'd with a loud Voice, that it was the Will and Pleaſure of Yhamen King of Death, and one of the Preſidents of Hell, that from this Day forward, [a] all the Leaves, Flowers, and Fruits, whether Ripe or Green, ſhould fall to the Ground. This Proclamation was no ſooner iſſued out, than Mankind began to yield to Death, but with this Difference, that before Yhamen was kill'd, none were depriv'd of Life but thoſe only who were of a very advanc'd Age; whereas now People of all Ages ſubmit to the fatal Stroke, not excepting Children ſucking at the Breaſt, and others yet unborn.

SUCH was the Force of the King of Death's Command, notwithſtanding it was iſſued out in that inadvertent Manner, ſo oppoſite to the Intentions of that gloomy Monarch, and quite otherwiſe than he had enjoin'd.

YHAMEN, in Conjunction with Yhamada-Maraja, not only appoints the various Torments in Hell which are to be inflicted on each Individual, but often executes the Sentence which he himſelf has pronounced. Yet how rigorous ſoever the Torments may be which are inflicted on the Guilty, they have at leaſt this Conſolation, viz. that they know they are to laſt but a limited Time. This Certainty and Aſſurance, that a Period will one Day be put to their Torments, is the chief Cauſe why the Indians abandon themſelves, with ſo little Remorſe, to every kind of Obſcenity, and the moſt horrid Actions.

CHAP. XIII.

The Notions the Indians have of the human Soul.

THE Indians Idolaters are unanimonſly agreed, that Man has a Principle of Life within him, by whoſe Power he acts and moves, and this they call the Soul: But they differ very much with reſpect to the Idea they entertain of this Principle; and

are divided into a numberleſs Multitude of Opinions on this Head, all which are very contradictory to each other. Some of theſe aſſert that Man has two Souls, which are entirely diſtinct from each other, one whereof they pretend to be Vegetative, and the other Intelligent. They affirm, That the firſt is univerſally infuſed into all Beings that have Life, whether they are indued with Senſation or not; and that this Soul diffuſes itſelf into each of theſe Beings, but without being multiplied. 'Tis with regard to this firſt Soul, that thoſe who give into this Opinion admit the Doctrine of Tranſmigration. As for the other Soul, which they affirm alſo to be in Man, ſome of their Doctors pretend that 'tis God himſelf, who animates Man with his own Eſſence. Others, of whom there are great Numbers, have a Notion that not only Men, but Animals, are animated with the Subſtance of God; that in Conſequence of this, we are to look upon them both as indued with Reaſon; ſo that the Difference which is obſerved between Mankind and Animals, is entirely owing to the different Manner in which the Soul performs its Operations with regard to the different Conſtructions of the Organs. Some ſay that Man only is indued with Reaſon, and that the Beaſts act by Inſtinct; however it is expreſly taught in the Vedam, i. e. The very true Law and Doctrine, that God is not only the Soul of all ſenſible Beings, but that he alſo animates ſuch as are deprived of all Senſation, not excepting the very Elements. Some of theſe Doctors maintain, that the Soul of Man is not formally and ſubſtantially God, and that it is only an Emanation, a Spark, or Ray of the Divinity. Others teach, that God created all Souls in general, whether of Men or Brutes, at the ſame Inſtant; and that theſe are continually and ſucceſſively paſſing from one Body into another. Some among them believe, that the Soul is not created by God, but that the Parents contribute no leſs to its Formation, than to that of the Body, which it animates; and theſe, by a Conſequence very juſtly drawn from this falſe Principle, believe that the Soul and Body are equally mortal and corruptible. In fine, thoſe who hold that there are two Souls in Man, are of Opinion, that the vegetative only, after its Separation from the Body, is wafted to the Tribunal of Yamardaraja and of Yhamen, and is ſubject to their Empire. Theſe are the Opinions which prevail moſt univerſally among the Heathen Indians on this Head.

CHAP. XIV.

The Notions the Heathens have of the World, and the Time it is to endure.

ALL the Heathens in India believe unanimouſly, and aſſert, that there are fourteen Worlds, ſeven of which are ſituated beneath our Earth, and that the other ſeven are placed above it. They all agree likewiſe in the Degree and Order in which each of theſe Worlds is placed.

Hell, ſay they, is the loweſt of all. That which is immediately above it is call'd Magadel; after which is Taladalem; above that is Rajadalem, viz. the World of Mercury or Quick-Silver, which they alſo ſay is the World of Serpents. Next in Sudalam, above which is Vidalam. Between this laſt and that which we inhabit, is the World call'd Adelam, over which our Earth is placed; where, according to the Indians, are ſeven Seas. The firſt is of Salt-Water; the ſecond of Sugar boil'd to a perfectly beautiful Syrup; the third is of Palm-Wine, called by the Indians, Tari; the fourth of Butter; the fifth of curdled Milk; the ſixth is of Milk; and 'tis here Vixnu often chuſes to reſide, reclined on an Adder of perfect Beauty, whoſe five Heads ſerve Vixnu for for an Umbrello, or Canopy. In fine, the ſeventh of theſe Seas is of a very clear and ſweet cryſtalline Water. Over our Earth is the World of Air, on which the Xoarcam is ſeated, where all thoſe, who during this mortal Life have offer'd Sacrifices to the Gods, enjoy all imaginable Pleaſures, in the Company of a numberleſs Multitude of very beautiful Concubines. Though Devandiren, King of the Gods, ſometimes reſides in Xoarcam, he yet commonly keeps his Court in a Region that is ſtill higher, call'd Magologam, i. e. wide-extended World, together with the three hundred and thirty thouſand Millions of Gods, who are divided into two Claſſes. Some of theſe are real Gods, but the reſt are mighty Giants; and theſe two Orders are almoſt continually at War with each other. Above Magologam is Genagolam, or the World of Nations; here we meet with People of all Tribes and Conditions. After this is Tabalogam, or the World of Penitents: This Region is inhabited by ſuch as have led auſtere and mortified Lives upon Earth. In fine, the Name of the higheſt World is Lattiologam, or the World of Truth. 'Tis here Bruma reſides, with thoſe, who during their Life-Time ſerv'd him in a devout Manner: Theſe, after their Death, and even often in their Life-Time, are ſo perfectly transform'd into the real Subſtance of that God, as to make but one and the ſame with him.

THE Bramins inſinuate to the People, that if one of their Tribe happens, during his Life in this World, to cut the String or Thread with which the Members of this Caſte uſually gird themſelves, in order to diſtinguiſh themſelves from all other Tribes, or abſtains from wearing it; if he afterwards cauſes to cut off the little Tuft of Hair, which the Members of that Caſte only are allow'd to wear, and which alſo is a Mark of Diſtinction; laſtly, if after having thus voluntarily ſtripp'd himſelf of theſe Badges of Nobility, and of the Tribe he belongs to, he diſcovers an Inclination to embrace a Life of Penance, he then muſt take in his Right-Hand a Bamboo-Stick, a kind of Cane, which muſt have ten, twelve, or fourteen Joints in it. He muſt alſo carry a great Cup of Earth or Copper in his Left-Hand, to ſerve him for eating and drinking. He muſt likewiſe cover himſelf from the Waiſt to the Knees, with a Piece of Cloth ſtriped with ſeveral Colours, and heighten the whole with theſe Words; Agame Bruma, i. e. I am truly the God Bruma. Then, by virtue of theſe myſterious Words, the Bramin is that Inſtant chang'd and transform'd into the real Subſtance of this God; whereupon all thoſe of the ſame Tribe who are preſent, immediately fall proſtrate on the Earth, and worſhip him as being really and truly a God. The Bramnates, who are the Wives of the Tribe of the Bramins, but eſpecially their Widows, immediately appoint and celebrate Feſtivals in honour of the new God, and have alſo their Watchings and nocturnal Feaſts, to teſtify the Zeal and Veneration they have for him.

THE Bramins who are thus deified, ſcarce eat of any Thing but what theſe Female Devotees have prepar'd for them in the Night-Time. Theſe, though they are reputed to be the moſt virtuous and moſt chaſte Women among the Indians, are in reality the moſt laſcivious and moſt abominable. We are told that they are very skilful in Magic, and employ that infernal Art in order to obtain their obſcene Wiſhes. In fine, the Indians believe that whenever theſe metamorphoſed Bramins die, they are immediately wafted into the World where Bruma reſides, to be never ſeparated from him more.

THE heathen Indians believe, that the fourteen Worlds above-mention'd ſupport one another, and that they are all ſupported by an high Mountain of very pure Gold, call'd Magameru-Parruvadam, or, the Mountain of a prodigious Height and Extent; that this Mountain is ſupported by eight Elephants; that a Tortoiſe bears up all theſe Elephants; and laſtly, that one of thoſe Adders call'd Sexen, or Nalle Pambou, ſupports this Tortoiſe. If one asks them what ſupports the Adder, they anſwer they cannot tell, and have no more to ſay for themſelves. The Books in which their Law is contain'd, tain'd, teach alſo that [a] Earthquakes are cauſed by the Adder's moving itſelf, when being weary of continuing in one Poſture, it turns about, in order to get ſome Eaſe from the Pain cauſed by the immenſe Weight of the Mountain, with which it is rather oppreſs'd than loaded. The ſame Adder, which the Indians worſhip as a very powerful Deity, is alſo thought to cauſe Eclipſes. But before I mention the Manner in which the Heathens think they happen, we muſt obſerve, that they admit of twelve celeſtial Signs; that they reckon twenty ſeven fix'd Stars, to each of which they give a particular Name, which I forbear enumerating, in order not to fatigue the Reader by ſo great a Number of barbarous and uncouth Names. They likewiſe pretend that the Sun is ſix hundred and five thouſand Leagues above the Earth, and that the Moon is at the like Diſtance under the Sun; ſo that being unable to comprehend how the Eclipſes are really form'd, and to give the true Reaſons thereof, they have invented theſe following.

CHAP. XV.

The Notions the Indians have how Eclipſes are form'd.

THE Reader may have obſerv'd at the Beginning of this Treatiſe, how the Gods, in ſpite of all the Oppoſition made by the Giants, had at laſt drawn off the Butter from the Sea of Milk; and in what Manner Vixnu having amus'd the latter, till ſuch Time as the Gods had carried off the Butter, diſappear'd on a ſudden, and left the Giants in great Conſternation, and in the deepeſt Affliction, to find themſelves thus depriv'd of the Share they thought to have of this delicious Repaſt. We are likewiſe to know, that Vixnu, after this Expedition, prepar'd a great Banquet, to which all the Gods were invited. This Feaſt was heightened with a vaſt Variety of exquiſite Viands, and a prodigious Quantity of Butter, which had been got for each Gueſt in particular. Now it chanced that the Adder Sexen, a conſiderable Deity, who had been very aſſiſting in getting this Butter, happen'd, for a Reaſon which I am not acquainted with, to come a little later than the reſt. Being all ſet at Table, they put by a Portion for the Adder; but the Sun and Moon, who are the moſt gluttonous, as well as the brighteſt of all the Gods, took the Adder's Share, and ſwallow'd it down, after they had eat their own. The Adder afterwards coming in, and hearing what had happen'd, was highly enrag'd at their uncivil Treatment; ſhe fell into a violent Paſſion, ſwore ſhe would make thoſe who had put this Affront upon her repent of it, and proteſted, that to puniſh them for their Gluttony, and the little Reſpect they had ſhew'd her, ſhe would find an Opportunity of ſwallowing them both, and at a Time when they ſhould leaſt ſuſpect it. Nor were theſe mere Threats; for the Adder has often been as good as her Word; and that which we call an Eclipſe of the Sun or Moon, happens, according to the Indians, whenever Sexen is going to ſwallow one or both of thoſe Planets. But ſince the World would be for ever depriv'd of Light, and conſequently be wrapp'd in endleſs Darkneſs, in caſe thoſe two luminous Bodies ſhould ever happen to be quite devour'd, no ſooner does the Adder ruſh upon either of them, and begin to ſwallow it, but all the Gods run and endeavour to pacify it; while all the Heathens, on their Side, plunge into the Water, humble themſelves, fall proſtrate before the Adder, and addreſs it in fervent Prayers, beſeeching it to deliver one or other of thoſe Planets who poſſibly may be in Danger. Theſe Prayers are accompanied with a

Flood of Tears, and a moſt dreadful Hurly-Burly, which continues till ſuch Time as the Adder being mov'd to Compaſſion, by the prodigious Cries and numberleſs Prayers which are made to it, lets go its Hold, and releaſes the Planet. The Heathens don't content themſelves with praying, bathing, weeping, and crying as loud as ever they can baul, but abſtain alſo from eating, drinking, or ſleeping; they neither boil or roaſt any Thing, or keep any kind of Food in their Houſes, while the Eclipſe laſts; laſtly, they pretend that 'tis at an End, when the Adder indulges their earneſt Requeſt, by ſpewing up the Planet which it had already begun to devour.

Of all the Errors which the Idolaters give into, there are none with which they are more univerſally infatuated, or which it would be more difficult to root out, than thoſe which relate to Eclipſes, and the Duration of Ages, whereof mention will be made in the following Chapter.

CHAP. XVI.

The Opinion of the Indians with regard to Time, and of the Duration of Ages.

ALL the heathen Indians believe, that the Time this World is to endure, is divided into four Ages, or Parts, which they call Guirraduyagam, Duabrayagam, Tirredayagam, and Calyagam. Three of theſe four Ages, ſay they, are already paſt, and were really ſo many Ages of Gold, not only becauſe of the prodigious Length of Man's Life, but alſo from the great Happineſs and Tranquillity which Mankind in thoſe Times enjoy'd. 'Twas in the third Age that a certain King, Father to Ram, liv'd, of whom mention was made in the Hiſtory of Vixnu: This Monarch, after having liv'd ſeventy thouſand Years without Iſſue, was at laſt ſo happy as to have a great many Children afterwards, notwithſtanding his extreme old Age.

The fourth Age of the World, call'd Calyagam, which we are now in, is, according to theſe Heathens, a truly Iron-Age, as well with regard to the Afflictions and Misfortunes with which Mankind are almoſt oppreſs'd, as in conſideration of the Shortneſs of their Lives. Of this Iron-Age, forty eight thouſand four hundred forty eight Years, according to their Computation, are already paſt; and it will, according to them, laſt much longer, ſince the Time paſt compar'd with that which is to come, is no more than a Grain of Muſtard-Seed in compariſon of a large Gourd.

The Heathens, who thus far are univerſally agreed with regard to this fabulous Diſtinction of Times, are divided with reſpect to the reſt, into two very oppoſite Opinions; one Part imagining, that when this Iron-Age ſhall be completed, the World will alſo end; and the other on the contrary aſſerting, that after this Age of Iron, the golden Ages which preceded it ſhall begin again, and will thus follow one another ſucceſſively, ſo that the World will be of eternal Duration.

These Idolaters have a certain Book, call'd Andaxacaram, in which it is written, that beſides the four Ages above-mention'd, there were fourteen others which preceded them, making eighteen in all. Each of theſe Ages has its diſtinct Name; but as they are too harſh and barbarous, I ſhall not mention them, and ſhall only take notice of the prodiprodigious Duration which the Indians aſcribe to theſe pretended and imaginary Ages. They ſay, that the firſt Age laſted an hundred and forty Millions of Years; the ſecond, an hundred and thirty Millions; the third, an hundred and twenty; the fourth, an hundred and ten; the fifth, an hundred Millions; the ſixth, ninety; the ſeventh, eighty; the eighth, ſeventy; the ninth, ſixty Millions; the tenth, fifty; the eleventh, forty; the twelfth, thirty Millions; the thirteenth, twenty; the fourteenth, ten; the fifteenth, nine Millions ſixty thouſand; the ſixteenth, ſeven Millions five hundred thouſand; the ſeventeenth, five Millions and nine hundred thouſand; and laſtly, the eighteenth, four Millions, four hundred thouſand, three hundred Years; ſo that this chimerical Computation of the Duration of the World amounts to 1,076,960,300 Years.

To this Fiction they add another which is full as ridiculous, which is, their aſſerting that the Planets are not only living and rational Beings, but that they alſo are Gods, and have Wives and Children. Here follows the Notion they have of the Creation of Man.

CHAP. XVII.

The Notions the Indians have of Man.

WE obſerv'd in the third Chapter, that all the heathen Indians are firmly perſuaded, and look upon it as an undoubted Truth, that all Men in general came originally from the God Bruma; that ſome iſſued from his Face, as the Bramins, whoſe Tribe is ſubdivided into a numberleſs Multitude of Degrees and Sects, moſt of whom differ in Opinion. That others, as the Rajas, came out of the Shoulders of the ſame God; and theſe, like the Bramins, are ſubdivided into a prodigious Number of Kinds. That the Comates ſprang from Bruma's Thighs, who are alſo divided into ſeveral Sects; and laſtly, that from the Feet of the ſame God the Xutres iſſued, the meaneſt and moſt numerous of all the Tribes, which is divided into more Branches than all the reſt.

Besides theſe four principal Tribes or Caſtes, which deſcended originally from the God Bruma, he alſo is the Principle of a fifth very numerous one, which however has ſo little Relation or Affinity with the four above-mentioned, that the Members of it ſeem to be a particular Species of Men. The Members of this fifth Tribe are all call'd by the general Name of Niger or Xandalam. Theſe are divided into four Branches; thoſe of the firſt are call'd Archivarata; the ſecond Pallas; the third Pareas, and the fourth and laſt Alparqueiros.

All the ſuperior Tribes look upon that of Xandalam with Contempt, and conſider them as a Set of infamous Wretches. The eating with them, or even the ſeeing them eat or drink, is not only look'd upon as mean, but is even thought to be an enormous and unpardonable Crime. The Members of the firſt four Tribes believe that 'tis not lawful, on any Occaſion whatever, or in how great Danger ſoever they may be, to ſuffer any of theſe unhappy Nigers to enter their Houſes, or to receive any Thing from their Hands, not even a Drop of Water, though they were juſt dying with Thirſt. This ſevere Law is obſerv'd ſo exactly, that any one who infringes it, is not only puniſh'd with Death, but his whole Poſterity is for ever depriv'd of the Privileges of their Tribe, is rank'd among the Nigers, and never after reſtor'd to its former Rank.

THE poor Xandalams are had in ſuch univerſal Contempt, that they are oblig'd to ſequeſter themſelves from the reſt of the World. They never dare come near a City, nor any other Place inhabited by thoſe of the firſt four Tribes, but live in the Woods and Fields, where they till the Ground, and ſubſiſt chiefly by Fiſhing and Hunting.

SUCH among the Heathens as make Study their Occupation, are call'd Xaſtres, as alſothe Saniaſes, who have embrac'd a Life of Penance and Devotion, and wou'd think the bare ſpeaking to one of the above-mentioned moſt abominable Tribe, a moſt horrid Sin. If a Niger ſhould happen to touch a Pot, or any other Copper or earthen Veſſel, which the Members of the other Tribes make uſe of in their Kitchins, or for keeping Water, the Owner of thoſe Veſſels cannot abſolutely make any farther Uſe of them; and whether they be empty or full of what Thing ſoever, is indiſpenſably oblig'd, either to break them, or to give them to the Perſon whoſe bare Touch had made them unclean. But the moſt ſtrange and ſurprizing Circumſtance of all, is, that the Members of the above-mention'd Tribe are not ſuffer'd to enter the Temples, or even ſo much as come near them, either to pray, or offer up their Gifts to the Gods. Nor are they allow'd to draw any Water, either for drinking or waſhing themſelves with, out of the Wells which the other Caſtes make uſe of. All the reſt of the Heathens have theſe wretched Nigers in ſo much Abhorrence, that tho' it were impoſſible for them, when ſeiz'd with a moſt dangerous and deſperate Fit of Sickneſs, to have Relief from any other Perſon, they wou'd rather die, than ſuffer a Niger to give them any. In fine, this laſt Tribe is had in inexpreſſible Contempt and Averſion all India over.

SOME Heathen Doctors maintain, that of the five Tribes above-mentioned, thoſe of the firſt only, viz. the Bramins, are really endued with Souls. Others, as was before obſerv'd, differ ſo much from them in Opinion, that they believe, that Mankind in general are animated by one Soul. However, notwithſtanding the prodigious Diſparity of Sentiments which prevails among them, they are all unanimous with regard to the Belief of the Tranſmigration of Souls. This Doctrine, ſo famous among the Heathens in all Ages, and almoſt all Nations, is by the Indians thought to be ſo clear and ſelf-evident, that they cannot poſſibly conceive how there ſhould be any in the World ſo void of Reaſon as to doubt the Truth of it. Here follows the principal Arguments which the moſt Learned among them employ againſt ſuch as diſpute the Truth of it. No one, ſay they, can deny, but that the Evils with which Men are afflicted in this World, are ordain'd by the Gods for the Puniſhment of the Sins they may have committed; and that the Bleſſings which are ſhower'd down on others, are alſo ſent by the ſame Gods as the Reward of their Virtue. If this be ſo, which they look upon as indiſputable, whence is it that ſo many People who are known to be never guilty of any Crime, but have led irreproachable and exemplary Lives, and that ſo many Children, who are incapable of Sinning, ſhould nevertheleſs be ſubject to ſo great a Variety of Miſeries and Diſeaſes? Whence is it on the contrary, that ſuch a Multitude of others, who are flagrantly infamous and wicked, do nevertheleſs enjoy Health and an uninterrupted Series of Proſperity? It is certain that the Happineſs of the latter, is beſtow'd as a Reward for the Virtues they had practiſed in the foregoing Generations, and that the Troubles with which the former is oppreſs'd, are inflicted as a Puniſhment for the Crimes they had been guilty of, when they animated other Bodies; becauſe otherwiſe, we muſt neceſſarily accuſe Providence of Injuſtice, in treating the Virtuous ſo ill, and the Wicked ſo well. From this Argument, which they look upon as unanſwerable, they conclude the Certainty of the Tranſmigration of Souls. We ſhall afterwards take notice of the Motives, which induced thoſe Idolaters to be ſo tenacious of this Doctrine.

CHAP. XVIII.

That moſt Articles in the Heathen Doctrine bear ſome Affinity to that of the Chriſtians.

SUCH as reflect ſeriouſly on the principal Points of the Doctrine of the Heathen Indians, will ſoon be of Opinion, that theſe Idolaters were formerly acquainted with the [a] Myſteries of the Chriſtian Religion; and that the Truths which were undoubtedly deliver'd to them, have been inſenſibly chang'd for want of evangelical Preachers, who might continue to explain them to the People. It is very probable that theſe Indians, who are naturally ſuperſtitious and addicted to the Worſhip of Idols, have inſenſibly abandon'd the Doctrine they had receiv'd, to follow the falſe Ideas which a depraved Imagination ſuggeſted; inſomuch that their whole Religion at this Day, is made up of ſuch a Texture of ridiculous Stories and Fictions, that it is almoſt incredible to imagine how Men endued with Reaſon can poſſibly give credit to them.

As for inſtance, we manifeſtly perceive an Idea, tho' a very groſs and imperfect one, of the incomprehenſible Myſtery of the ever-bleſſed Trinity, in the fabulous Hiſtory of their Gods, when they ſay that from Vixnu, whom they call Adcvixnu, or Vixnu the firſt Principle, proceeds Bruma, which ſignifies Knowledge, whom they affirm to be Son to the firſt Principle, but born without a Mother; and that afterwards in one of their Books, call'd Chitanandi, they make Rutrem to be as aſſociate to theſe two firſt Deities; and laſtly, in like Manner as the Chriſtian Doctrine aſſures that God created all Things by his WORD, they alſo teach, that all Things viſible and inviſible were made by Bruma, whom they call the Knowledge of God, or, the God who knows all Things.

THESE have ſubſtituted the Doctrine of Tranſmigration inſtead of the Reſurrection, by which Means the Good are rewarded and the Wicked puniſh'd. We likewiſe find, that they have ſome Knowledge of Original Sin, ſince they teach, that Diſeaſes, Fatigues, Adverſities, and Death itſelf, are inflicted as Puniſhments for Crimes committed in former Generations, and are thus in ſome meaſure ſenſible, and allow of that which St. Paul teaches, viz. That Sin is the fatal Source of all our Evils and of Death. If we who profeſs the Religion of Chriſt Jeſus, believe that Sins are remitted by virtue of the bleſſed Sacrament, and principally by Baptiſm and Penance; the Heathens, by the Inſtigation of the Devil, who endeavours to mimic the true God, teach, that they are cleanſed from their Sins by only waſhing themſelves in the Rivers of Caxi, Ramejuran, Cavery, the Ganges, Cambuconam, or in other Waters, which, according to them, have the ſingular Property of purifying the Conſciences of Men. But it is not only plunging themſelves in theſe Waters, which they fancy to be of ſo ſalutary a Quality, as to cleanſe them from all Impurities; they believe alſo that the Sacrifices which they offer to their Gods, have the ſame Effect. They even think that the bare invoking them, immediately reſtores to Grace: And not ſatisfied with this, they have carried their Superſtition to that Length, as to aſſure, that ſuch as once zealouſly invoke the Name of Ram, who is the ſame with Vixnu made Fleſh, immediately obtain a Remiſſion of all their Sins; that if they repeat it a ſecond Time, they thereby acquire ſo much Merit, as to reduce the Gods to a kind of Inability of rewarding them according to their Deſerts. They aſcribe the ſame Merits to the Names of Xiven, of Chrixnen, of Velayadam, and ſeveral others, which they repeat inceſſantly, in order to expatiate their Sins at ſo eaſy a Rate.

THE Heathens, beſides theſe various Methods of obtaining a Forgiveneſs of their Sins, perform ſeveral Sacrifices to appeaſe the Wrath of the Gods, and thereby obtain a kind of Indulgence. Some of theſe are bloody Sacrifices, and go by the Name of Belly, and others call'd Rigei, in which no Blood is ſpilt; ſome conſiſt only in offering Flowers, and theſe they call Archiney; and laſtly, there are others again call'd Oman. Theſe Heathens aſcribe a very great Virtue to theſe four kinds of Sacrifices, and alſo to a kind of Chaplet of Beads, which they uſe in ſaying their Prayers.

THESE Chaplets, the Beads whereof are made of a certain Fruit called Rutraxam, and which are uſed moſt by the Followers of Xiven, are thought to have a wonderful Efficacy in them. Some of theſe Beads have not one Streak, others have one; there are ſome that have three, four, and others again many more. The Indians call the ſmooth Spaces, which are between theſe Streaks, Faces, or Viſages; and the more Streaks, and conſequently the more Faces any of theſe Beads have, the more they value them; they ſuppoſing the more Faces a Bead has, the greater is its Virtue, and the greater the Merit of the Perſon who uſes it in Praying.

THE Rutraxam, or Beads without one Streak, and which being quite ſmooth have conſequently but one Face, are of ſo excellent a Nature, and ſo very meritorious to the Owner, that tho' he ſhould have killed a Bramin, or a Cow, which are look'd upon by the Heathens as Capital Crimes, he is not only pardon'd, but becomes as holy and perfect as Xiven himſelf. Beads with two Faces have the ſame Effect. Thoſe with three contain the Emblem of Fire, and have the Virtue of purifying and reſtoring a Man to Innocence, tho' he ſhould have kill'd his Wife. Beads with four Faces purify a Man who has kill'd ſeveral Bramins, notwithſtanding their being of the ſame Subſtance with God Bruma; becauſe Xiven, who is the ſame with Rutrem, made uſe of the ſame Fruit to expiate his Sin in cutting off Bruma's Head, when he liv'd in a ſcandalous Manner with his own Daughter, as has been already related in Chap. VIII. The Beads with five Faces, have the Privilege to blot out all kind of Sin, and likewiſe preſerve all ſuch as poſſeſs them from Yhamen King of the Dead, ſo that he has not the Power of annoying them; but yet this wonderful Fruit does not preſerve them who have the greateſt Stock of it, from dying like the reſt of their Fellow-Creatures. The Rutraxams with ſix Faces, have the ſame Virtues as thoſe of two, three, or ſeven Faces, and have likewiſe the Power of reſtoring him to Innocence, who ſhould have committed Inceſt with his own Daughter. They have, beſides this wonderful Privilege, the Virtue of preſerving all ſuch as carry them about them, from being bit by Adders of any kind. The Beads with eight Faces cleanſe the Perſon who have them about him from all Sin he may have committed, in ſeducing the Wife of his ghoſtly Father, nay, tho' he ſhould long have continued in a State of Adultery with her. The Beads with nine Faces reſtore a Man to Innocence, tho' he ſhould have kill'd or aſſaſſinated a Million of Bramins; and he, who wears them tied to his Right-Arm all his Life-Time, may depend upon being predeſtinated; and that tho' he does not perform one good Action, he yet will enjoy equal Glory after this Life with the God Xiven.

HE who is ſo fortunate as to wear a Chaplet whoſe Beads have ten Faces, may depend upon a general Abſolution from all his Sins, how great and enormous ſoever they may be, and that he ſhall never be hurt, either by Man, or by venomous Beaſts, or Devils. The Beads with eleven Faces procure the Poſſeſſor, both in this World and the next, the ſame Glory and Felicity as Xiven enjoys. Such as carry about them Chaplets made of Beads with twelve Faces, become bright and reſplendent as the Sun, and partake of all the Prayers and Sacrifices which are offered up to the Gods in all Parts of the Earth. In fine, as no one has yet ſeen any of thoſe miraculous Fruits with more than thirteen Faces, ſuch as are happy enough to meet with any of that Kind, which are equally rare and precious, and wear them fix'd to their Arms or their Necks, are thereby endued with ſo ſurprizing an Agility; that they may convey themſelves inſtantaneouſly from one Place to another, tho' ever ſo far diſtant. The Owners of theſe have likewiſe the glorious Privilege, of committing the moſt obſcene and moſt inceſtuous Actions with Impunity; and to complete the Extravagance, the infamous Heathen Doctors teach, that the more of theſe Beads a Man carries about him, the greater is his Merit: So that thoſe who have the wonderful good Fortune to get a thouſand of them, arrive at ſo ſupreme a Degree of Honour and Felicity, that nothing they do can poſſibly be criminal; and therefore they may, without the leaſt Remorſe, or Danger of polluting themſelves, commit the moſt flagrant and abominable Crimes. So that thoſe Things which the Bramins propoſe as proper to drive away and expiate Sin, have juſt the contrary Effect; becauſe of the Hopes which theſe deluded People entertain that none will be imputed to them.

CHAP. XIX.

Continuation of the foregoing Subject.

IT is not to be doubted, but the Heathens have had ſome Knowledge of the Fall of Lucifer and the reſt of the apoſtate Angels, ſince their Books relate, that there was antiently a great Diviſion among the Gods; that ſome fell under the Diſpleaſure of their Sovereign for having dar'd to rebel againſt him; that to puniſh them, they were depriv'd of the Happineſs they before enjoy'd, and thereupon fell into a State of Miſery, ſince which they have been wholly employ'd in doing all the Miſchief they poſſibly can to Mankind; and that they are now call'd Raxader, which in our Language ſignifies Devil.

As to the Flood, 'tis plain they were not wholly unacquainted with the Hiſtory of it, ſince we find it related in the above-mention'd Books, that there was formerly an antient Man, Tirruvalluven by Name, who being one Day at Dinner with his Daughter, in a great Wicker-Basket lin'd with a Buffle's-Hide, a prodigious Rain fell, which laſted ſo long, that it overflow'd the whole Earth; that Mankind were then univerſally deſtroyed, the good old Man and his Daughter excepted, whom the Gods, by a peculiar Providence, preſerv'd from the general Inundation; that when the Waters were withdrawn, and the Earth was grown dry, the Man came out from his Basket, and notwithſtanding his advanced Age, he had ſeveral Children by his Daughter; and that it was in this Manner Mankind was then reſtor'd, and the Earth repeopled.

WE alſo meet in the ſame Books with a groteſque Deſcription of the Combats of David and Sampſon, in that Part of the Hiſtory of the Gods, where the Wars which Ram waged againſt the Giants are related. The Account they give of them is ſo ſurprizingly whimſical, that we have thought proper to inſert ſome Particulars of it in this Place.

THE Heathen Doctors, who, as was already obſerv'd, are divided into a numberleſs Multitude of Sects and Opinions, are nevertheleſs unanimouſly agreed in their Belief of the fabulous Hiſtories of their Gods, and pay as much Veneration to theſe kind of Hiſtories Hiſtories, as we (pardon the Compariſon) do to the Goſpel. Moſt of theſe wretched Prieſts ſpend a conſiderable Part of their Lives in ſtudying, and afterwards teaching them to others. They repeat them in their Pagods, in Houſes, in public Places of Reſort, and oftentimes in the open Fields, and are always follow'd by a great Croud of People.

THE Reaſon why they ſo aſſiduouſly publiſh theſe kinds of Fictions, is, becauſe it gains them the Eſteem of the Vulgar, and eſpecially of the Women; not to mention the plentiful Alms it procures them, with which they ſupport their Families. And on the other Side, that which inclines the Populace to liſten to them ſo eagerly, is, the Bramins aſſuring them, that all ſuch as have a perfect Knowlege of theſe Myſteries, and aſſiſt with Reſpect and Attention to what is related to them on that Subject, render themſelves worthy of all kinds of Bleſſings; that they are cheriſh'd by the Gods, preſerv'd from all Dangers, and even become invulnerable; that all their Sins are forgiven; that they ſhall ſee the Face of Bruma, and one Day have the Happineſs of reſembling him exactly; that like Ram they ſhall acquire a perfect Knowledge of all Things; and laſtly, that they ſhall be very skilful in Fencing, in which they aſſure this God excells.

THEY relate, that when Ram was but twelve Years of Age, he alone kill'd a Giant of a prodigious Stature; that when he had attained an Age fit for Marriage, he took Sidi to Wife; that he uſed to draw a Bow of ſuch extraordinary Weight, that ſixty thouſand Men could hardly lift it from the Ground; that not long after his Marriage, he reſolv'd to travel round the World, after which he voluntarily confin'd himſelf to a Deſart; there he employ'd himſelf in viſiting the Penitents and Religious, to whom he granted ſeveral great Privileges, and even ſent ſome of them to Heaven, there to enjoy Glory and Felicity. It was while Ram was thus employing himſelf in the Exerciſes of a ſolitary Life, that the famous Ravanen appear'd under the Diſguiſe of a Penitent, and carried off his Wife Sidi, and wafted her into the Iſland of Ceylan. No ſooner had this impious Giant withdrawn himſelf with his Prey, but he began to perſecute all good People, and was even ſo bold as to attack the Gods, againſt whom he declar'd War, and cut out a great deal of Work for them during a long ſeries of Time. He was very skilful in all military Exerciſes, and having been brought up under the Protection of Bruma, had been diſtinguiſh'd by ſeveral extraordinary Marks of his Favour. This God had, among other Things, preſented him with a Set of very excellent offenſive and defenſive Weapons, which had enabled him to come off victorious in a thouſand different Engagements. Bruma had alſo favour'd him ſo far, that he excell'd in every kind of Knowledge; and ſo great was his Strength, that he overcame the eight Elephants on whoſe Backs the World is ſupported.

IT was after ſo unexpected a Victory that he undertook to attack Devandiren King of the Gods, and obliged him to come, with all the other Gods, twice every Day to do him Homage in his Palace. But this not ſatisfying him, he reſolv'd to drive Xiven alſo from the glorious Manſion where he generally reſides. But here his good Fortune began to fail him; for this God puſhing him with his Hand, threw him down, when the Giant was ſo ſqueez'd between the Ground and Xiven's Fingers, as almoſt ſtifled him to Death. To extricate himſelf from this Danger, he ſtole away one of his Arms, and having chang'd one of his two Heads into a Guittar, touch'd this new Inſtrument ſo finely, that the God, inchanted with the harmonious Sounds, not only gave him his Liberty without doing him the leaſt harm, but likewiſe granted him ſeveral new Privileges, the chief of which were, the obtaining a Life of thirty Millions of Years, and the having an Army compoſed of an hundred Millions of Giants, ſome of whom ſhould have fifty Heads, and others were to be endued with ſuch prodigious Strength, that when they ſtruck the Sea with their Foot, it ſhould make the Waters of it retire in ſuch a Manner as to diſcover the Bottom.

Sea

As for Ravanen, he was ſo huge a Monſter, that he had twenty Shoulders, and the ſame Number of Arms; and the Breadth of each of theſe Shoulders to that which was oppoſite to it was thirty Leagues. There was alſo a Veſſel full of a certain heavenly Liquor lodg'd in his Stomach, which he was oblig'd for his own Sake to preſerve with the utmoſt Care; becauſe, that tho' a Life of thirty Millions of Years had been granted him, it was nevertheleſs with this Proviſo, that the precious Liquor contain'd in this Veſſel ſhould not be ſpilt; and that in caſe the Veſſel ſhould be broke before the Expiration of that Term, he was to die the ſame Inſtant. This dreadful Giant had not only ten Heads, but what is ſtill more wonderful, no ſooner was one cut off, but another immediately ſprung up in its Place. Nevertheleſs all theſe glorious Prerogatives could not preſerve him from falling at laſt a Victim to the Power of Ram, which happened as follows.

After that Ravanen, in the Diſguiſe of a Penitent, had carried off Sidi, Ram not knowing what was become of her, was greatly troubled to loſe his Wife in this Manner. He did his utmoſt Endeavours for a long Time to get ſome Information where ſhe was, but all to no Purpoſe. At length he addreſs'd himſelf to Inuuman, who is the Ape-God, or Sovereign of all the Apes, Son to the Wind, and endued with ſuch rare Perfections, that with the bare Act of his Will he raiſes himſelf ſo high, as to touch the Stars with his Head, and both the Poles with his two Hands. Ram beſought him ſo earneſtly to aſſiſt him in ſearching for his Wife, that Inuuman, overjoy'd to meet with an Opportunity of doing him Service, immediately ſet out for that Purpoſe. The Ape-God hunted over every Part of the Main Land, but not meeting what he wanted, he went over into the Iſland of Ceylan, where he found Sidi, whom he took by the Hand, carried her off to the Continent, and left her under a ſtrong and faithful Guard. After this he returned back into the Iſland, when aſſuming the Shape of a Bear, he ran over every Part of it, made a dreadful Havock, not ſo much as ſparing the Giant's Palace who reign'd there. This Expedition ended, he reſum'd his natural Shape, and with his Tail defeated three powerful Armies of Giants, preſented himſelf before Ravanen, and without paying the leaſt regard to his regal Character, gave him a Box o'the Ear, and kill'd his Son in his Preſence. Several of the ſtrongeſt Giants ran to ſuccour their Prince. Theſe put a Stop to the Havock this dreadful Ape was making, who now ſuffer'd himſelf to be taken Priſoner. Immediately a Council was ſummon'd to conſider what Puniſhment they ſhould inflict upon him; the Reſult of the Debates was, that they ſhould put him to an uncommon kind of Death. In Execution of this Sentence, they ty'd to the Ape's Tail a Multitude of Bales of Cotton, which were at that Time in the Cuſtom-Houſe Ware-Houſes; which being done, they threw ſo great a Quantity of Oil on them, that they almoſt ſwam in it, and immediately ſet Fire to them, in order to burn Inuuman to Aſhes. However the ſubtle Ape eluded the Deſigns of his Enemies, for leaving the Palace with his Load upon him, he ran over all the City and the whole Iſland; ſet Fire to all the Places thro' which he paſſed, and cauſed ſo general and dreadful a Conflagration, that it would have been impoſſible for the Giant Ravanen to have ſecur'd himſelf and his Wife from it, had they not got up into Devandiren's Chariot, and ſhelter'd themſelves in the Clouds.

In the mean Time Inuuman left Ceylan, when he again went to Sidi, and reſtor'd her to her Husband. Ram thank'd the Ape-God for this ſignal Service he had done him, but being reſolutely bent to revenge the Affront which had been put upon him in carrying off his Wife, he therefore conjur'd him to continue his Aſſiſtance. The Ape agreed to it, when they ſet out together, and ſoon raiſed an Army of upwards of five hundred Millions of Apes, when they went and beſieged the Fortreſs of the King of Ceylan. This Fortreſs was ſurrounded with ſeven Walls, the firſt of which was Iron, the ſecond of Copper, the third of [a] Braſs, the fourth of yellow Braſs, the fifth of a Compoſition of ſeveral mix'd Metals, the ſixth of Silver, and the ſeventh of Gold.

RAVANEN knowing the Importance of this ſtrong Hold, immediately ſent Ambaſſadors to his Brother Cambucarnen, to demand Succours of him, and deſir'd that he himſelf would head them. This Cambucarnen was a Giant of an enormous Size, who at that Time commanded upwards of four hundred Millions of Giants, whoſe united Force had hitherto been invincible. Upon this Advice he immediately haſted to his Brother's Aſſiſtance, and arriv'd in the Iſland of Ceylan, where he was no ſooner come, but ſeveral Battles enſued between the Giants and the Apes, great Numbers of whom were kill'd upon the Spot on both Sides.

IT was in one of theſe Engagements that Cambucarnen fell by the Hand of Ram, which ſo damp'd the Courage of the Giants, and raiſed that of the Apes, that they carried on the Siege much more briskly than before. Ravanen finding his Affairs in a very ill Poſture, and deſirous of uſing the Privilege, which in his Opinion, render'd him almoſt immortal, offer'd to put an end to the Strife by Fighting Ram in ſingle Combat. The latter accepting the Challenge, they fought; gave each other dreadful Blows, with one of which Ram was wounded, and ready to ſink under his Enemy; but the Blood which flow'd from his Wound rouzing his fainting Courage, he found himſelf endued with freſh Strength. Upon this he took out an Arrow, and directed his Aim ſo happily, that it pierc'd Ravanen's Breaſt, broke the Veſſel which contain'd the fatal Liquor, on the Preſervation whereof his Life depended, and with this ſingle Stroke laid him dead at his Feet.

RAM, after ſo ſignal and important a Victory, abandon'd the Fortreſs to the Plunder of the Apes, who had afforded him ſuch ſeaſonable Succour. They found immenſe Wealth in it, not to mention the Gold and Silver Walls which were broken down, and carried away; ſo that there was not one in all this numerous Army, but return'd back into his Country loaded with the moſt precious Spoils. Ravanen had a Brother left, Vibuxanen by Name, who was a mighty Giant, and endued with ſeveral good Qualities. Vibuxanen had not intermeddled in his Brother's Quarrel, nor in the War which afterwards broke out upon that Account; wherefore Ram, contenting himſelf with having got his Wife back, and had reveng'd himſelf on his Enemies, gave thoſe Dominions to Vibuxanen, of which he had diſpoſſeſs'd Ravanen. He even concluded an Alliance with him, after which he withdrew with his dear Sidi, into a calm and peaceable Retirement, where they both have reſided ever ſince that Time.

A LETTER

From Father BOUCHET a Jeſuit, Miſſionary to Maduras, and Superior of the new Miſſion of Carnate, To Monſ. HUET, Biſhop of AVRANCHES.

MY LORD,

THE Labours of a Perſon who undertakes to preach the Goſpel to the Eaſt-Indians, are ſo great and ſo uninterrupted, that one would think the Employment of preaching the Name of Chriſt Jeſus to the Idolaters, and enlightening the Minds of the new Converts, are enough of themſelves to take up all a Miſſionary's Time: And indeed, in certain Seaſons of the Year, he is ſo far from having any Leiſure for Study, that he can ſcarce find Time to take the neceſſary Refreſhments, but is often oblig'd to ſubtract from his nightly Repoſe, thoſe Hours he ought to devote to Prayer and the other Exerciſes of his Profeſſion.

HOWEVER, my Lord, in other Seaſons, and even in certain Hours of the Day, we have Time ſufficient for unbending the Mind by ſome kind of Study. Our Care is then to make even thoſe Intervals ſerviceable to our holy Religion. In this View we apply ourſelves to ſuch Sciences as are in greateſt Vogue among thoſe Idolaters, at whoſe Converſion we labour, and endeavour to find out Arguments from their very Errors, by which we may convince them of the Truth we preach.

'TWAS in thoſe Seaſons, when I was allow'd ſome Leiſure from the ordinary Cares of the miniſterial Function, that I ſearched as cloſely as poſſible, into the Syſtem of the Religion of theſe Indians. My Deſign, my Lord, by this Letter, is only to ſet before your Lordſhip, and to advance certain Conjectures, which I preſume are of that Weight as to claim all your Attention. The general Scope of them is, to prove that the Indians borrow'd their Religion from the Books of Moſes and the Prophets; that all the Fictions with which their Books abound, do not yet ſo abſolutely darken Truth, as to prevent her being known; and that, in fine, we may diſcover among theſe Idolaters, not to mention the Religion of the Hebrews, with which their Commerce with the Jews and Egyptians had given them an Opportunity of being acquainted, or at leaſt with ſome Particulars of it; we may diſcover, I ſay, ſeveral evident Footſteps of the Chriſtian Religion, that was preach'd to them by the Apoſtle St. Thomas, by Pantænus, and ſeveral other great Men, even ſo early as the firſt Ages of the Church.

I DID not in the leaſt doubt, my Lord, but you would approve the Liberty I have taken to addreſs this Letter to your Lordſhip. I imagin'd, that a Series of Reflections which may be of ſervice in confirming and defending our holy Religion, naturally laid claim to your Lordſhip's Patronage. You will think this more immediately your Concern, as you have ſo finely demonſtrated the Truth of our Faith, by a moſt profound Erudition, as well as a perfect Knowledge of Antiquity, both ſacred and profane.

I REMEMBER, my Lord, to have read in your learned Treatiſe of the Evangelical Demonſtration, that the Doctrine of Moſes had reach'd the Indies; and your great Care while you peruſed the various Authors you have read, in obſerving whatever may be ſerviceable to our holy Religion, has made your Lordſhip to get the ſtart of me in ſeveral Particulars, which I ſhould otherwiſe have taken notice of. I ſhall therefore only add ſuch new Diſcoveries as I myſelf have made among them, by the Study of their moſt antient Books, and the Familiarity which the Learned of that Country indulg'd me.

'TIS certain, my Lord, that the Generality of the Indians are no ways tainted with the Abſurdities of Atheiſm. They have ſome pretty juſt Ideas of the Deity, though adulterated and corrupted by the Worſhip of Idols. They acknowledge the Being of an infinitely perfect God, exiſting from all Eternity, and who comprehends in himſelf the moſt excellent Attributes. Thus far every Thing is well, nor can any Thing be more conformable to the Notions which Chriſtians have of the Deity. Here follows what Idolatry has unhappily grafted on that Stock.

MOST

Most of the Indians maintain, that the great Crowd of Divinities which they adore at this Day, are no more than ſo many ſubaltern Gods, ſubject to the Supreme Being, who is equally Lord over Gods and Men. This great God, ſay they, is infinitely ſuperior to all other Beings; and this infinite Diſtance prevents his having any Correſpondence or Communication with frail Creatures. And indeed, ſay they, what Proportion can there be between a Being of infinite Perfection, and ſuch created Beings as we; a mere Aſſemblage of Frailties and Imperfections? 'Tis for this very Reaſon, ſay they, that Parabaravaſtou, i. e. the Supreme God, has created three inferior Divinities, viz. Bruma, Vichnou, and Routren. To the firſt he has given the Power of creating; to the ſecond of preſerving; and to the third that of deſtroying.

But theſe three Gods, who are worſhipp'd by the Indians, are, in the Opinion of their learned Men, the Children of one Wife, call'd Parachatti, or the Supreme Power. Were we to reduce this Fiction to its original State, we then ſhould eaſily diſcover the Truth, though darkened and clouded over by the ridiculous Fictions which the Father of Lyes has added to it.

All the antient Indians meant by this was, that every Thing which is done in the World, whether by Creation, which they aſcribe to Bruma; or by Preſervation, attributed to Vichnou; or laſtly, by the different Changes, which are the Work of Routren, reſult entirely from the abſolute Power of Parabaravaſtou, or the Supreme God. Theſe carnal Minds afterwards ſuppoſed this Parachatti to be a Woman, and that ſhe had three Children, which are no more than the chief Effects of Almighty Power; indeed Chatti, in the Indian Language, ſignifies Power; and Para, Supreme or Abſolute.

This Idea the Indians have of a Being infinitely ſuperior to the other Deities, is at leaſt a Teſtimony that the Antients did in reality adore but one God; and that Polytheiſm got footing among them no otherwiſe than it did in all other idolatrous Countries.

I don't, my Lord, pretend to affirm, that theſe firſt Elements of Religion are a clear and manifeſt Proof of the Indians having a Correſpondence with the Jews or Egyptians. I am very ſenſible that God Almighty has, without ſuch Aſſiſtances, engrav'd this fundamental Truth in the Minds of all Men; and that nothing can have the Power of erazing it, but the Depravity and Corruption of their Hearts. For the ſame Reaſon, I ſhall not trouble you with the Notions the Indians have of the Immortality of the Soul, and ſeveral other Truths of the ſame Nature.

However, I believe your Lordſhip will not be diſpleaſed, if I ſet before you the Manner in which theſe Indians fancy they find in their Authors an Explanation of the Reſemblance which Man bears to the Supreme Being. Here follows what a learned Bramin told me he had copied on this Head, from one of their moſt antient Writers. Figure to yourſelf, ſays that Author, a Million of great Veſſels fill'd with Water, on which the Sun darts all his Rays. This beautiful Planet, though but one, does nevertheleſs multiply itſelf in ſome meaſure, and paints itſelf entirely in an Inſtant in each of theſe Veſſels; we ſee an Image of the Sun very exactly reflected in each of theſe Veſſels. Our Bodies are theſe Veſſels fill'd with Water, the Sun is an Emblem of the Supreme Being, and the Reflection or Image of the Sun on each of theſe Veſſels, is a pretty natural Repreſentation of the Soul created in the Similitude of God himſelf.

I proceed to certain Circumſtances, wherein what I firſt aſſerted will appear more ſtrongly, and better adapted to ſatisfy a Perſon of your Lordſhip's exquiſite Penetration. Suffer me barely to relate to you the Things themſelves, with the ſame Simplicity as they were told me. 'Twould be trifling in me to interſperſe my own private Reflections, at a Time when I am writing to ſo learned a Prelate.

THE Indians, as I before obſerv'd, believe, that Bruma is that God among the three ſubaltern ones, to whom the Supreme Deity gave the Power of creating. Bruma therefore created the firſt Man; but a Circumſtance which falls in exactly with my Subject, is, that Bruma form'd Man of the Mud or Slime of the newly-created Earth. He had indeed ſome Trouble before he could finiſh his Work; he try'd, and try'd again, and at the third Effort found his Meaſure was exact. Fiction has grafted this laſt Circumſtance on Truth, and we are not to wonder, that a God of the ſecond Order ſhould be oblig'd, as it were, to ſerve an Apprenticeſhip before he could create Man in that boaſted Perfection and Harmony of all his Parts. But had the Indians gone no farther than what Nature, or poſſibly their Acquaintance with the Jews, had taught them concerning the Unity of God, they then would have been ſatisfied with what they had learn'd by the ſame Canal, with regard to the Creation of Man; and in that caſe would barely have ſaid, as they do with the holy Scriptures, That Man was form'd of the Duſt of the Ground, newly come from the Hands of the Creator.

HOWEVER, this, my Lord, is not all: Man being once created by Bruma, but with the Labour and Trouble I before obſerved, the more Pains the new Creator had taken in the forming his Creature, the more he was delighted with his Work. The Buſineſs now is to place it in an Habitation worthy its exalted Dignity.

THE Scripture has deſcrib'd the terreſtrial Paradiſe as an inchanting Place; and the Indians have not made their Chorcam leſs delicious. They tell us, 'tis a Garden of Delights, abounding with all kind of Fruits; that we there ſee a Tree whoſe Fruits, were they not forbidden, would give Immortality to all who ſhould taſte them.

WE could ſcarce imagine that it were poſſible for a People who had never heard the leaſt mention of the terreſtrial Paradiſe, to draw a Picture of it ſo much reſembling the Original.

ONE very ſurprizing Circumſtance, my Lord, is, that the ſubaltern Gods, who have ever ſince the Creation been multiplying themſelves almoſt to Infinitude, did not enjoy, or at leaſt were not certain of enjoying, the Privilege of Immortality, which undoubtedly would have been very grateful to them. Here follows a Story that the Indians relate upon this Occaſion, which, how fabulous ſoever it may be, was certainly originally borrow'd from the Doctrine of the Hebrews, and perhaps that of the Chriſtians.

THE Gods, ſay the Indians, employ'd every Art to make themſelves immortal. After numberleſs fruitleſs Endeavours, they reſolved to have recourſe to the Tree of Life which grew in Chorcam. They met with Succeſs, ſo that by eating from Time to Time of the Fruits of this Tree, they preſerved the precious Treaſure, which it ſo highly concerns them not to loſe. At length a famous Serpent, call'd Cheien, perceiv'd that the Tree of Life had been found out by the Gods of the ſecond Claſs. As 'tis very probable that he had been appointed to guard this Tree, he was ſo highly exaſperated at his being over-reach'd, that he immediately poured out a great Quantity of Poiſon. The whole Earth felt the dreadful Effects of it, and not one Mortal was to eſcape its malignant Influence. But the God Chiven taking Pity of human Nature, reveal'd himſelf under the Shape of a Man, and immediately ſwallow'd the Poiſon with which the malicious Serpent had infected the Univerſe.

YOU ſee, my Lord, that Things begin to clear up a little, in proportion as we advance forward. I muſt beg your Attention while I repeat a new Fiction; a Fiction I ſay, for I ſhould impoſe upon your Lordſhip, were I to give it a more ſerious Name. In this Fable, notwithſtanding all the fabulous Circumſtances with which it is clouded, you will plainly diſcover the Hiſtory of the Flood, and the chief Circumſtances thereof, as related in Scripture.

THE God Routren, who is the grand Deſtroyer of all created Beings, reſolv'd one Day to drown all Mankind, pretending he had juſt Reaſons to be diſſatisfied with their Behaviour. This Deſign was not kept ſo ſecret, but it was found out by Vichnou, Preſerver of all Creatures, who you will find, my Lord, obliged them in a moſt ſignal Manner on this Occaſion, for he diſcover'd the very Day on which the Flood was to happen. Though his Power did not extend ſo far as to ſuſpend the Execution of what the God Routren had reſolved upon, yet, as he was the God Preſerver of all created Beings, this gave him a Right to prevent, if poſſible, the pernicious Effects of it. The Method he took for that Purpoſe was as follows.

HE one Day appear'd to Sattiavarti, his great Confident, and privately aſſur'd him that an univerſal Flood would ſoon happen; that the Earth would be cover'd with Water, and that Routren's Deſign was no leſs than that of thereby deſtroying all Mankind, and every kind of Animal. He nevertheleſs aſſur'd him, that he himſelf need not be under the leaſt Apprehenſions; for that in ſpite of Routren, he would find Opportunity to preſerve him, and to take ſuch Meaſures that the World ſhould afterwards be repeopled. His Deſign was to make a wonderful Bark riſe up on a ſudden, at a Time when Routren ſhould leaſt ſuſpect any ſuch Thing, and to ſtore it with a large Proviſion of Souls, and Seeds of Beings, eight hundred and forty Millions at leaſt. As for Sattiavarti, he, at the Time of the Flood, was to be upon a very high Mountain, which he pointed out to him very exactly. Some Time after, Sattiavarti, as had been foretold him, perceiv'd a numberleſs Multitude of Clouds drawing together, but beheld with Unconcern the Storm which was gathering over the Heads of the Guilty, when the moſt dreadful Rain that had ever been ſeen, pour'd down from the Skies; the Rivers ſwell'd, and ſpread themſelves with Rapidity over the Surface of the whole Earth; the Sea broke its appointed Bounds, and mixing with the Rivers, which now had left their Channels, ſoon cover'd the higheſt Mountains. Trees, Animals, Men, Cities, Kingdoms, were all drown'd; in a word, all animated Beings were inſtantly deſtroy'd.

IN the mean Time, Sattiavarti, with ſome of his Penitents, had withdrawn to the appointed Mountain, where he waited for the Succour which the God had promiſed him. However, this did not prevent his being ſeiz'd with ſome ſhort Intervals of Terror. As the Water gather'd Strength continually as it roll'd, and each Moment drew nearer to his Aſylum, he was every now and then in a Panic. But that very Inſtant he thought would be his laſt, he beheld the Bark which was to ſave him. No ſooner did he ſet his Eyes upon it, than he immediately got into it with all the Devotees in his Company, and alſo the eight hundred and forty Millions of Souls and Seeds of Beings.

THE Difficulty now was how to ſteer the Bark, and to preſerve it from the Impetuoſity of the Waves, which raged with prodigious Violence; but Vichnou took care of this; for immediately aſſuming the Shape of a Fiſh, he ſteer'd the Ship with his Tail, as though it had been a Rudder. The God, who was now both Fiſh and Pilot, play'd his Part ſo well, that Sattiavarti waited very quietly in his Aſylum, till ſuch Time as the Waters were run off from the Surface of the Earth.

THE Circumſtance, my Lord, you ſee is ſo plain, that a Perſon of very little Penetration may plainly diſcover in this Relation, notwithſtanding its being clouded over with Fiction, and work'd up in ſo groteſque a Manner, the Particulars which the ſacred cred Writings inform us concerning the Deluge, the Ark, and the Preſervation of Noah and his Family.

BUT the Indians did not ſtop here; for after having diſguiſed Noah under the Name of Sattiavarti, they may poſſibly have applied the moſt ſingular Incidents in Abraham's Hiſtory to Brama. Here follows certain Incidents, which, in my Opinion, bear a great Reſemblance to the Original from whence they were borrow'd.

IN the firſt Place, the Conformity of the two Names ſeems to ſtrengthen my Conjectures; for 'tis plain that the Word Brama does not differ very much in Sound from Abraham. It were to be wiſh'd, that the Literati, in their deducing of Etymologies, had not adopted ſeveral which are leſs reaſonable, and leſs forc'd.

THIS Brama, whoſe Name comes ſo near to that of Abraham, was married to a Wife, whom all the Indians in general call Saraſvadi. Do you, my Lord, judge of the Weight which the Name of this Woman adds to my firſt Conjecture. The two laſt Syllables of the Word Saraſvadi, are, in the Indian Language, an honourable Termination; ſo that Vadi anſwers pretty nearly to the Engliſh Word Madam. We meet with this Termination in ſeveral Names of Women of a diſtinguiſh'd Character. As for Inſtance, in that of Parvadi, Wife of Routren. From hence 'tis evident, that the two firſt Syllables of Saraſvadi, which probably make the whole Name of Brama's Wife, reduce themſelves to Sara, which is the Name of Sarah, Wife of Abraham.

THERE is, however, ſomething ſtill more ſingular than all this. Brama among the Indians, as Abraham among the Jews, was the Chief of ſeveral Caſtes or different Tribes. Both Nations agree very exactly in the Number of theſe Tribes. At Tcherapali, where is now the moſt famous Temple in all India, a Feſtival is annually celebrated, at which a venerable old Man walks with twelve Children before him, to repreſent, as the Indians ſay, the twelve Tribes of the principal Caſtes. 'Tis indeed true, that ſome Doctors think this old Man repreſents Vichnou, but neither the Learned nor the common People agree with them in this Particular, but univerſally affirm, that Brama is the Chief of all the Tribes.

BE that as it will, I humbly preſume, that in ſearching for the Doctrine of the Hebrews in that of the Indians, 'tis not neceſſary the Circumſtances ſhould agree in every Particular. The Indians frequently aſcribe to ſeveral Perſons, what the Scripture relates of one only; or join together in one, what the ſacred Writings divide into ſeveral. But this Difference, ſo far from deſtroying our Conjectures, muſt rather ſupport them; and, in my Opinion, too affected a Reſemblance would make the whole ſuſpected.

THIS being ſuppoſed, I proceed to relate to your Lordſhip thoſe Particulars which the Indians have borrow'd from the Hiſtory of Abraham, whether they aſcribe it to Brama, or to ſome other among their Gods and Heroes.

THE Indians honour the Memory of one of their Penitents, who, in the ſame Manner as the Patriarch Abraham, was juſt upon the Point of ſacrificing his Son to one of the Gods of the Country. This God had required this Victim of him, but was contented with the Father's Obedience, and would not ſuffer him to put his Son to Death. Some however affirm, that the Child was ſacrificed, but that God afterwards raiſed him from the Dead.

I MET with a Cuſtom, in one of the Indian Caſtes, I mean that call'd the Caſte of Thieves, which very much ſurprized me. Your Lordſhip is not to imagine, though there is an entire Tribe of Thieves among theſe People, that all who exerciſe this honourable Profeſſion are collected into one particular Body, or have, excluſive of all others, a Privilege to thieve. It means no more, than that all the Indians of this Caſte are prodigiouſly addicted to thieving; but unhappily, they are not the only People a Man is to guard againſt.

THIS premiſed, which I preſume is not improper, I return to my Hiſtory. I find that the Members of this Caſte uſe Circumciſion; but 'tis not practiſed on Children, but on Perſons of about twenty Years of Age. None but the principal Members of the Caſte are obliged to practiſe this Ceremony. 'Tis of great Antiquity, and 'twould be difficult to diſcover, whence a People, who are entirely given up to Idolatry, ſhould have borrow'd it.

You have, my Lord, ſeen the Hiſtory of Noah and the Flood in Vichnou and Sattiavarti; that of Abraham in Brama and Vichnou. Your Lordſhip will undoubtedly be pleaſed to find the Hiſtory of Moſes in that of the ſame Gods; and I am perſuaded you will find it leſs disfigur'd than the preceding ones.

NOTHING, I think, can more juſtly hit the Character of Moſes, than the Vichnou of the Indians metamorphoſed into Chrichnen. For firſt, Chrichnen in the Indian Language ſignifies Black; by which is meant, that Chrichnen came from a Country whoſe Inhabitants are of that Colour. The Indians add, that one of Chrichnen's neareſt Relations, who was an Infant, being laid in a Cradle, was expoſed on a great River, where he was in manifeſt Danger of periſhing. That he was taken from thence, and being a very beautiful Babe, was carried to a great Princeſs, who had him fed, and afterwards took care of his Education.

I CANNOT tell why the Indians have aſcrib'd this Incident to one of Chrichnen's Relations, rather than to Chrichnen himſelf. What, my Lord, muſt be done in this Caſe? My Buſineſs is to give you a bare Narration of Facts, and not to diſguiſe the Truth for the ſake of making a greater Conformity between the Incidents. 'Twas not therefore Chrichnen, but one of his Relations, who was brought up in the Palace of a great Princeſs. Here the Compariſon with Moſes is defective, but now follows what will in ſome meaſure compenſate that Defect.

No ſooner was Chrichnen born, but he alſo was expoſed in a great River, to prevent his falling a Victim to the King's Anger, who was reſolved to put him to Death the Moment he ſhould come into the World. The River, out of Veneration for the Child, ſmooth'd its Surface, and would not ſuffer its Waters to hurt ſo precious a Charge. The Child was taken out of this inconſtant Element, and brought up among the Shepherds. He afterwards married with the Daughters of thoſe Shepherds, and for a long Time kept the Flocks of his Fathers-in-Law. The young Man ſoon diſtinguiſh'd himſelf from the reſt of his Companions, who elected him for their Chief, when he perform'd Wonders in protecting the Flocks and thoſe who kept them. He put the King to Death, who had threatened them with a bloody War, and was purſued by his Enemies, when finding himſelf unable to make head againſt them, he withdrew towards the Sea, which immediately contracted its Waters to open them a Paſſage, after which they ſuddenly cloſed, and thereby overwhelm'd all his Purſuers; by which means he eſcap'd their Cruelty.

WHAT Man, my Lord, after having heard this Incident, but would firmly believe that the Indians knew Moſes under the Name of Vichnou, metamorphoſed into Chrichnen? But to the Knowledge of this famous Leader of God's People, they have join'd that of ſeveral Cuſtoms, written by him in the Pentateuch, as well as of ſeveral Laws by him promulgated, and obſerv'd ſince his Time.

AMONG theſe Cuſtoms, which the Indians muſt certainly have borrow'd from the Jews, and which they ſtill obſerve, I reckon frequent Bathings, Purifications, an extreme Horror and Averſion to dead Carcaſſes, whoſe bare Touch they think would make them unclean; the different Order and Diſtinction of Caſtes; the Law which abſolutely prohibits one Caſte or Tribe to marry into another. I ſhould never have done, were I to go through the ſeveral Particulars, and ſhall therefore only preſent your Lordſhip with a few Remarks which are not often met with in the Works of the Learned.

I WAS acquainted with an Indian Bramin, a Man of a very ſuperior Genius, who told me the following Story, the Senſe of which, he ſaid, he himſelf did not underſtand, when he was an Idolater. The moſt celebrated Sacrifice among the Eaſt-Indians is call'd Ekiam, in which a Sheep is the Victim. A kind of Prayer is repeated in it, when they pronounce the following Words with a loud Voice; When will the Saviour be born? when will the Redeemer appear?

THIS Sacrifice of a Sheep bears, in my Opinion, a great Affinity with that of the Paſchal Lamb; for we are here to obſerve, that as all the Jews were obliged to eat their Portion of the Victim, ſo the Bramins, though they are not allow'd to eat Meat, have nevertheleſs a Diſpenſation for it on the Day of the Sacrifice of Ekiam, and are obliged by their Law to eat of the Victim Sheep, which they divide among themſelves.

SEVERAL Indians worſhip Fire, and their Gods themſelves have ſacrificed Victims to that Element. There is a particular Injunction with regard to the Sacrifice of Oman, by which they are commanded to keep a perpetual Fire, and never to let it go out. The Perſon who aſſiſts at the Ekiam, muſt take care to ſupply it every Morning and Evening with Wood, which agrees pretty nearly with the Command in Leviticus, Chap. vi. Verſe 12 and 13. And the Fire upon the Altar ſhall be burning in it, it ſhall not be put out; and the Prieſt ſhall burn Wood on it every Morning.—— The Indians have diſcover'd a ſtill greater Veneration for Fire, for they threw themſelves into the Midſt of the Flames. Your Lordſhip will agree with me, that they had better not have added this cruel Cuſtom to the other Particulars they have borrow'd from the Jews on that Head. The Indians alſo entertain a high Idea of Serpents, which they believe have ſomething divine in them, and that the bare ſeeing them brings Happineſs along with it; for which Reaſon great Numbers worſhip theſe Creatures, and pay them the utmoſt Reſpect; but notwithſtanding this, theſe ungrateful Animals don't therefore ſpare their Votaries, but on the contrary bite them very cruelly. Had the brazen Serpent which Moſes ſhew'd the People of God, whoſe bare Sight cured Diſeaſes, been of as blood-thirſty a Nature as the living Serpents in the Indies, I very much queſtion whether the Jews would ever have been tempted to worſhip it.

LASTLY, let me add the great Humanity of the Indians for their Slaves, to whom they are almoſt as kind as if they were their own Children. They take the utmoſt Care of their Education, provide them all Things with a liberal Hand, ſo that they want neither Clothes or Victuals; they likewiſe beſtow them in Marriage, and generally manumize them. Would not one conclude, that Moſes had calculated the Precepts which we read in Leviticus upon that Head, equally for the Jews and Indians.

How can we therefore, my Lord, any longer doubt, but the Indians had antiently ſome Knowledge of the Law of Moſes? What they alſo mention of their Law, and of Brama their Legiſlator, is, in my Opinion, ſo clear, that it will be impoſſible for us to ſuſpend any longer our Belief on that Head.

BRAMA gave the Law to Man; that is, the Vedam, or Book of the Law, which the Indians look upon as infallible and unerring. They aſſert that this is the pure and uncorrupted Word of God, dictated by Abadam, i. e. he who cannot err, and who eſſentially ſpeaks Truth. The Vedam, or Law of the Indians, is divided into four Parts; but there was antiently a fifth, according to the learned Indians, which Time has depriv'd them of, and that there is no Poſſibility of its ever being recover'd again.

THE Indians have an inexpreſſible Veneration for the Law which they received from Brama. The profound Awe with which they liſten to it when read; the Choice of Perſons for reading it to the People; the Preparations which are to be made on that Account, and a thouſand other Circumſtances, correſpond exactly with what has been taught us concerning the Jews, with reſpect to the ſacred Law, and to Moſes who deliver'd it to them.

THE Misfortune, my Lord, is, that the Indians have their Law in ſuch great Eſteem and Veneration, that they conceal it from the Chriſtians with the moſt religious Secrecy. However, ſome of their Doctors have given me Inſight enough into it, as will enable me to prove, that the Books of the Law of the pretended Brama, are borrow'd from the Pentateuch of Moſes.

THE firſt Part of the Vedam, which they call Irroucou-Vedam, treats of the firſt Cauſe, and the Manner in which the World was created. The moſt remarkable Circumſtance they related to me on this Head, with regard to our Subject, is, that in the Beginning there was nothing but God and the Waters, and that God was carried on the Waters. We may eaſily obſerve an Affinity between this Circumſtance and the firſt Chapter of Geneſis.

SEVERAL Bramins have aſſur'd me, that there are a great Number of moral Precepts in the third Book, entitled, Sama-Vedam. This Doctrine appear'd to me to bear a very near Relation to the moral Precepts with which the Book of Exodus is interſperſed.

THE fourth Book, entitled Adarana-Vedam, contains the different Sacrifices which are to be offer'd; the Qualities requiſite in the Victims; the Manner of building the Temples, and the different Feſtivals that are to be celebrated. The Idea of theſe, without ſtraining our Conjectures, we may naturally ſuppoſe to have been borrow'd from the Books of Leviticus and Deuteronomy.

IN fine, my Lord, that not ſo much as one ſingle Circumſtance may be wanting to complete the Parallel; as Moſes receiv'd the Law on the famous Mountain of Sinai, ſo Brama was with the Vedam on the celebrated Mountain of Mahamerou. This Indian Mountain was call'd Meros by the Greeks, on which, they tell us, Bacchus was born, and that it was choſen by the Gods for the Place of their Reſidence. The modern Indians ſay, that their Chorcams, or different Paradiſes, are on this Mountain.

It may not be improper, my Lord, after having been thus diffuſive on Moſes and the Law, to make ſome mention of Miriam, Siſter to that great Prophet. I am greatly miſtaken if the Indians had not ſome little Knowledge of her Hiſtory.

The Scripture relates, that Miriam, after the miraculous Paſſage of the Red-Sea, aſſembled the Iſraelitiſh Women; that ſhe took Inſtruments of Muſic into her Hand, and fell a dancing with her Companions, and ſinging the Praiſes of the Almighty. Here follows a Circumſtance of the ſame Import, which the Indians relate of their famous Lakeboumi. This Woman, as well as Miriam, Moſes's Siſter, eſcap'd the Dangers of the Sea by a kind of Miracle. No ſooner was ſhe on Shore, but ſhe made a magnificent Ball, at which all the Gods and Goddeſſes danced to the Sound of Inſtruments.

It would be no difficult Matter for me, after having proceeded thus far with the Books of Moſes, to go on with the other hiſtorical Books of the Scripture, and to find Incidents in the Tradition of the Indians, ſufficient to continue my Compariſon. But fearing leſt this would tire your Lordſhip, I ſhall content myſelf with preſenting you with one or two Hiſtories more, that ſtruck me moſt, and make beſt for my Subject.

The firſt which preſents itſelf, is that which the Indians publiſh under the Name of Arichandiren. This Man was a very antient King of India, from the ſeveral Circumſtances of whoſe Life (certain little Particulars and his Name excepted) we may conclude that he is the ſame with Job.

The Gods met one Day in their Chorcam, or Paradiſe of Delights; Devendiren the God of Glory preſided in this illuſtrious Aſſembly, which was crouded with Gods and Goddeſſes: The moſt famous Penitents had alſo a Place in it, particularly the ſeven chief Anchorets.

After ſome indifferent Diſcourſes had paſs'd between them, the following Queſtion was propoſed, viz. whether it be poſſible to find a faultleſs Prince among Mankind. Almoſt all of them aſſerted, that there was not one but was ſubject to great Vices; and the Partizans of this Opinion were headed by Vichouva-Moutren. But the famous Vachichten oppoſed him, and maintain'd ſtrenuouſly that King Arichandiren, his Diſciple, was an unblemiſh'd Prince. Vichouva-Moutren, who is of ſo imperious a Temper, that he cannot bear Contradiction, fell into a great Paſſion, and aſſur'd the Gods he would ſoon ſhew them the Defects of this Prince, in caſe they would give him up entirely into his Hands.

Vachichten accepted the Challenge, when it was ſtipulated, that he whoſe Aſſertion ſhould prove falſe, ſhould give up to the other all the Merit he might have acquir'd by a long Series of Penance: But now poor King Arichandiren became the Victim of this Diſpute; Vichouva-Moutren put him to every kind of Trial, by reducing him to extreme Poverty, diſpoſſeſſing him of his Kingdom, taking away the Life of his only Son, and carrying off his Wife Chandirandi.

However, the Prince, notwithſtanding all theſe Misfortunes, continued ſo gloriouſly ſtedfaſt in the Practice of all the Virtues, that the Gods themſelves, who put him to all thoſe ſharp Trials, would infallibly have ſunk under them; and indeed thoſe Deities rewarded him with uncommon Liberality; they embrac'd him one after another, and even the Goddeſſes themſelves made him their Compliments. They reſtor'd his Wife to him, and rais'd up his Son; after which, Vichouva-Moutren, purſuant to the Agreement, reſign'd all the Merit he had acquir'd to Vachichten, who made a Preſent of it to King Arichandiren, whereupon the vanquiſh'd Vichouva-Moutren went away with great Regret, to begin again a long Series of Penance, in order, if poſſible, to acquire a large Stock of freſh Merit.

THE ſecond Hiſtory I ſhall relate to your Lordſhip, has ſomething more fatal in it, and bears a greater Reſemblance to an Incident in the Hiſtory of Sampſon, than the Fable of Arichandiren does to the Story of Job.

THE Indians aſſert, that their God Ramen undertook once upon a Time the Conqueſt of Ceylan, to ſucceed in which, this Conqueror, though a God, thought proper to make uſe of the following Stratagem. He rais'd an Army of Apes, and ſet an Ape of Diſtinction, call'd Anouman, at their Head; he then caus'd his Tail to be enwrapp'd with ſeveral Pieces of Linnen Cloth, on which ſeveral Veſſels of Oil were pour'd; which being done, they ſet fire to it, when the Ape ſcouring up and down the Country, through Fields of Corn, through Woods, Towns, and Cities, put all into a Flame; inſomuch, that he burnt down every Thing that came in his Way, and almoſt reduc'd the whole Iſland to Aſhes. After ſuch an Expedition as this, 'twas a very eaſy Matter to conquer the whole Iſland, nor did it require the Power of a mighty God to obtain this Conqueſt.

I HAVE poſſibly, my Lord, been a little too prolix on the Conformity of the Doctrine of the Indians with that of the People of God, and ſhall therefore endeavour to attone for it, by contracting what I intended to trouble you with on a ſecond Point, which like the former, I reſolv'd to ſubmit to your ſuperior Judgment and Penetration. I ſhall therefore confine myſelf to a few curſory Reflections, which leave me no Room to doubt that the Indians who live in the moſt inland Parts, had ſome Knowledge of the Chriſtian Religion in the primitive Ages; and that both they, and the Inhabitants of the Coaſt, were inſtructed in it by St. Thomas, and the firſt Diſciples of the Apoſtles.

I BEGIN by the confus'd Idea which the Indians ſtill entertain of the ever-bleſſed Trinity that was formerly preach'd to them. I have already taken notice of the three principal Gods of the Indians, viz. Bruma, Vichnou, and Routren. Indeed moſt of the Heathens affirm them to be three ſeparate and quite different Deities; but ſeveral Nianiguels, or ſpiritual Men, aſſure, that theſe three Gods, though they ſeem to be different, are in reality but one God; that when this God acts with his creative and almighty Power, he is call'd Bruma; and Vichnou, when he preſerves created Beings, and exhibits any Marks of his Goodneſs; and laſtly, that he goes by the Name of Routren, whenever he deſtroys Cities, puniſhes the Guilty, or makes Mankind feel the dread Effects of his juſt Anger.

NOT many Years ſince, a Bramin explain'd the Notion he had of the fabulous Trinity of the Heathens, as follows: We muſt, ſays he, repreſent to ourſelves God and his three different Names, that correſpond to his three chief Attributes, pretty nearly under the Idea of thoſe triangular Pyramids which are rais'd before the Gate of certain Temples.

YOUR Lordſhip may ſuppoſe, that I ſhall not pretend to affirm this Notion of the Indians agrees very exactly with the Chriſtian Syſtem. However, it at leaſt ſhews they once had a purer Light, though it has been ſince clouded by the Difficulties of a Myſtery, which is ſo far above the Reach of Man's weak Reaſon.

THE Particulars which relate to the Myſtery of the Incarnation are ſtill more envelop'd in Fiction. But all the Indians are univerſally agreed, that God had aſſum'd the Fleſh ſeveral Times, and moſt of them aſcribe theſe Incarnations to Vichnou, the ſecond God in their Trinity; and this God, ſay they, never aſſum'd the Fleſh, but in quality of Saviour and Redeemer of Mankind.

YOUR Lordſhip may perceive that I am as conciſe as poſſible; I now paſs to our Sacraments. The Indians ſay, that bathing in certain Rivers will infallibly waſh out every Sin; and that this myſterious Water not only cleanſes the Body, but alſo purifies the Soul after a wonderful Manner. May not this probably be a Tincture ſtill preſerv'd by them of the Idea they once had of Baptiſm?

I HAD not obſerv'd any Thing particular with regard to the bleſſed Sacrament; however, a converted Bramin acquainted me ſome Time ſince, with a Circumſtance which is conſiderable enough to be mention'd in this Place. The Fragments which remain at the Sacrifices, and the Rice which is given to eat in the Temples, are call'd by the Indians Prajadam, ſignifying in our Tongue Divine Grace, and is what we expreſs by the Greek Word Ευχαριστία. That they were acquainted with Confeſſion, is, I believe, pretty manifeſt; and therefore I believe, my Lord, it may not be improper to be a little more diffuſive upon that Head.

'TIS a kind of Maxim among the Indians, that he who confeſſes his Sin ſhall be forgiven. Cheida param chounal Tiroum. They celebrate a Feſtival annually, during which they go and confeſs themſelves on the Bank of a River, in order that their Sins may be entirely blotted out. In the famous Sacrifice of Ekiam, the Wife of him who preſides in it, is oblig'd to confeſs her Sins; to deſcend to the moſt heinous Particulars; and to declare every particular Sin ſhe has committed. An Indian Fiction which was told me on that Head, will corroborate my Conjectures ſtill more.

WHILE Chrichnen was upon Earth, the celebrated Draupadi was married to five famous Brothers, who were all Kings of Maduras. One of theſe Princes on a certain Day ſhot an Arrow at a Tree, and ſtruck down a wonderful Piece of Fruit. This Tree belong'd to a celebrated Penitent, and bore Fruit every Month; and this Fruit was of ſo nouriſhing a Quality, that whoever eat of it did not want any other Food for a Month together. But as in thoſe remote Ages, Mankind dreaded the Curſes of Penitents much more than thoſe of the Gods, the five Brethren were afraid leſt the Hermit ſhould curſe them, and therefore beſought Chrichnen to aſſiſt them in ſo delicate an Affair. The God Vichnou, under the Shape of Chrichnen, ſaid both to them, and to Draupadi, who was alſo preſent, that he ſaw but one Way of repairing ſo great an Evil, which was to make a full Confeſſion of all the Sins they had committed during the whole Courſe of their Lives; that the Tree whence the Fruit had been ſtruck down was ſix Cubits in Height; that the Fruit, in proportion as each of them ſhould confeſs his Sins, ſhould riſe a Cubit higher in the Air, and that at the End of the laſt Confeſſion, it ſhould hang on the Tree as before.

THIS Remedy was thought to be a ſevere one, but they were obliged either to ſubmit to it, or be obnoxious to the Curſes of a Penitent. At laſt, the five Brethren came to a Reſolution at once, and conſented to make a general Confeſſion of all their Sins; the Difficulty was to prevail upon the Woman to do the ſame, which gave them the utmoſt Uneaſineſs; for from the Inſtant ſhe heard ſhe was to confeſs her Sins, ſhe ſeem'd wholly given up to Secrecy and Silence. However, as they ſet the dreadful Conſequences of the [a] Sanjas' Curſes in the ſtrongeſt Light, they at laſt made her promiſe to perform every Thing they ſhould require at her Hands.

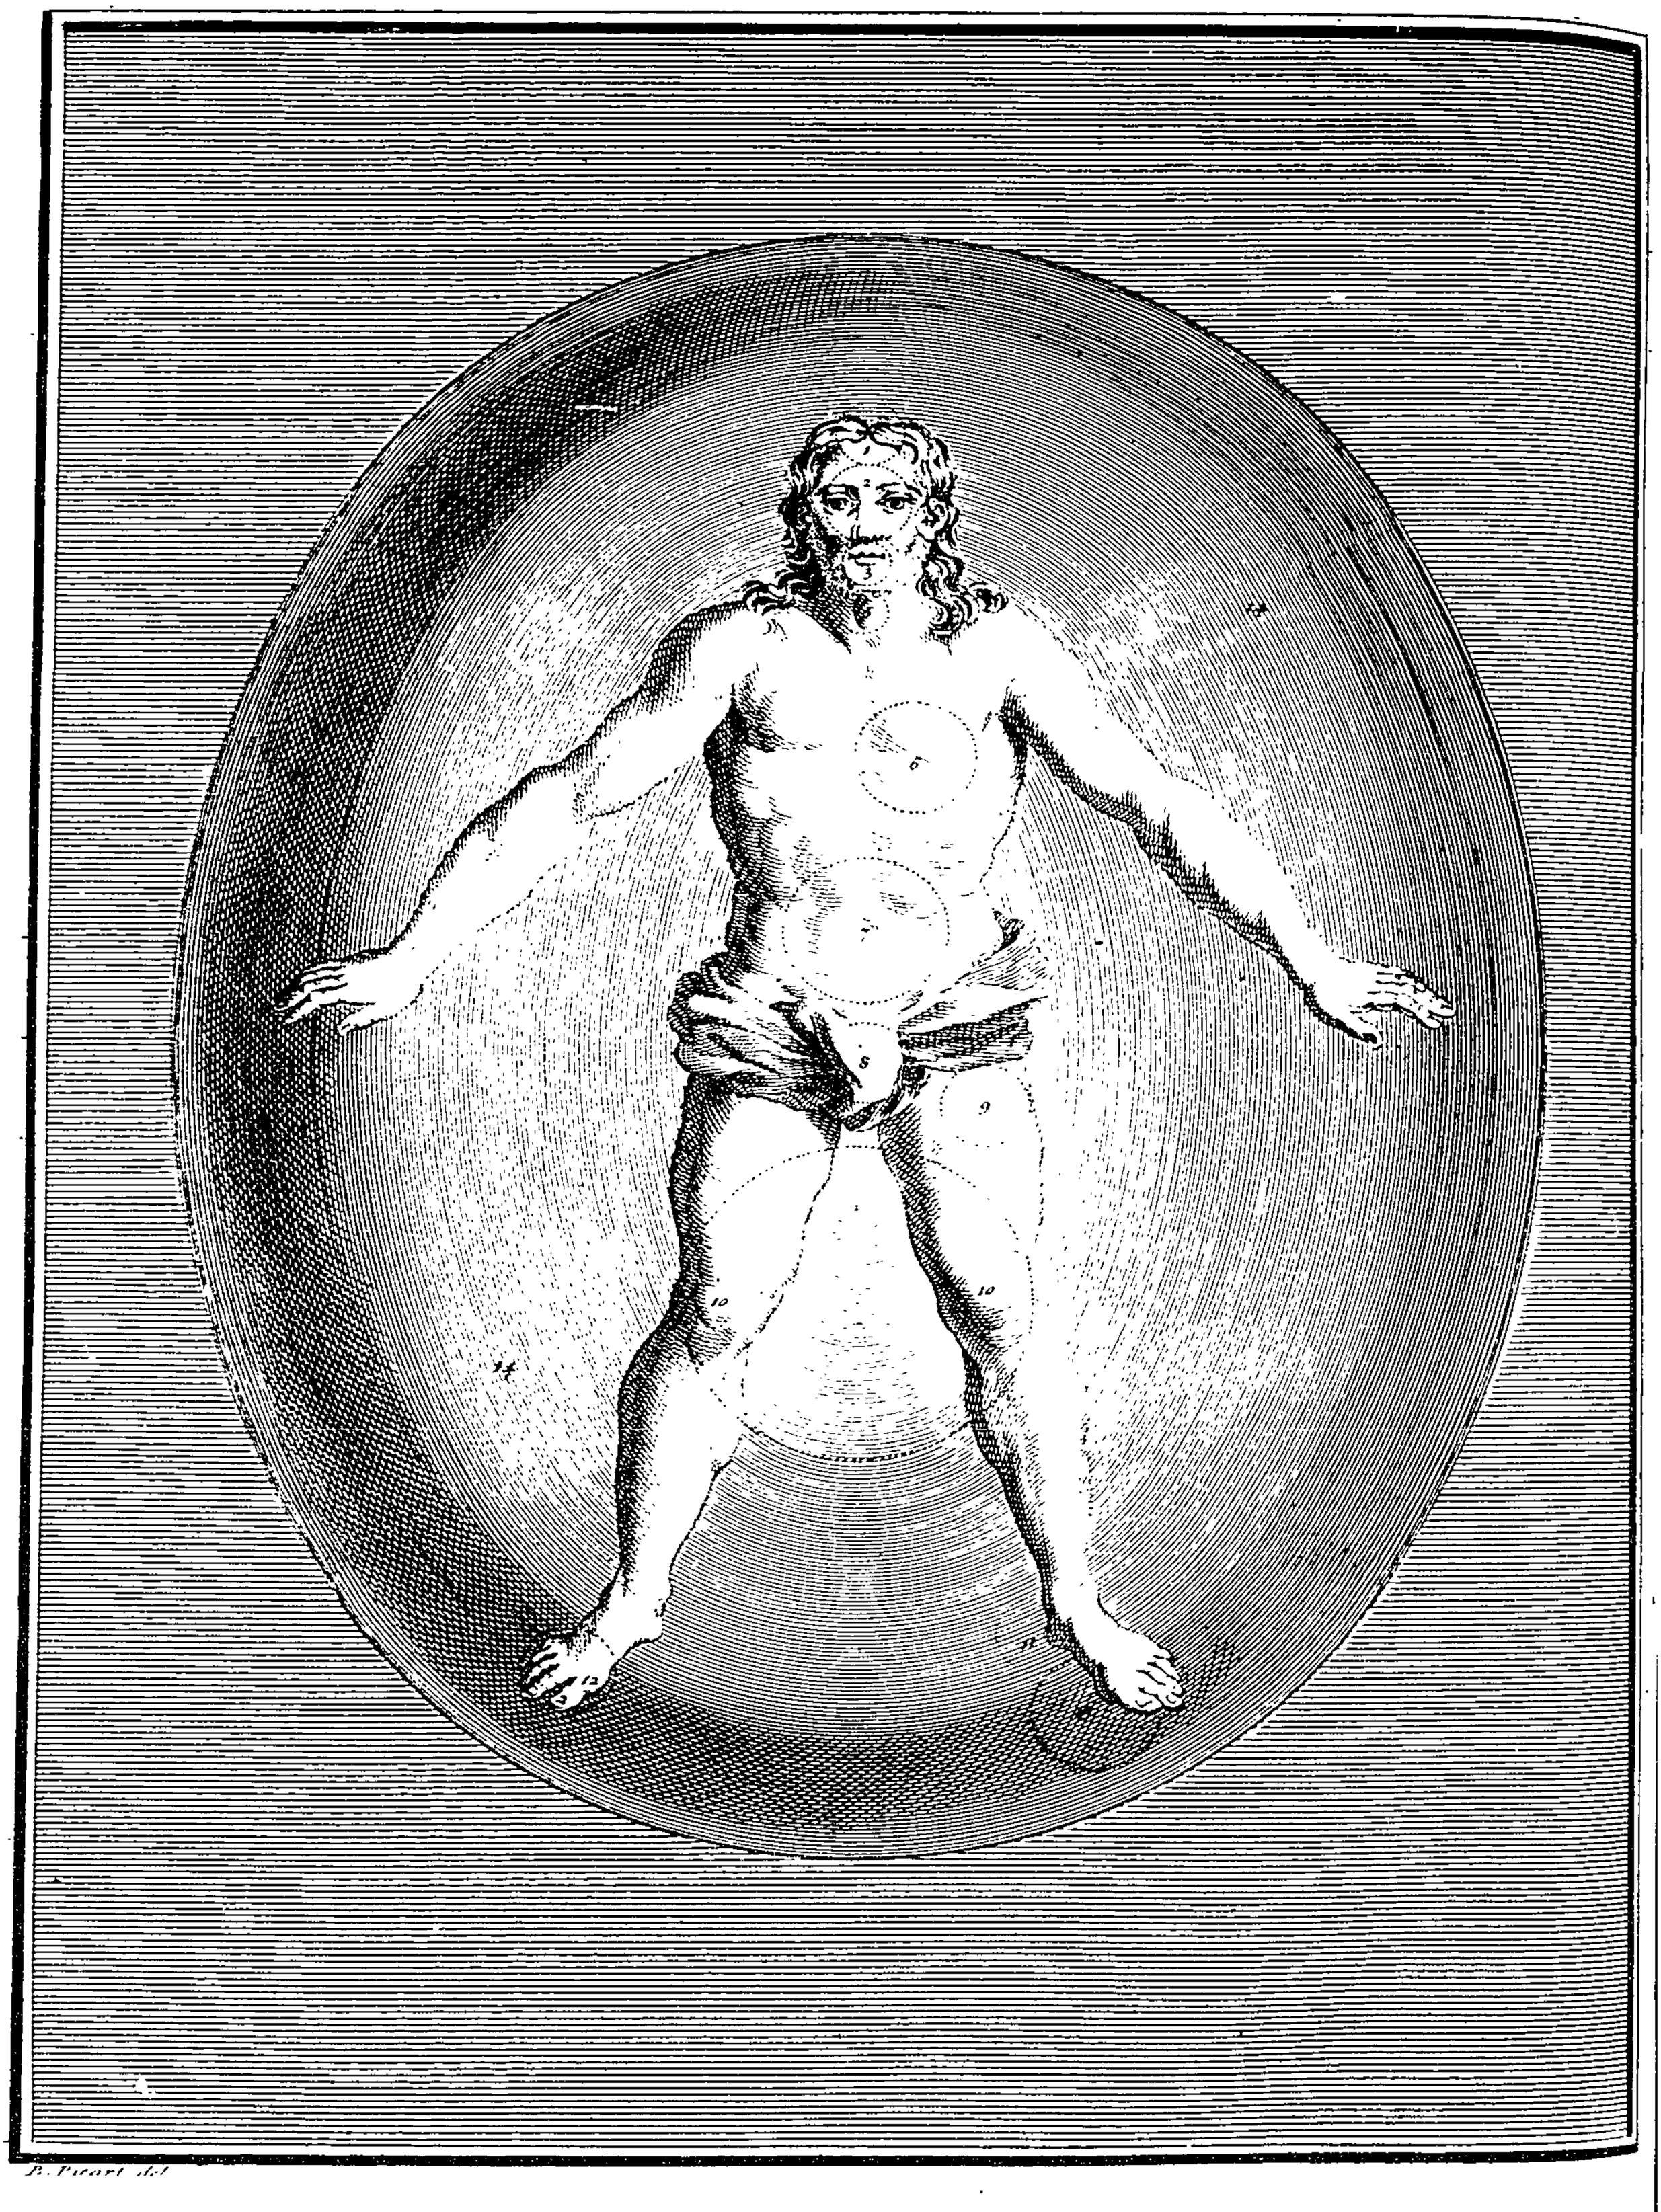
HAVING made this Promiſe, the eldeſt Prince began this ungrateful Ceremony, and made a very exact Confeſſion of the ſeveral Particulars of his whole Life. As he ſpoke, the Fruit roſe inſenſibly higher, and was not rais'd above a Cubit at the End of the firſt Confeſſion. The four other Princes follow'd the Example of their eldeſt Brother, when lo! the ſame Miracle happen'd; that is, the Fruit at the End of the Confeſſion of the fifth, was rais'd juſt five Cubits higher.

THERE remain'd but one Cubit more, and now 'twas Draupadi's Turn; who after a thouſand Struggles began her Confeſſion, and the Fruit roſe inſenſibly higher. She told them ſhe had not omitted a ſingle Circumſtance in it, and yet the Fruit wanted half a Cubit of the Tree. 'Twas manifeſt ſhe had either forgot, or rather omitted, ſome Particulars. The five Brothers beſought her with Tears, not to ruin herſelf by a falſe Modeſty, and at the ſame Time involve them in the ſame Deſtruction. However, their Prayers were ineffectual, when Chrichnen coming to their Aſſiſtance, ſhe confeſs'd a Sin relating to Thought, which ſhe would willingly have conceal'd. Scarce had ſhe ended, when the Fruit completed its miraculous Progreſs, and went of itſelf, and cleav'd to the Branch, where it had hung before.

I SHALL here conclude the long Letter with which I have taken the Liberty to trouble your Lordſhip, wherein I have given you an account of the ſeveral Particulars I have learnt among the Indians, who in all probability were formerly Chriſtians, but afterwards, from Time immemorial, relaps'd into the Errors of Paganiſm. The Miſſionaries of our Company, in imitation of St. Francis Xavier, have now endeavour'd for upwards of an hundred Years to reſtore them to the Knowledge of the true God, and the Purity of the evangelical Worſhip.

YOUR Lordſhip may obſerve, that at the ſame Time we make thoſe abandon'd People taſte the Sweetneſs of our bleſſed Saviour's Yoke, we endeavour to do the Literati in Europe ſome Service, by the Diſcoveries we make in thoſe Countries, with which they are not ſufficiently acquainted. Nothing but your Lordſhip's exquiſite Penetration, and uninterrupted Familiarity with the Learned among the Antients, are able to ſupply what may be wanting in us, with regard to the Knowledge we acquire among theſe People. If theſe new Hints are of any Service to Religion, no one knows how to make a better Uſe of them than your Lordſhip. I am, with the moſt profound Reſpect,

My Lord,



Your Lordſhip's moſt Humble,

And moſt Obedient Servant,

BOUCHET,

Miſſionary of the Company of Jeſus.

SUPPLEMENT

To the Preceding

IN WHICH

Several CEREMONIES in the Religious Worſhip of the EAST-INDIANS are explain'd.

BRAMA.

SOME have been of Opinion, that [a] Brama is the ſame with Pythagoras; but it is certain the Hiſtory of the God, and that of the Philoſopher, ſcarce agree in one Particular. Beſides, Pythagoras never went into India; and if he has merited an Apotheoſis, it could have been only by the Doctrine of Tranſmigration, which he himſelf firſt imbib'd in Egypt, whence it was carried into India by the Egyptians who traded into thoſe Parts. It has likewiſe been thought, that the Brama of the antient and modern Indians, might be the Hermes Treſmegiſtus of the Egyptians, or the Xaca or Xekia of the Japoneſe and Chineſe. We ſhall wave the Diſcuſſion of theſe Particulars, as it would ſpin this Diſſertation to too great a Length.

BRAMA is the firſt Perſon of a kind of Trinity in the Heathen Theology. This firſt Perſon is not only the grand Progenitor of all Mankind, but has alſo created as many Worlds as he has conſiderable Parts in his Body. The Syſtem of this Creation, which we have borrow'd from Kircher's China illuſtrated, differs widely from that of the [b] Banians, and that related in Ch. 1. Part I. of the Diſſertation on the Cuſtoms and Religion of the Bramins.

" THE Bramins, as Kircher tells us, relate, that the firſt World, which is ſituated " over Heaven, was made from Brama's Brain; the ſecond from his Eyes, the third from " his Mouth, the fourth from his Left Ear, the fifth from the Palate of his Mouth and " Tongue, the ſixth from his Heart, the ſeventh from his Belly, the eighth from his " Privities, the ninth from his Left Thigh, the tenth from his Knees, the eleventh " from his Heel, the twelfth from the Toes of his Right Foot, the thirteenth from the " Sole of his Left Foot, and the fourteenth from the Air with which Brama is ſur- " rounded. They pretend, that there is ſome Affinity or Relation between theſe four- " teen Worlds, and the Parts of Brama's Body; and add, That all ſuch Men as are " form'd in theſe different Worlds, partake of the Character and Inclinations peculiar to " each of them, which they preſerve in this World as long as they live. Thus thoſe " created in the firſt World are wiſe and learned, thoſe of the ſecond penetrating, thoſe of " the third eloquent, of the fourth cunning and artful, of the fifth gluttonous, of the " ſixth generous and ſplendid, of the ſeventh niggardly, &c. thoſe of the eighth are ad- " dicted to Pleaſures, particularly thoſe of Love; the ninth are laborious, the tenth Coun- " try People and Ruſtics; the eleventh conſiſt of the Dregs of the People, and are em- " ploy'd in the loweſt Offices; the twelfth infamous Wretches and vile Raſcals, the thir- " teenth are unjuſt and mercileſs Wretches, the fourteenth are ingenious and dextrous " People." On theſe Principles the Bramins ground all the Rules of Phyſiognomy, and think that they, by looking on a Perſon's Face, can tell the particular World from whence he came originally; after which, they boldly pronounce the Character and Inclinations of the Perſon whoſe Face they have thus examin'd.

ALTHO' the Theology of the Indians be very much confuſed, it is nevertheleſs manifeſt that they aſcribe to Brama, the [a] Direction of the Fate of Mankind and the Deſtiny of the World, the Diſpoſal of Events, and their various Revolutions. But this is much more than they ought to aſcribe to a God, who, tho' he be a Creator, is nevertheleſs dependant, and a created Being; ſince the Bramins relate, that he is the Son of Quivelinga, who is no other than Priapus, or Nature. But we will endeavour to make good their Aſſertions: Might we not reconcile their Contradictions, by ſuppoſing Brama to be Providence, who, according to the Syſtem of the eaſtern Idolaters, muſt be conſider'd as the Daughter of Nature, which they univerſally allow to be the Supreme Being?

WHAT we have now mention'd of Brama, obliges us to relate an ingenious Fiction of the Bramins, by which we ſee the Idea they have of the Creation of the World, and which induces us to believe that they look [b] upon Matter as the Eſſence of the Deity itſelf[c]. " They tell us, the Spider is the firſt Cauſe and firſt Principle of all Things; that " the Univerſe was produced by that Inſect's ſpinning out its own Intrails and Belly, ſo " that it brought forth, firſt the Elements, and ſecondly the celeſtial Globes; that it " governs all Things by its Wiſdom and Providence, directs every Thing by its Conduct, " and that Things are to continue in this State till the End of Ages, which will never hap- " pen till this Inſect ſhall have withdrawn into its Body the ſeveral Threads or Filaments,

[b] See in the following Article, what the Bramins have eſtabliſh'd with regard to the Bud of the World; this Notion may be found to agree with that of the Soul of the World, maintain'd by ſome antient Philoſophers. The Indians think, that not only our Souls, but thoſe of all the animated Beings in Nature, are Portions or Parts of that univerſal Soul. They go farther; " God, ſay they, according to Bernier, not only produc'd or drew our Souls out " of his own Subſtance, but likewiſe every material and corporeal Being in the Univerſe. Creation is nothing elſe " but God's expanding his own Subſtance, and Deſtruction no more than his contracting or drawing it again into " himſelf, which at the laſt Day will be general. From all which their Doctors conclude, that there is nothing " real in whatever we imagine we ſee, hear, ſmell, taſte, or touch. The whole World is no more than a kind of " Dream, and a mere Illuſion of Fancy; inaſmuch as all this Multiplicity and Diverſity of Things, which we behold, " are but one and the ſame Thing, i. e. God himſelf. But if you ſhould ask them to explain in what Manner the Di- " vinity is thus expanded, the Dilation and Contraction of Subſtances, all the various Modifications of Nature, and " how can it poſſibly be, that God, who is not corporeal, but Bixpek, (a Term perhaps anſwering to the Word in- " viſible,) ſhould yet be divided into ſo many Portions of Bodies and Souls, they anſwer only by Compariſons. God, " ſay they, is like a boundleſs Ocean, in which ſeveral Phials fill'd with Water float up and down. Theſe Phials, " in what Part ſoever they may be, are ever on the ſame Ocean and on the ſame Water; and if the Phials ſhould " happen to break, the Waters contained in them would always reunite to the whole from which they had been ſe- " parated. Or elſe they will tell you, that God reſembles Light, which, tho' it be the ſame in all Parts of the " Univerſe, does nevertheleſs vary itſelf ſeveral Ways. All theſe different Compariſons induce one to believe they " have very confuſed Notions of theſe Matters. Beſides, a Man muſt underſtand their Language very well, and be " able to read their Books, before he can form a true Judgment of their Syſtems. Extracts which perhaps are " given without any Manner of Connection, and Diſputes or Arguments carried on by Word of Mouth, cannot " alone inable us to judge of the Opinions of a Nation, whoſe Religion and Philoſophy are conceal'd under Enig- " mas and allegorical Fictions."

" which had iſſued out of it, when all Things will be deſtroy'd, and the World no longer " exiſt but in the Belly of a Spider."

[a] BRAMA is often repreſented in the ſame Manner as the annex'd Figure; but Della Valle gives us another Deſcription of its Idol, and aſſures, that he himſelf ſaw it ſo in India. " There is, ſays he, a Temple dedicated to Brama in Hagra— its Statue ſtands " in the midſt of the Temple, among a great Number of Idols of white Marble. It " has ſeveral Arms and three Faces, at leaſt I did not ſee any more, it being impoſſible " for me to diſcern whether there were a fourth, or more behind it. This Statue has " not the leaſt Drapery about it, and is repreſented with a long, ſharp, but ill-ſhap'd " Beard, like all the reſt of the Figure, which has too prominent a Belly in proportion to " its Height. This Defect ſhould poſſibly be aſcrib'd to the Ignorance of the Sculptor, " unleſs we are to conſider it as a Caprice of the Indians, who perhaps, with the People " of Sumatra, think that the moſt gor-belly'd People are the beſt ſhap'd. This Statue " of Brama ſtands upright; at its Feet are two other ſmall Statues, repreſenting his " Children; and on both Sides of it two Images of Women, a little leſs than Brama, one " to the Right, and the other to the Left, repreſenting this God's two Wives. In another " Corner of the Pagod, to the Left of Brama, two Nudities are placed, repreſenting " bearded Men, which are almoſt of the ſame Height. The laſt Figures repreſent two " Religious, who were formerly Brama's Diſciples."

IXORA.

WE are not to confound Ixora, who is the ſame as Eſwara, with Ixoretta, who, according to Baldæus, Author of a valuable Deſcription of Malabar and Coromandel, is properly the Bud of the World. Some idolatrous Doctors, according to Baldæus, affirm, that one Day the Univerſe dwindled away in ſo extraordinary a Manner, that there remain'd only Ixoretta, who exiſted in the Shape of a Drop of Dew; but that Ixoretta in Proceſs of Time recover'd all his Strength; that this Bud was at firſt no bigger than a Grain of Muſtard-Seed, but afterwards ſwell'd to the Bigneſs of a Pearl, when laſtly it became like an Egg, in which five Elements were contain'd: The Egg was cover'd with ſeven Coats, like thoſe of an Onion, whence Fire and Air iſſued. From the Egg, divided into two unequal Portions, the Heaven and Earth were form'd; and the ſeven Coats were divided in the ſame Manner: Of the upper Part of it ſeven Heavens were form'd, and of the lower ſeven Worlds. Nevertheleſs a Thread or String, which cuts the Egg diametrically thro' the Center, united together, in ſome meaſure, all theſe ſeveral Parts. Ixoretta placed himſelf on the Top of the String. A Mountain was made on the Earth, on the Top of which there appear'd a triangular Figure, having a round Thing in the Middle, which they call Quivelinga. Theſe two Figures repreſent the two Sexes. They add, that Ixoretta and Quivelinga are one and the ſame Thing, and their Opinion is grounded on the near Relation they bear one to the other. See hereafter Lingam. It is very probable, that the Bramins may have borrow'd the Emblem of the Egg, by which they repreſent the World, from the Egyptians; but we may obſerve a conſiderable Difference between the two Syſtems. The Egyptians, in repreſenting the Creator of the Univerſe with an Egg iſſuing out of his Mouth, did not confound the Artiſt with his Work; whereas it does not appear, according to the Principles of the Bramins, that they are diſtinct one from the other. In ſhort, nothing can be more ſilly or trifling, than the Principles which a Man pretends to demonſtrate as clear and certain, when in the eſtabliſhing them, he follows no other Guide than his Imagination[a]. In the whole, it would not perhaps be impoſſible to reconcile this imaginary Bud, which the Indians call Ixoretta, with that Spirit, which, according to Moſes, mov'd upon the Face of the Waters.

[a] Kircher's China illuſtrated.

[b] THE Head of Ixora is adorn'd with long and beautiful Hair; his Face is white and ſhining, and a Creſcent is repreſented on his Head. His three Eyes denote the Extent of his Foreſight and Penetration. Altho' we have here repreſented him under a Figure which ſeems to take up no great Space, yet the Bramins aſſure he is infinite. One Day Brama being deſirous of ſeeing Ixora's Head, he for that Purpoſe took his Flight towards Heaven, but in ſpite of all his Endeavours, he was not ſuffered to gratify his Deſires. On the other Side, Viſtnou, the God of Metamorphoſes or Changes, endeavour'd to pierce through to the Place where Ixora's Feet ſtood: In order to ſucceed in this Attempt, he transform'd himſelf into a Hog, and made a great Hole in the Ground with his Snout; but in vain he endeavour'd to puſh'd forward, for his Snout could never reach the Place where the Feet of the God were. The Body of Ixora is ſo prodigiouſly bulky, that the Serpent Baltegu, who ſurrounds ſeven Worlds, and as many Seas, was not long enough to ſerve him as a Bracelet. An Idolater, who knew more of that Matter than the reſt, reproach'd a Bramin in the moſt injurious Terms, for maintaining, that it was poſſible for Ixora to be comprehended in a Pagod.

IXORA is repreſented ſtanding on a Pedeſtal, with ſixteen Arms, each of which graſps ſomething; thoſe of the Right Side hold Fire, Silver, a Drum, a Pair of Beads, a Rope, a Stick, a Wheel, and a Serpent; thoſe of the Left a Heart, a muſical Inſtrument, a Bell, a China Bowl, a Chain, a Bramin's Head, a Trident, and an Ax or Hatchet. By theſe ſixteen Arms, the Power and Strength of God are repreſented. He has an Elephant's Skin over his Shoulders, and is likewiſe cloth'd with a Tyger's Skin, whoſe Spots repreſent the Stars in the Firmament. He is ſurrounded with a great many Serpents, which poſſibly the Indians, as the Egyptians antiently, have made the Emblem of the Revolution of Ages. He wears a Necklace, at which a little Bell hangs, denoting Ixora's Vigilance: This Necklace is made of the Skin of an Animal, called by the Indians Mandega. He has another Necklace ſet off with Flowers, beſides the above-mention'd; and a third, garniſh'd with ſeveral [c] Heads of Brama; and a fourth, to which the Bones of Chatti, Ixora's Wife, are ty'd. The Theology of the Bramins of Malabar and Coromandel, relate, that this God has two Wives, viz. Chatti Grienga his dearly beloved, and inſeparable Conſort, who reſides behind him, and conceals herſelf in his Hair: [d] As for Chatti his other Wife, ſhe dies, and comes to life annually, in the ſame Manner as Brama; and Ixora, every Time ſhe dies, takes her Bones, and ties them to his fourth Necklace. We muſt not omit, that the Body of this Deity is ſmear'd over with Earth and Aſhes, to denote Generation and Deſtruction.

FROM what was juſt now obſerv'd, it is pretty manifeſt, that Ixora is the Matter, which ſeveral Philoſophers, ancient and modern, ſuppoſed to be infinite and eternal; and that it is commonly confounded with a firſt Cauſe, infinitely ſuperior to Matter, and its Sovereign Mover. Poſſibly this Croud of Gods ador'd by the Eaſt-Indians, may be compoſed only of Genii, (a ſet of Spirits ſubordinate to the Sovereign God) and of Kings and great Men, who for their glorious Actions were rank'd among the Gods. "Several learned Men, ſays Father la Lane, in a [e] Letter of his written to Father Mor-

" gues, are agreed, that there can be but one God, who is a pure Spirit; but they ſay " farther, that Chiven, Vichnou, and the reſt, are his Miniſters or Agents, and that it " is by their Mediation we approach the Throne of the Deity, and receive Bleſſings " from thence." All we can ſay, is, that their Practice would not induce us to think " they believ'd but in one God only: However, theſe are not the only People, who, in religious Matters, deſtroy by their Practice, what they admit in Speculation. As to what relates to the Worſhip of the Statues of thoſe Gods, they fairly own, if Bernier may be credited, that they believe them to be only ſo many Images and Repreſentations. " We pay them Honour, ſay they, merely for the ſake of thoſe they repreſent; " they are lodged in our Pagods, becauſe it is neceſſary, for the better offering up our " Prayers in them, that ſome ſuch Object ſhould ſtrike the Eye, in order to fix the At- " tention; and when we pray, we do not addreſs ourſelves to the Statue, but to him re- " preſented by it: In a Word, we look upon God as the abſolute Maſter, and the ſole " Almighty Power." Bernier adds, that this appear'd to him ſomewhat after the Chriſtian Way of Thinking.

PUDA, the PEXAIOS, &c.

THEY aſſociate to Ixora certain Deities, whom the Malabarians, and the reſt of the Indian Idolaters, call by the Names of Puda, Pexaios, and Pés. Puda is repreſented under the Shape of a ſquat, thick, gor-bellied, beardleſs Man, with three Serpents over his Head. He has one Serpent upon his Left Arm in the Form of a Ring, and two upon his Thighs, and a Shepherd's Crook was ſeen in his Left Hand. The Pexaios and Pés are larger, and wrought with greater Skill than Puda: All of them bear ſome Relation to the rural Gods of the antient Heathens. In fine, if the Reader will give himſelf the Trouble to compare theſe Explications with the Diſſertation on the Manners and the Religion of the Bramins, he will meet with ſeveral Things of the ſame Nature, expreſs'd under different Names, and frequently mix'd with ſuch Ideas as have no Manner of Connection. This Imperfection ariſes from the Confuſion, which is found in the Indian Theology; and the Obſcurity with which Travellers have clouded it, for want of knowing how to diſtinguiſh the Opinions of the ſeveral Sects one from the other. An Indian, who ſhould write on the Chriſtian Religion, would make an odd kind of Rhapſody, were he to confound the various Opinions of Anabaptiſts, Lutherans, Quakers, Calviniſts, and Roman Catholics; and ſhould not only heighten them with the myſtical and allegorical Deſcriptions of the Divines of their different Sects, but interlard his Work with Stories out of the antient and modern Legends.

QUENAVADY.

QUENAVADY is ſeated on a Throne behind a Curtain, which is drawn back, whenever any Devotee comes to pay Homage to him. This God is the eldeſt Son of Ixora: He is repreſented with the Head, the Teeth, and Trunk of an Elephant, with a Creſcent on the Crown of his Head; he has long Hair, large Eyes, broad Ears, red Spots on his Face, if we may ſo call it when we ſpeak of an Elephant; but the reſt of the Body, which gliſters like Gold, is of an human Shape. He has four Arms, and a prodigious wide and prominent Belly; his Loins are girded either with a Piece of Stuff or painted Linen, which hanging down before on his Thighs, is tied under the Navel. He has ſeveral Gold Rings on his Feet; in one of his Hands he holds a Diſcus or Quoit, in another a long Staff, in the third an Inſtrument made in the Shape of a Porenger, and in the fourth a kind of String. Ixora begot Quenavady, in a Solitude to which he had baniſh'd himſelf for having cut off one of Brama's Heads; and the reaſon why that created Deity reſembles an Elephant, is, becauſe his Parents metamorphos'd themſelves into thoſe Creatures, when they begot him: This Transformation was made in the midſt of a Wood, and the Offspring of their Commerce was tainted with the brutiſh Fierceneſs of wild Beaſts. He was as yet but very young, when he one Day had the Impudence to thruſt his Trunk under his Mother's Petticoats, as ſhe was holding him in her Arms; nay, ſome Indian Doctors aſſure, that he did ſomething worſe. The Father provok'd at his Son's Inſolence, employ'd an Expedient, which prov'd of great Service to his Honour; for he lopp'd Quenavady in ſuch a Manner, as made it impoſſible for him to divert himſelf any more in the amorous Way.

THE Indian Doctors repreſent Quenavady as an inſatiable Deity, who devours every Thing that is ſet before him. They relate, that he dwells in the midſt of a Sea of Sugar, in a delicious Place, where Riches and Pleaſure flow with uninterrupted Abundance, ſo that the Senſes may there riot in whatever they can poſſibly luſt after. It is here Quenavady eats, or rather devours perpetually his Victuals. Two Women who ſtand by his Side, are inceſſantly throwing Sugar down his Throat with very large Spoons; and leſt the Uniformity of the Viands ſhould create a Loathing in the God, he has round him ſeveral other Dainties, and a prodigious Quantity of all ſorts of Fruit. Quenavady's Taſte ſeems to agree very well with that of the Age.

IT is to this God the Indians offer the Firſt-Fruits of their Works; Authors ſet his Name at the Head of their Writings; Artificers and Trades-People of all kinds, invoke his Name before they engage in any Work whatſoever. The Indians ſay, that a Man muſt ſerve Quenavady ſix and thirty Years, before he can obtain any Thing he prays for; at the End of twelve Years he moves his Right Ear, though almoſt imperceptibly, which ſignifies, that he requires ſtill twelve Years more Worſhip; after which he moves his Left Ear, to denote they muſt ſerve him the remaining twelve Years with the utmoſt Strictneſs.

THE Fourth of the Moon of Auguſt is a very unlucky Day, in the Opinion of the Indians of Coromandel and Malabar, becauſe of the Curſe which Quenavady utter'd in his Anger againſt the Moon, for laughing at him one Day when he happen'd to fall down. The choleric God proteſted, that whoever ſhould preſume to look on the Moon that Day, ſhould fall into great Misfortunes, and be cut off from his Caſte. The Idolaters, becauſe of this Curſe, confine themſelves in their Houſes the Fourth of the Moon of Auguſt; when they neither undertake the moſt inconſiderable Affair without Doors, or once look into the Water, for fear of ſeeing the Reflection of the Moon in it. In fine, if they chance to be ſo unlucky, as to be out upon a Journey in this Seaſon, they are ſure to cover their Faces very cloſe.

IXORA has other Children, who go by the Name of Quenavady. That ſurnam'd Iſagouraba is repreſented with an Elephant's Head and eleven Arms. Another Quenavady, ſurnam'd Ceuxi, came into the World under a completely human Shape, and was generated from the Sweat of Parameſceri, Ixora's Wife. He was full grown at the Moment of his Birth; the jealous Ixora miſtook the new-born Child for his Wife's Gallant, and without enquiring into the Affair cut off its Head, whence there ſprung a Cocao-Tree. Parameſceri was afflicted at the Rage of her jealous Husband, and for the Death of her Son, who was the miraculous Product of her Sweat, and made heavy Complaints upon that Account. Ixora, on the other Side, confeſs'd his Fault, cut off a white Elephant's Head, and grafted it, while it was juſt reeking from the Body, upon that of the dead

Ceuxi, whom he reſtor'd to Life at the ſame inſtant, to conſole the diſconſolate Parameſceri. [a] Siri-Hanuman, or Hannuvan, call'd Anemonta, in the Diſſertation on the Cuſtoms and Religions of the Bramins, was Son to Ixora and Parameſceri. His Mother occaſion'd his coming into the World under the Shape of an Ape, which was in the following Manner. [b] One Day Parameſceri went with a Ball to her Husband: As ſhe was dancing, ſhe happen'd to caſt her Eyes on a Wood, where ſhe perceiv'd two Apes, who were ſporting together in ſo melting a Manner, that ſhe immediately reſolv'd to leave the Ball, and run up and down the Woods under the Shape of that Animal. She did not intend to continue idle there, having been too much affected with the Pleaſures, in which ſhe had ſeen the Apes indulge themſelves, not to follow their Example: Ixora was therefore oblig'd to follow her into the Woods, when the complaiſant God transform'd himſelf into an Ape, after which they climb'd gently up the Trees, jump'd from Branch to Branch, approach'd one another, began to play little roguiſh Tricks, and, in ſhort, at laſt went to thoſe Lengths, that Siri-Hanuman was got between them. However, Parameſceri reflecting ſeriouſly afterwards on what ſhe had done, was aſham'd to ſee herſelf juſt upon the Point of bringing forth an Ape; ſhe beſought the Wind to rid her of her monſtrous Child, of which ſhe was going to be delivered, and to convey it to ſome other Woman. The Wind, obſequious at her Requeſt, carried the Child into the Womb of the Wife of a Genius, and the Child was brought forth in in due Time. His Father Ixora indulg'd him the Privilege of doing whatever he pleas'd during three Hours and three Quarters every Day. This Ape-God is had in great Veneration by the Indians, a pompous Worſhip was paid him, and the Pagods in which he is ador'd are adorn'd with the utmoſt Magnificence. When the Portugueſe, in 1554, made a Deſcent upon the Iſland of Ceylan, they plunder'd the Temple of the Ape's Tooth, made themſelves Maſters of immenſe Riches, and carried off this precious Relick, the Object of the Religious Worſhip of the Inhabitants of Ceylan, Pegu, Malabar, Bengal, &c. The Shrine in which this Relick was depoſited, was cover'd with Jewels, and they took care not to forget it; an Indian Prince offer'd the Viceroy of Goa ſeven hundred thouſand Ducats of Gold to redeem this ſacred Tooth, but his Propoſal was rejected.

SUPERBENIA is alſo number'd among Ixora's Children, but he ow'd his Birth to the Infidelity of Parameſceri. Here follows the Hiſtory of the Birth of that illegitimate God, who has ſix Faces and twelve Arms. Our hopeful Goddeſs being one Day alone in the Bath, and undreſs'd without doubt, was obſerv'd by ſix jolly Weavers whoſe Stature and Countenance promiſed Wonders. Parameſceri was charm'd with what ſhe ſaw, while on the other Hand, our Weavers were not inform'd with Hearts of Stone. The Lady was beautiful and piercing, the Weavers young and active; in a Word, it was plain both Parties were reciprocally ſtruck, and —— ſomething more enſued: The ſix Gallants and the Goddeſs made quick Work of it, and a Boy with ſix Faces and twelve Arms ſprung from this Intrigue. The Child being grown up, was agreeable in Ixora's Eyes, who own'd it for his, becauſe of his Wit.

PATRAGALI, Daughter of Ixora, was born from a Running, with which Wiſtnou was troubled, which entring into Ixora's Body, iſſued afterwards by the Eye of Fire, which the latter has in his Forehead; this Running falling down on the Earth, gave Birth to Patragali, a very monſtrous Deity, who is as black as an Ethiopian; ſhe has ſixteen Arms and eight Faces, large round Eyes, the Teeth of a Hog, and an Elephant hanging on each Side of her Head, in the Manner of Ear-Rings; a Peacock's Tail inſtead of Hair, and Serpents inſtead of Clothes. In her Hands ſhe holds a Sword, a

Sea-Snail, a Trident, a kind of little Ciſtern, call'd by the Malabarians Capala, a crooked Sword, a ſmall Sabre, an Engine to lift up Burthens, a Zagaye or Mooriſh Dart, a Javelin, a Rope, an Ape, a Wheel, and an Iron Inſtrument with three Hooks. This Monſter was ſent into the World to revenge the inſulted Ixora upon Darida, who was a very inſolent Giant. The Idolaters believing that Patragali afflicts with the Small-Pox, and alſo cures it, devote to her all ſuch as labour under that Diſeaſe; the Patient is committed to the Care of certain Perſons who have devoted themſelves to the Service of that Divinity, and theſe Devotees endeavour to make her propitious, by Sacrifices and Offerings accompanied with Vows and Prayers. They cut off the Heads of ſeveral Cocks, and throw their Blood to the Dogs; they feed their Sick with Rice boil'd in Water; but we are aſſur'd they often give the poor Patients a Lift into the other World, when they find they are able to bequeath them a handſome Legacy. It is well known that among us a Devotee covets nothing more than an Eſtate; and that many a Man edifies good Souls by his Prayers, who at the ſame Time often waits with Impatience for the Death of ſome antiquated Widow, in order to ſucceed to her Eſtate, or of ſome old Sinner who pretends to reſtore to God what he has ſtole from Men in his Life-Time. Patragali is one of thoſe Deities whom they worſhip thro' Fear, who has a magnificent Pagod erected to her at Cranganor, whither the devout Indians often go in Pilgrimage. The Indian Doctors relate, that this Goddeſs was married, but that ſhe would never ſuffer her Virgin Flower to be cropt.

WISTNOU, WICHNU, or WISTNUM.

THIS God, who is Son to Quivelinga, is inferior to Ixora; he is often repreſented under a hideous Shape, as black as a Negro, and with four Arms. This God governs the World, and reſides in the Sea of Sugar; but a very whimſical Circumſtance is, that he there ſpends his whole Time in Sleeping, and yet directs the Affairs of the Univerſe; he uſes the Serpent Annatam for a Throne, and its five Heads ſerve as ſo many Cuſhions, on which the ſleeping God repoſes himſelf. We ſhall obſerve by-the-By, that the Indian Dieties are generally attended with Serpents. The Inhabitants of theſe Countries believe thoſe Animals to be ſo many celeſtial Genii, and it is a lucky Omen to meet a Serpent in one's Way.

THE God Wiſtnou has on his Breaſt the Mark of a Kick, which Ricxi, who was originally a Genius of India, gave him one Day as he was in a deep Sleep. Liximi and Siri Pagoda are look'd upon as his Wives, the latter of whom he met with in a Roſe which had a thouſand Leaves.

The Ten INCARNATIONS, or METAMORPHOSES of WISTNOU.

WISTNOU[a] has already metamorpoſed himſelf nine Times in this World, and is to undergo a tenth Transformation. Theſe Metamorphoſes comprehend all the Myſtery of the Indian Theology; he firſt aſſumed the Shape of a Fiſh, in order to ſearch for the Vedam at the Bottom of the Sea, whither it had been carried by an Evil Genius, who had forc'd it away from the Deutas. Wiſtnou, at the urgent Requeſt of the Deutas, plung'd into the Sea, kill'd this evil Genius, and return'd with the Vedam,

[a] The foregoing Diſſertation relates theſe Transformations after a very different Manner; after this Explication, we ſhall preſent the Reader with Father Roth's Account, who differs from both.

which he found in a Shell: The Figure repreſents Wiſtnou coming out of the Fiſh, whoſe Form he had aſſum'd; his two Right Hands hold the Vedam open, and a Ring; his two Left, a Sabre, and the Shell in which the Vedam was inclos'd; the Monſter is ſeen Headleſs at his Feet. On the other Side, the Malabarians aſcribe to Brama part of what the other Indians attribute to Wiſtnou, and affirm, that the Evil Genius took the Vedam from him, that Brama complain'd thereof to Wiſtnou, and implor'd his Aſſiſtance. Brama is repreſented in the Figure ſitting on an Indian Flower.

Second INCARNATION.

THE ſecond Metamorphoſis of Wiſtnou was into a Tortoiſe. One Day the Sea being elated with Pride, preſum'd to give an inſolent Account of its Power and Riches. Brama, accompanied with certain Demons, was order'd to puniſh this Element for its Inſolence; accordingly they took up the Mountain of Merupa, which is all of maſſy Gold, and placed it in the midſt of the Sea; they wound the Serpent Signag, or Sciſſia, as the Bramins call it, ſeveral Times round this Mountain; then uſing this Serpent as a Cable, they lifted up the Mountain, and afterwards let it fall again, till they at laſt forc'd this haughty Element to reſtore all the Wealth which had made it ſo proud. The Sea was forc'd to throw up again the following Things; viz. Silver, a very precious Jewel, the Tree Parſatig, a Veſſel in which the Water call'd Sora was contain'd, Dannewanter the Indian Eſculapius, the Moon, the white Cow, the Amarith or Water of Eternal Life, the Elephant with ſeven Trunks, the Virgin Remba, the ſeven-headed Horſe, the Bow call'd Dennock, a Shell call'd Sank, and the Poiſon Sabar. Thus was the Sea humbled, all its Wealth was diſtributed up and down in different Places, when the Expedition being ended, Brama re-aſcended into Heaven.

SOME Indian Doctors ſay, that the Earth unable to ſupport the Weight of the Mountain Merupa, was juſt going to the Bottom of the Abyſs, when Wiſtnou, who had aſſum'd the Shape of a Tortoiſe, took the Mountain on his Back.

Third INCARNATION.

A POWERFUL Genius, Rennicxem by Name, took the Earth one Day, and roll'd it in his Hand like a Bowl; but not ſatisfy'd with having thus far try'd his Skill, and imagining himſelf to be peaceable Poſſeſſor of the terreſtrial Globe, he went and hid himſelf in Patalam, which is the Bottom of the Abyſs. Wiſtnou, who was aſleep at the inſtant when he took his Flight, awaking on a ſudden, was ſurpriz'd to ſee the Earth was gone; upon which he immediately transform'd himſelf into a Hog, pierc'd as far as Patalam by the help of his Snout, arm'd with two monſtrous Tuſhes, attacks the Thief, kills him, and then laying the Earth on his Tusks, return'd from the Abyſs with this important Conqueſt. Baldæus in his Deſcription of Coromandel relates, that in a Pagod of Trimottam near Sinzi, is the Head of a Hog, which, if the Bramins are to be credited, grew in the Earth like a Truffle; 'tis conſider'd as an Image, or rather a memorable Relick of the Metamorphoſis of Wiſtnou.

THE Heathens of Mogul aſcribe this Metamorphoſis to another Cauſe. They relate, that Mankind in the firſt Age degenerated ſo abominably, that all Faith and Law were baniſh'd from the Univerſe; then Iniquity was multiply'd, the Sins of Mankind increas'd the Weight of the Earth, ſo that the Serpent Seiſſa, on which it lay, was no longer able to ſupport it; whereupon it fell to the Bottom of the Sea, and all Mankind were deſtroy'd. Brama beſought God that the Earth might again return upon the Waters, and his Requeſt was granted. Wiſtnou deſcended from the Heavens under the Figure of a Hog, in the Manner repreſented in this Figure, and under that Form ſwell'd to ſuch a prodigious Size, that his Head touch'd the Stars. He then went down into Patalam, where he defeated Hirnak, a monſtrous Devil; after which, mounting on the Carcaſs of this dead Monſter, he hook'd the Earth to him, and rais'd it with his Tuſhes, after having plac'd it on the Tortoiſe which lay on the Serpent Signag, who, according to the Indian Doctors, has a thouſand Heads. After this, Brama again repeopled the Earth with new Men, whom he created with a ſingle Word.

THE Engraver copied the Figure of the third Incarnation, from a Deſign in which there is neither a Tortoiſe nor a Serpent.

Fourth INCARNATION.

BRAMA, in the firſt Age, ſubdued the Giant or Devil call'd by the Indians Hirrenkeſſep, and kept him in a very tedious and ſevere Confinement. After he had thus ſuffer'd for twelve Years, the Giant implor'd the Mercy of Brama, who taking pity on this unhappy Wretch, indulg'd him moſt uncommon Favours; for he releaſed him out of Priſon, made him a powerful Monarch; and to aſſure him he ſhould continue to live, he granted him the following Privilege, viz. that it ſhould be impoſſible for him to die, unleſs in the moſt extraordinary and uncommon Manner. Hirrenkeſſep was hereby ſecur'd from the Inſults of the Heaven, the Earth, the Sun, the Moon, Thunder, Lightning, the Day, the Night, the Wind, Storms, and ſuch like Accidents, which we ſhall not enumerate. The Giant having recover'd his Liberty, raiſed ſeveral Armies, and made ſuch rapid Conqueſts, that he ſoon became the Terror of the Univerſe. But now the ſoft Gales of Proſperity ſwell'd his Heart, and he carried his Inſolence to ſuch a Pitch, that forgetting who he was, he commanded that himſelf only ſhould be ador'd as God. The Bramins oppoſed this impious Worſhip, and beſought Wiſtnou to deliver them from the Tyranny with which they were oppreſs'd. Wiſtnou aſſur'd them, that the Wife of this Tyrant ſhould bring forth a Child who ſhould free them from his Uſurpation. Wiſtnou's Promiſe was fulfill'd, the Giant became the Father of a Son, whom he would have brought up in the Worſhip of himſelf only; but the Babe, ſo far from owning him to be God, made a ſolemn Confeſſion of his Faith, by which he acknowledg'd Wiſtnou as Creator of the fourteen Worlds, and Father of Truth, &c. The Tyrant highly incens'd, treated this little Martyr to the Bramin's Faith very inhumanly, and was going to knock him down with his Staff, when the Child eſcap'd the Blow, by hiding himſelf behind a Pillar, which receiv'd the Stroke, and immediately ſplit in two, when lo! a dreadful Monſter iſſued out of it; Wiſtnou had aſſum'd that Shape purpoſely to chaſtiſe the Inſolence of this Tyrant. The metamorphos'd God ſeiz'd the Giant by the Middle, and tore him to Pieces.

Fifth INCARNATION.

[a]IN the Time that Mavaly govern'd the World, i. e. during the Golden Age of the Indians, there was a wonderful Profuſion of all Things, ſo that no one would work; no Subordination was to be ſeen, every Thing was in common, and a Man needed only put forth his Hand to take whatever he wanted. But what was the Reſult of this dangerous Abundance? Every Man was oblig'd to depend entirely upon himſelf, and not rely on the leaſt foreign Aſſiſtance, and that becauſe Intereſt, which in general unites Mankind together, had not yet got Poſſeſſion of their Hearts. The worſt was, there was very little Devotion to be met with in the World, for Neceſſity, the great Motive for Prayer, was as yet unknown. Wiſtnou, deſirous of putting a Stop to a Circumſtance, which might be attended with very ill Conſequences, reſolv'd therefore to dethrone Mavaly, and to bring Want, Hunger, Miſery, and Poverty into the World: To ſucceed in his Attempt, he employ'd Artifice, and aſſuming the Shape of a poor Bramin, preſented himſelf to Mavaly as a Beggar craving Alms. Mavaly offer'd him Kingdoms and Treaſures: To which the Bramin anſwer'd, that he begg'd only three Foot of Ground for himſelf to inhabit with his Baggage, conſiſting in an Umbrello, a Book of Devotion after the Bramin Worſhip, and a Goblet. The Reader is to obſerve, that the Furniture of a Bramin conſiſts only in theſe three Particulars. He requir'd at the ſame Time, that for the more ſolemn Ratification of his Right to this Ground, Mavaly ſhould pour [b] Water into his Hand. The latter ſurpriz'd at the Bramin's Modeſty, was long urgent with him, but in vain, to accept of ſuch Advantages, as in all outward Appearance, were infinitely greater than the three Foot of Ground he requeſted. However, as he was juſt going to beſtow the three Foot of Ground on the Bramin, Mavaly's Wife ſuſpecting ſome Trick, ſtrongly oppos'd the Grant. But Mavaly refus'd to forſwear himſelf, and taking the Veſſel, in which the Water appointed for the fatal Ratification was contain'd, he pour'd ſome of it into the Bramin's Hand, who drank it off; when immediately reſuming his Divinity, he cover'd the Earth with one Foot, and Heaven with the other: After which, going to appropriate to himſelf the reſt of the Ground which the unhappy Mavaly had then granted him, he ſet his Foot upon his Throat, and knock'd him backwards into the Abyſs, which he meaſur'd at the ſame Time. The Husband and Wife being thus dethron'd by an Artifice ſo unworthy Wiſtnou, made heavy Complaints to him upon that Account, when the God mov'd with his Complaints, reſtor'd Mavaly King of the Abyſs. Some Indian Doctors aſſure, that Wiſtnou made him Door-keeper of Heaven. Be that as it will, ever ſince this Revolution, Riches and Poverty, Abundance and Miſery, Proſperity and Adverſity, the natural Reſult of the Inequality of Conditions, have alternately prevail'd in the World: But Wiſtnou, in order to tranſmit to Poſterity a Type of the Felicity which Mankind enjoy'd under the Reign of Mavaly, inſtituted a Feſtival call'd by the Malabarians, Ona, and by them celebrated in the Month of Auguſt; 'tis a kind of Bacchanal, during which the Indians of all Ranks and Conditions dreſs themſelves as richly as their Circumſtances will poſſibly allow, feaſt one another to the beſt of their Abilities, and ſpend that Seaſon in Joy and Feſtivity.

[a] This Metamorphoſis is related after a very different Manner, in the Diſſertation on the Manners and Religion of the Bramins, Ch. 15. of the ſecond Part.

[b] Whenever the Indian Idolaters tranſact any Affair the Contract is ratified by pouring Water into the Hand of the Purchaſer, who is obliged to drink it. Baldæus's Deſcription of Coromandel.

Sixth INCARNATION.

A BRAMIN, who was a very good Man, having married a very virtuous She-Bramin, withdrew with his Wife to the Banks of the River, call'd by the Indian Legends Bewa. They pitch'd upon this Place for their fix'd Habitation, and reſolv'd there to ſpend their Days in Devotion. In this calm State, there was one Circumſtance wanting to complete their Happineſs, and that was Children, the Bramin's Wife not bringing him any. The Banians look upon ſuch Nuptials as diſhonourable, which are not crown'd with Children. Our pious Pair, inconſolable at the Reproach which was caſt upon them, reſolv'd to withdraw to the Deſart, there to implore, with greater Fervency than ever, the Bleſſing of Heaven, in order that they might have Children; and for this Purpoſe were reſolv'd to make choice of ſome remote and unfrequented Place. Our Couple, after having long wandered thro' the Fields, at laſt arriv'd at a Pagod, ſituated in the midſt of a little, but very agreeable Grove. Here they offer'd up very long Prayers to God, but to no Effect; which made them conclude, that the Beauty of the Place was the ſole Cauſe of his rejecting them. Hereupon they reſolv'd to ſee whether they could not mollify him in the Plains, and to continue, for that Purpoſe, always expos'd to the burning Rays of the Sun, and the Inclemencies of the Air; but ſtill this rigorous Penance avail'd them nothing. At laſt they made a Reſolution to ſuffer the Extremes of Hunger, till ſuch Time as it ſhould pleaſe God, either to hear their Prayers, or put an End to their Lives. For nine Days they underwent this rigorous Trial; after which, Wiſhnou appear'd to them under the Shape of a beautiful Child, and asked them the Occaſion of theſe repeated Auſterities. They ſatisfy'd his Demand; upon which Wiſhnou revealing himſelf, promiſed them three Children, and vaniſh'd away in an inſtant. Two of theſe three Children were produc'd by Tranſmigration; the Souls of the Bramin and his Wife, whom a too ſevere Abſtinence, and an over-violent Affliction, had brought to their Graves, tranſmigrated into the Bodies of two new-born Children; theſe afterwards grew up, married together, and gave Birth to a Child, the laſt Fruit of Wiſhnou's Promiſe. The Father, according to the Legend, was call'd Sandichemi, the Mother Reneka, and the Child Praſſeram: Reneka had a Siſter that was married to a Giant who had a thouſand Arms.

THE old Bramin and his Wife, being again returned upon the Earth, under the Names of Sandichemi and Reneka, were as pious as before; and in order to purſue their Inclinations with greater Liberty, they built themſelves a little Hut near the Ganges, where they ſubſiſted, but poorly enough, on the Fruits of the Earth: They here gave themſelves up entirely to Devotion and Prayer, and even regretted the Time they were obliged to allow to the moſt urgent Neceſſities of Nature. By this Means they attain'd the moſt ſublime Perfection of Holineſs, inſomuch that their Legend aſſures, they rais'd the Dead. Praſſeram inherited her Parents Virtues, and was capable of giving the moſt wiſe and prudent Inſtructions, in an Age when others are ſcarce able to underſtand them: But an Accident, with an Abſtract whereof we ſhall preſent the Reader, interrupted the Piety, which ſhone with ſo much luſtre in this Cottage. Wiſhnou had given Reneka a Handkerchief, which had the Property of receiving Water into it, without letting any run through. Unhappily for Reneka, her Siſter appear'd with all the Pomp of a Queen, at a Time when ſhe was going to draw Water. Reneka complain'd of the great Diſparity of their Conditions, and her Uneaſineſs deſtroyed the Handkerchief's Quality. Now the Holineſs of our Bramin was not Proof againſt the Emotions of Rage, which was ſo violent, that he cauſed Reneka to be killed by her own Son; but his Fury being afterwards calmed, he raiſed her from the Dead at the preſſing Inſtances of the Child above-mentioned.

SOME

Some Time after, the Giant with a thouſand Arms, attended by his whole Court, went to make a Viſit to Sandichemi his Brother-in-Law, whoſe Circumſtances not permitting him to pay him ſuch Honours as a Monarch of his Quality might juſtly claim, he beſought the King of the bleſſed Souls to ſend him the White Cow for ſome Time. According to the Indian Legend, whoever has that Cow, wants for nothing. The Bramin, by the Aſſiſtance of this Cow, gave the Giant and his Court a moſt ſplendid Reception, and preſented him with a great Number of precious Stones. The thouſand-arm'd Giant no ſooner found that Sandichemi ow'd all his Riches to the white Cow, but he reſolv'd to carry her off; but ſhe eſcap'd out of his Hands, and ſoaring up into the Air, return'd to the King of the bleſſed Souls. However, it coſt Sandichemi his Life, whom the Giant kill'd; but Praſſeram reveng'd her Father's Death, put the Giant to Death, and cut off all his Arms.

The Malabarians relate this Incarnation differently. According to theſe, the Rixis, unable to live any longer under the tyrannical Yoke of certain Rajas, implor'd Wiſtnou's Aſſiſtance in the moſt urgent Manner. Wiſtnou having firſt chang'd himſelf into a little Child, hid himſelf in the Sacrifice of one of the chief Rixis, and commanded Parexi-Rama to cut to Pieces with an Ax, forty four of thoſe Rajas, who tyranniz'd over the Rixis. Some Time after, Parexi-Rama deſirous of building Pagods, but not finding Ground enough for his Purpoſe, becauſe the Sea in thoſe Days touch'd the Mountains Gates, he took up a winnowing Fan, and ſhaking it thrice, made it retire as many Times. He would have forc'd it ſtill further, had not the God of the Waters, offended at his Boldneſs, taken proper Meaſures to check his Progreſs, by ſending for all the Ants in his Dominions, and commanding them to gnaw the Fan which was employ'd to contract the Bounds of his Empire. Parexi-Rama could not therefore raiſe more than an hundred and eight Pagods, but would have erected more, had he not been prevented by the Affront which the God of the Waters put upon him. On the other Side, the Fiſhermen being entirely ruin'd by the Sea's being remov'd to ſo great Diſtance from them, repreſented to Parexi-Rama their miſerable Condition; when he, being deſirous of indemnifying them in an ample Manner, made them Bramins, and aſſign'd them the Revenues of the Pagods for their Subſiſtence. We may here obſerve ſome Footſteps of the Hiſtory of the Apoſtles, whom God rais'd from the low Eſtate of Fiſhermen, to be the Preachers of his Goſpel. Parexi-Rama commanded theſe new Bramins to wear a kind of String, by which their priſtine Condition is repreſented; and moreover, 'tis from the abovemention'd Circumſtance, that the Bramins have borrow'd the Cuſtom of obliging the new-married Man to go a fiſhing with his Bride.

Seventh INCARNATION.

Here follows the Subject of this Transformation, according to [a] Baldæus. One Rawana, born a Bramin, had formerly an extraordinary Devotion for Ixora, to whom he daily offer'd an hundred Flowers. The God Ixora being one Day deſirous of making a Trial of his Faith, ſtole one of them away, and afterwards complain'd that the Oblation was leſs than uſual. Rawana counted the Flowers, and finding but ninety-nine, was immediately for plucking out one of his Eyes, to make up the Deficiency. Ixora ſatisfied with this Pledge of his Fidelity, would not ſuffer him to do it, and as an Acknowledgment, offer'd to grant him whatever he ſhould requeſt. The Bramin deſir'd, that the Government of the World might be committed to him; which was granted. In the mean time, Rawana continued his devout Exerciſes; and his Prayers, though they were frequent, were yet very ſelfiſh; upon which, Ixora ſpoke to him as follows: "As I have indulg'd thee all thou demandeſt of me, why doſt thou ſtill "continue to addreſs me in Prayer? what is it thou now wanteſt with me?" I have one Thing more to requeſt of thee, ſays the importunate Rawana, and that is, to give me ten Heads, wherewith to govern this Univerſe which thou haſt given me, and to ſurvey all Things in it with my own Eyes, and twenty Arms to exerciſe my Power therein. Ixora granted him alſo this Requeſt; after which, Rawana fix'd upon Lanca for the Place of his Reſidence, and fortified himſelf very ſtrongly in it; when, after a long and prudent Reign, he forgot all his Obligations to Ixora, and would have oblig'd his Subjects to acknowledge himſelf only for God. Upon this, Wiſtnou aſſum'd an human Shape, and came upon the Earth under the Name of Ram, (the Wife of a Raja bringing him into the World) to chaſtiſe Rawana's Inſolence. Ram perform'd ſeveral wonderful Exploits, which we ſhall not trouble the Reader with, as ſurprizing as thoſe which are related of the Fairies. All we ſhall obſerve, is, that he directed an Arrow more skilfully than 'tis poſſible for Man to do: He firſt kill'd Rawana, who had metamorphoſed himſelf into a Stag; but the Soul of the cunning Rawana immediately quitted the Stag, and went and ſhot itſelf into the Body of a Faquir. In this new Diſguiſe he play'd Ram a true Faquir's Trick, by carrying off his Wife Sitha; but Hanuman the Ape-God reveng'd the Affront, which Eſwara, transform'd into this Mock-Devotee, had put upon Ram. The Ape made a dreadful Havock in Lanca; nor were Rawana, or the Giants his Subjects, able to put a ſtop to it; and when they, by the virtue of certain magical Words, had at laſt found out the Secret of taking [a] Hanuman Priſoner, they nevertheleſs could not put him to Death, becauſe of the continual Succour which Ram afforded him. Rawana ask'd the Ape by what means his Strength might be ſubdued; but the Ape impos'd upon him, by telling him he muſt dip his Tail in Oil, ſurround it with Hards of Flax or Hemp, and afterwards ſet fire to it; aſſuring him, that he, by this means, would loſe his Strength. Hanuman being thus equipp'd, ſet fire to Rawana's Palace, and deſtroy'd Part of Lanca. We have taken a particular Notice of this Incident, becauſe of its great Reſemblance to the Story of Sampſon; and ſhall add, that Rawana's obſtinate Refuſal to give up the Woman he had carried off, the Puniſhment which Ram and his Brother Lekeman inflicted on him upon that account, and Ram's Paſſage through the Waters, have a great Affinity with the Hiſtory of Moſes. At laſt, Ram and Lekeman kill'd the Raviſher Rawana with Arrows; and the Ape Hanuman fought as bravely for them at this Juncture, as he had formerly done on other Occaſions.

[a] In his Deſcription of Malabar and Coromandel. 'Tis related after a very different Manner in the Diſſertation on the Religion and Manners of the Bramins.

Eighth INCARNATION.

THE Hiſtory of this Incarnation includes ſeveral Particulars, which bear ſome Relation to the Life of Moſes, and that of our bleſſed Saviour. Wiſtnou become Man, under the Form of a Child, call'd in the Indian Legend Kiſtna, is reſcued from the Fury of a Raja, who was deſtin'd to die by that Child's Hand. Here follows an Abſtract of that Incarnation, which, according to the Indians, was the moſt divine and moſt excellent that ever Wiſtnou ſubmitted to. 2

[a] Or Hanuvan.

A RAJA

A RAJA, whoſe Reſidence was at twenty five Coſſes Diſtance from Agra, after having married his Siſter to a Bramin, reſolv'd to know what would befal her during her Life, and for that Purpoſe conſulted another Bramin, who was skill'd in the Knowledge of Futurity. The Bramin inform'd him, that this Siſter of his, concerning whom he made ſuch earneſt Enquiry, would be deliver'd of ſeven Children, the laſt of which would bereave him of his Crown. The King, deeply afflicted at this fatal Prediction, confin'd his Siſter very cloſely, and cut all her Children to Pieces, as ſhe brought them into the World. At laſt, when ſhe was big of her Seventh, the Raja heighten'd his Vigilance, doubled the Guards, and gave much ſtricter Orders for putting the fatal Child to Death; but all his Precautions were to no Purpoſe, the Princeſs was deliver'd of a male Child, a Miracle in Beauty, who ſpoke the Moment he came into the World, comforted his Mother, and gave the moſt ſhining Proofs of the Divinity which animated him. In a Word, 'twas Wiſtnou who thus aſſum'd the Fleſh, under the Name of Kiſna, for this is the Name he bears in the Legend: He caus'd himſelf to be exchang'd for another Child, whom he afterwards reſcued from the Fury of the Raja, by carrying it off; he eluded the Vigilance of the Guards, and fled away with his Father and Mother; he ſwam over a Torrent, or croſs'd it as on dry Land, and a Serpent convoy'd over Wiſſodhu, Wiſtnou's Father, according to the Fleſh, in this Paſſage. The Serpent carried his Head aloft under young Wiſtnou's Body, and ſcreen'd him, like an Umbrello, from the Rain and the burning Rays of the Sun. Kiſna by his Power eſcap'd all the Snares which the Raja laid for him, and was ever victorious over all the Monſters who dar'd to aſſiſt his Enemy's Fury; he deſcended into the Abyſs, and ſubdued the Serpent Kalinag; he reveal'd himſelf in all the Glory and Majeſty of his Divinity, caus'd his Omnipreſence to be acknowledg'd on all theſe Occaſions, and [a] exempted the Souls of the Virtuous from Tranſmigration. He one Day met with a poor Gardener's Wife, who invited him to lodge with her, and diſcours'd with him after the ſame Manner as the Centurion did with our Saviour; but that which bears the greateſt Reſemblance to an Incident in our Saviour's Life, is the Action of an Indian Woman, who pour'd a Veſſel full of Perfumes and Eſſences on Kiſna's Head. Another Circumſtance in which he agrees with our Lord, is the Meanneſs of his [b] Extraction and Condition. The Indian Legend obſerves, that Kiſna was mightily ſought after by all devout Females; they are ſure not to ſtay behind when any Novelty is broach'd, and it may be affirm'd, that their Readineſs in giving Credit to any Thing which appears with an Air of Wonder, makes their Aſſiſtance very neceſſary, when any new Sect is to be eſtabliſh'd. On the other Side, Kiſna was no Enemy to the Fair Sex; we ſee in the [c] Figure repreſenting the eighth Incarnation, how he transform'd himſelf into a Statue, and aſſum'd the Form under which the Bramins have painted Wiſtnou, in order to carry off the Daughter of a Raja, whom he lov'd tenderly, and whoſe Paſſion was reciprocal.

WE ſhall conclude this Explication of the eighth Transformation of Wiſtnou, by two Circumſtances, which we think to be very remarkable; and theſe are, that he went up and down the whole Earth, in order to puniſh the Wicked, and was afterwards caught up into Heaven.

[a] The Indians aſſure, that the Souls of good Men, by a peculiar Favour of Kiſna, go ſtrait to Heaven, without wandring from Body to Body; they look upon the Tranſmigration of Souls as a Puniſhment inflicted on Mankind.

[b] The Figure repreſents Kiſna as a Shepherd, and according to the Legend he kept Sheep.

[c] The Figure deſcribes Kiſna, under the Form of Wiſtnou, ſeated in a kind of Pagod, with two Bramins on each Side of him; but Kiſna, according to the Indian Legend, when he transform'd himſelf into a Statue, went up into a Chariot together with a Bramin, when he went upon his Love-Expedition.

Ninth INCARNATION.

WISTNOU went by the Name of Boudhe, in order to reveal himſelf to Men: This Boudhe, according to the Doctrine of the Banians, had neither Father nor Mother; he is inviſible, and all Spirit; but whenever he reveals himſelf to his faithful Servants, he aſſumes the Figure under which Wiſtnou is worſhipp'd by the Eaſt-Indians. They affirm that Boudhe, who is the Mediator of Mankind, prays to Mahadeu Day and Night for them.

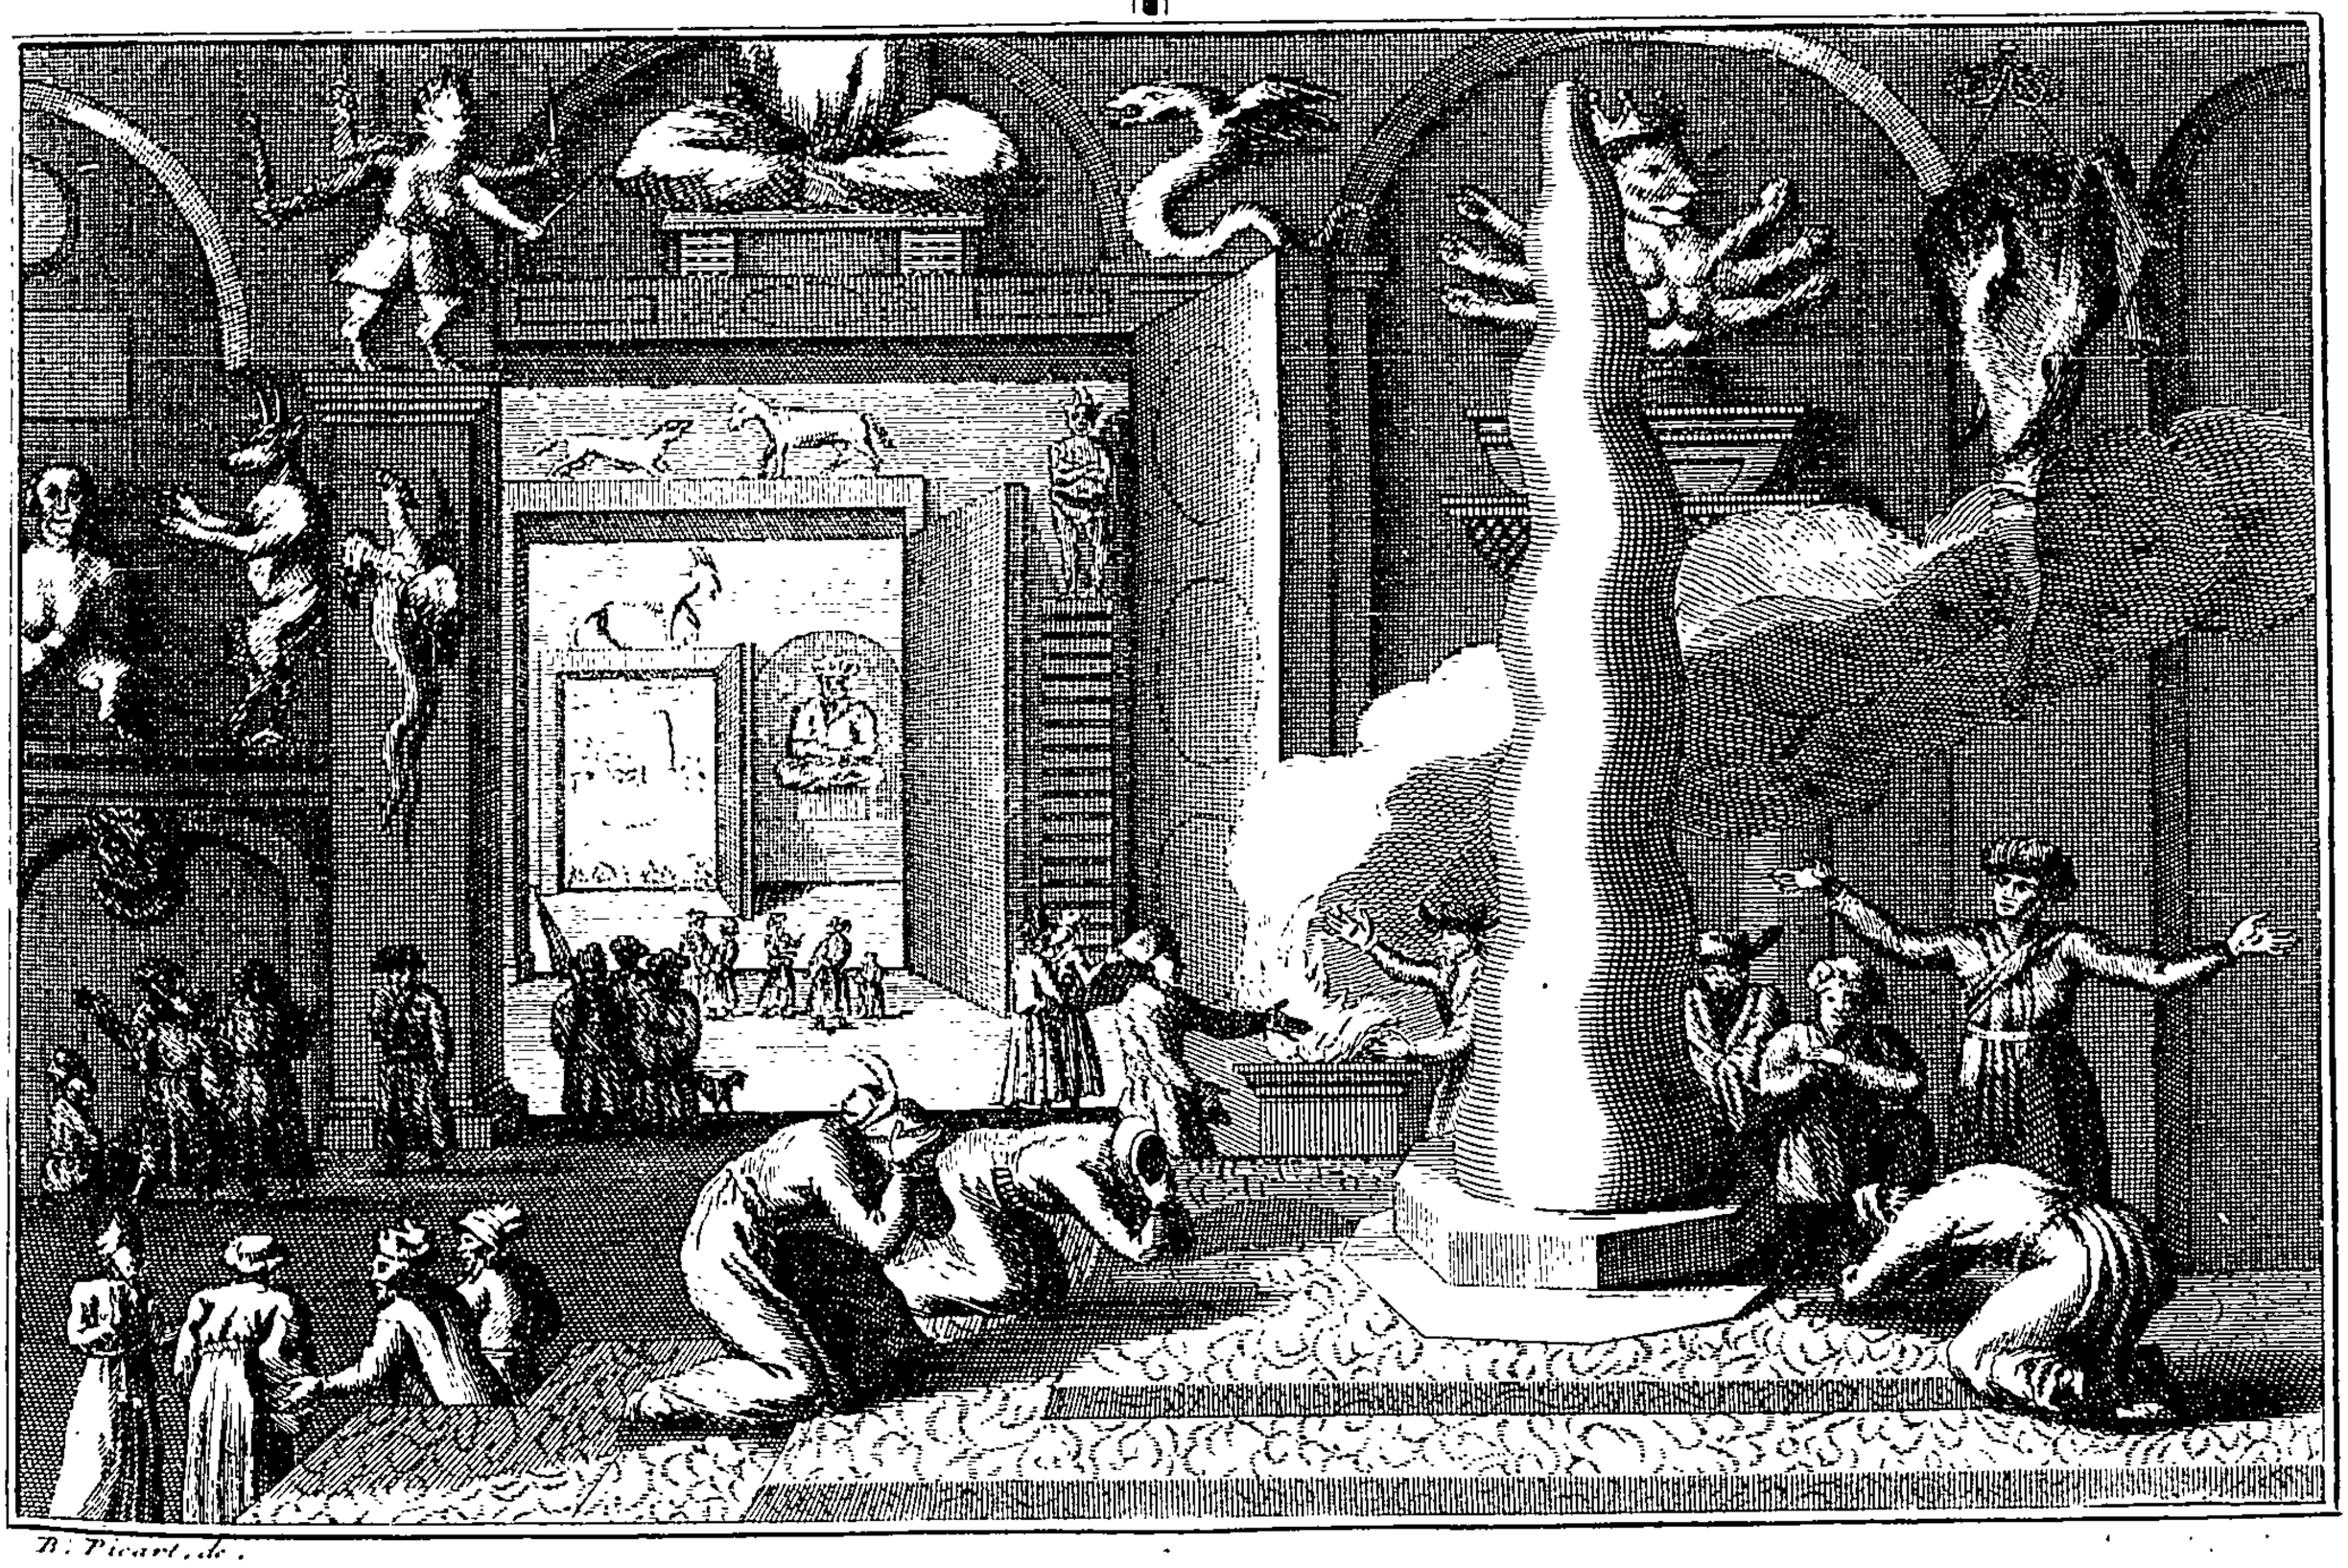
Tenth INCARNATION.

THE Time for this Incarnation is not yet come; Wiſtnou will one Day reveal himſelf, with Kallenki, or Kelki, which is the Name the Bramins give to a white-winged Horſe, adorn'd with rich Trappings, whom they ſuppoſe to be in the Heavens: This Horſe is led by a King, who has a lifted Sabre in his Hand, and this Monarch is undoubtedly Wiſtnou. This Horſe has always his Right Foot lifted up; but whenever he ſhall think fit to ſet it down on the Earth, in order to puniſh the Impious and the Wicked, 'twill then ſink under the Weight of it; the Serpent Signag ſhall no longer be able to ſupport the Earth; the Tortoiſe oppreſs'd with the Weight, ſhall plunge to the Bottom of the Sea, and Mankind in general ſhall be deſtroy'd, becauſe of their great Degeneracy and Corruption: Such will be the End of the laſt Age of the World, after which the firſt Age is to return again; for the Indians, and other Idolaters of the Eaſt, ſuppoſe a Revolution in the Univerſe, like to that of the Platoniſts.

THUS have we given the Hiſtory of the ten Incarnations, which include the Myſteries of the Theology of the Bramins, according to Baldæus, Author of the Deſcription of Malabar and Coromandel. We believe, that theſe Fictions are merely allegorical; as for Inſtance, 'tis not very difficult to conceive what is repreſented by the Whiteneſs and Beauty of the Horſe, which is the Subject of the tenth Incarnation; nor what is underſtood by his Wings. An Indian, who was but moderately skill'd in his Religion, would aſſure us, that Whiteneſs is the Emblem of Wiſtnou's Purity, Beauty that of his Majeſty, and the Wings of his Swiftneſs; but a Bramin, who had been brought up in the Midſt of Types and Figures, and who by deep Reflection had got a happy Knack of inventing at a Pinch, would find twenty other Myſteries in this Incarnation.



ANOTHER Circumſtance which we are to obſerve in this Place, is, the ſurprizing Contradictions we meet with in the Relations of thoſe who have written on theſe myſterious Incarnations; we ſcarce diſcover the leaſt Conformity between the Relations of the [a] reverend Mr. Roger, and that of Baldæus; that which a Portugueſe Writer has given us, is [b] very different from them both; and a fourth Author not only differs from all the three, but likewiſe changes the Order of the Incarnations, and gives them other Names, as is manifeſt from the following Explication.

[a] See Chap. 3. of Part II. of the Diſſertation on the Manners and Religion of the Bramins.
[b] See Chap. IV. V. and VI. of the Diſſertation on the Gods of Eaſt-Indians.

Explications of the ten INCARNATIONS, extracted from Father Kircher's China Illuſtrated.

WE are oblig'd to Father P. Henry Roth, a Jeſuit, an Eaſt-Indian Miſſionary, for this Explication; he aſſures us, that the Bramins [a] acknowledge a kind of Trinity, the three Perſons whereof are Brama, Bexhno, and Mahex.

" THESE three Perſons make but a ſingle one, in one Nature, which they ſpecify " under different Names, viz. Achar, ſignifying immoveable; Paramanand, peaceable; " Paramexuar, Sovereign Being: They likewiſe give him other Names.——Brahma is " the Nature and Eſſence of that Sovereign Being; according to Brahma he is in all " Creatures. Bexhno is the Preſerver of all Beings, and Mahex the Deſtroyer. —Every " Thing conſiſts in the General or Univerſal, and the Particular; the Univerſal is the " Supreme Being of God, and the Particular is Nature itſelf, divided into its different " Parts——whence they conclude that there is no generical nor ſpecific Diſtinction be- " tween created Beings; but that it is the ſame Being, and the ſame Nature, of which " all the Individuals partake, which aſſume different Shapes and Figures: As for In- " ſtance, one Portion or Part of this Nature, or rather Matter, aſſumes the Shape of a " Man, another that of a Stone, of a Tree, &c."

IN this Opinion two Things may be diſtinguiſh'd; 1ſt, a Supreme Being, who governs Nature, and is the Soul of it; 2dly, a dependant Being, who is govern'd, i. e. Nature modified, and ſuſceptible of whatever Impreſſions the Supreme Being ſhall pleaſe to give it. They ſay, that Matter is no more than mere Illuſion of Fancy; for which Rea- " ſon they call the divine Nature Ram, i. e. Sporting. They explain God's Incarnation " as follows: He takes the greateſt Particle, and clothes himſelf with Matter, which " according to them is compoſed of five Elements; they aſſert, 'tis by this great Particle, " (as by an Inſtrument) that he manifeſts his Attributes more than by another common " and ordinary Being which has a leſſer Portion of this Matter; it is on this in general " that their Syſtems of the Incarnations are grounded. Here follows the Foundation of " each of them in particular. I. The Firſt, which was rank'd as the Sixth in the fore- " going Explications, is of Naraen, or the Prince of Men; (we find Ixatarboc in the " Figure, which is not explain'd.) Narean, whom the Figure repreſents fighting with " a many-arm'd Giant, kill'd a thouſand Elephants with one Cut of his Sword, which " he holds in his Hand; he is always preſent to thoſe who invoke and call upon " his Name.

II. RAMTZANDAR, Son of Bal, is Power and Strength. His Brother Lexman was ſo " prodigiouſly ſtrong, that he kill'd a thouſand Men with one Shot of an Arrow; but " Ramtzander was of a gentle and peaceable Nature, and never employ'd the Sword, " becauſe he did every Thing by his Word. The ſole Motive of his Coming into the " World, was in order to free Mankind from the tyrannical Oppreſſion of the Gi- " ants. He was born at Midnight, when Heaven rain'd Flowers on the Place of " his Birth: The Air, in Teſtimony of its Joy and Satisfaction, cauſed an harmonious " Concert of Voices to be heard." This Incarnation muſt be expreſs'd under the Name of Ramtzander, not that of Krexno. Lexman, of whom mention is here made, is in the Seventh.

[a] Extracted from China illuſtrated, p. 215.

III. MAXAUTAR, or Matſautar, the Firſt in the preceding ones, is explain'd after a very different Manner in this Place, not to mention that the Figure bears no Manner of Relation to the Explication. " The Indians feign, that the Goddeſs Bhavani going " one Day to the Bath with her four Attendants, a Giant call'd Bhenſaſer follow'd her " in order to catch her; but God aſſuming the Shape of a Fiſh, came out of the Wa- " ter and took off the Giant's Head." The Letter A. denotes the Metamorphoſis. B. Bhavani. C. Bhavani's, properly Bhenſaſer's Head, which had been cut off. D. four Indian Worſhippers.

IV. BARACHAUTER, or Warahautar, is the Third in the foregoing Explications. " Before this Being appear'd in the World, a certain Giant reign'd over the whole " Earth, no one daring to oppoſe his Uſurpation. This Giant had a Stag's Head, and " his Breath was ſo peſtiferous, that nothing could poſſibly exiſt in his Preſence; but " God aſſuming the Shape of a wild Boar, fought this Monſter for twelve Years, and " at laſt deſtroyed him. A. points out Barachauter, C. (read B.) the vanquiſhed " Giant."

V. GOD aſſum'd the Shape of Narſeng in the fifth Incarnation, which was before computed the Fourth. " The Son of a certain Captain repeating inceſſantly the Name " of Ram, his Father, who was Ram's Enemy, would have chaſtiz'd him upon that " Account: But God (denoted by the Letter A.) chang'd himſelf into a Pillar (the Author " means that the Pillar divided itſelf) and aſſum'd the Shape of a Man, half Lion or half " Tyger, who open'd this Captain's Belly; to teach the World by this Cataſtrophe, that " we muſt never reprove thoſe who praiſe and ſerve God."

VI. THE Incarnation call'd Dahaſar, which in this Place is the Sixth, is the Seventh in the foregoing Explications. " Dahaſar had twenty Arms and ten human Heads, none of which were animated. The Idolaters ſay, that he keeps Death chain'd down in his " Houſe; that the Wind ſerves and obeys him; that he is Lord of Zailaini, (Ceilan) " where he has built his Fortreſs. In fine, they believe that Lexman, Brother to Ram- " xander, made a Reſolution of taking away his Life, for which Purpoſe he took the " famous Ape Hanuvan along with him, in order that if he himſelf ſhould fail of com- " pleting his Vengeance on Dahaſar, Hanuvan might diſpatch him with Stones. In " fine, the Bramins aſſert, that Lexman killed the Monſter with one Shot of his " Arrow, which he levell'd at an Ape's Head, repreſented over the ten Heads of Da- " haſar".

VII. THE ſeventh Incarnation is that of Jagarnat, which bears ſome Relation to the Second in the foregoing. " Jagarnat (denoted by the Letter A.) having undertaken " to change the Situation of this World, and for that Purpoſe taken that cumberſome " Maſs on his Shoulders with all its Inhabitants, ſunk under the Weight of it. By " this Accident he loſt both his Hands and his Feet, which afterwards rotted away; " and 'tis for this Reaſon he is repreſented without either Hands or Feet. They re- " late, that they convey'd his Son which ſprung from an Egg (C) by the Gallantry " of Bex his Mother (B) into the Iſland of Ceylan, by the help of the Sea (D); after " which he aſſum'd the Shape of the Bird Ibis (E), of a Dog (F), and of a Dra- " gon (G)."

VIII. KREXNO is here the eighth Incarnation, and reſembles very much that of the ſame Number in the foregoing. " He was ſeven Times transform'd into a Horſe (L), " once into a Bull, and another Time into an Elephant. The greateſt Title he ever " had was that of Cowherd, and that becauſe he had ſixteen thouſand Cows in his keep- " ing.

" ing. He has a Wound in his Breaſt. His ſeven Brethren were kill'd by a Giant " whoſe Name was Kans. Jeſſodha being with Child of Krexno, the Giant ſeiz'd up- " on her, and threw her into Priſon, and had her guarded by four Giants, (B. C. D. E) " and a Serpent who ſurrounded the Place of her Confinement. The Giant Kans's De- " ſign was to diſpatch Krexno, Jeſſodha's eighth Child, in the ſame Manner as he had " kill'd the other ſeven; but happily for the Babe, the Giants fell aſleep at the Moment " of his Birth, by which means Jeſſodha had an Opportunity of ſaving herſelf and the " Child by flight; the latter afterwards put the Giants to Death."

IX. THE ninth Incarnation is that of Bhavani, " whom the Bramins call Kacte or " Power: They add, that the latter bears the Name of Kactnemet, i. e. Powerful or " Mighty. Every Thing they relate concerning this God and Goddeſs is myſterious; " they both ſignify Matter, and the Principle of Beings; and every Thing they aſſert " of Puſſa (a Chineſe Divinity) and of Harpocrates, may be aſcribed to Kactnemet, " who was chang'd into Lotum, and afterwards governed the World. The Origin of " the Fable of Lotum is grounded on the Nature of that Plant, which is always in Wa- " ter, and delights in Moiſture; and the laſt, according to the Egyptians, is the Princi- " ple of all the Productions of Nature. The four Arms of Bhavani repreſent the four " Elements."

X. HAR is the Subject of the tenth and laſt Incarnation, which is not yet accompliſh'd. " The Indians firmly believe, that he will deſtroy the Law of Mahomet, and extirpate " his Followers: they add, that he will firſt manifeſt himſelf under the Figure of a " Peacock, and afterwards aſſume the Shape of a winged Horſe."

AFTER having thus given two different Explications of the Incarnations of Wiſtnou, we now return to his Worſhip, and the various Manner under which he is repreſented. Wiſtnou, as we juſt now obſerved, is called Bexhno, and Permal, in the Diſſertation on the Manners and Religion of the Bramins. If Dapper, who has given us a Deſcription of Aſia, may be credited, he is alſo repreſented under the Figure of a Column; but that agrees only with Ixora, as we ſhall ſhew hereafter, when we ſhall mention that Deity under the Name of Mahadeu.

WISTNOU under the Name of JAGARNAT.

WISTNOU choſe this Name in the ſeventh Incarnation, according to Father Roth above cited. Here follows the Particulars which Bernier has related on that Subject in the ſecond Volume of his Voyages, Page 103, & ſequent. Edition printed in 1709. He tells us, that in Jagarnat, a City ſituated in the Gulph of Bengal, is a famous Pagod ſacred to the Divinity who bears that Name. " A Feſtival is there ce- " lebrated annually, which laſts eight or nine Days, at which upwards of an hundred " thouſand Pilgrims are ſometimes aſſembled. A pompous wooden Machine, adorn'd " with extraordinary Figures of all kinds is rais'd, which is ſet on fourteen or ſixteen " Wheels, like a Piece of Cannon on its Carriage, and is puſh'd forward by fifty or " threeſcore Men. In the Middle, Jagarnat, very richly adorn'd, is expoſed to public " View, and is carry'd from Temple to Temple."

THE firſt Day that Jagarnat is thus expoſed to the Devotion of the Pilgrims, there is always ſuch a prodigious Croud of them, that a conſiderable Number of them never fail to loſe their Lives; ſome being ſtifled, and others trod to Death: But then it is very meritorious to die in this Manner; and this kind of Martyrdom is ever conſidered as glorious by Men, and crown'd with Bleſſings from Heaven. This is one of the Articles of the Indian Faith. Other Devotees, whoſe Zeal burns fiercer than that of the former, throw themſelves like ſo many mad People under Jagarnat's triumphal Car, purpoſely that they may be cruſh'd to Pieces under the Wheels. But we muſt go to the Source. The Doctrine of [a] Tranſmigration juſtifies in ſome Meaſure the Extravagance which appears at firſt Sight in this Behaviour. The agreeable and deluſive Idea which the Indians form to themſelves of a glorious Tranſmigration, with which their earneſt Deſire of obtaining a Sight of Jagarnat will be rewarded, juſtifies their Suffering in that View, all that the Chriſtians themſelves would ſubmit to with the ſame Intrepidity, were the Metempſychoſis of the Bramins one of the Principles of their Religion.

BUT to return to Jagarnat; Bernier takes notice of a remarkable Circumſtance which is practiſed in the Worſhip of that Idol. The Bramins ſingle out a beautiful young Indian Virgin, and carry her with great Pomp and Ceremony into the Pagod of Jagarnat, in order that ſhe may there become the Wife of the God. However, tho' the Bride ſpends the Night with the God, her ſuppoſed Husband, it is generally believed, ſhe is not made his Wife, but by Virtue of an Order given by Jagarnat to ſome Bramin to conſummate his Marriage with her by Proxy. The young Maiden enquires, on this Occaſion, of the pretended Jagarnat, whether the Year will be fruitful; what Proceſſions, Feſtivals, Prayers, and Alms muſt be offer'd up in his Honour, in order to obtain a fruitful Year. However, Jagarnat is not ſo greatly enamour'd, but he has Leiſure to attend to his Intereſt: But the polite Behaviour which a Man, who has ever ſo little Notion of Gallantry, is oblig'd to aſſume, with regard to this Bride in the Honey-Moon, makes us think that the Propoſals which are made on theſe Occaſions are favourable enough to be accepted with Pleaſure by both Parties. The next Day after the Marriage, the Bride is carried in Proceſſion from the nuptial Pagod to another which ſtands near that of the God her Husband.

IXORA under the Name of MAHADEU.

MAHADEU ſignifies the Sovereign God [b]. He is repreſented under the Shape of a Pillar, which diminiſhes inſenſibly from it Baſe to its Extremity at Top. This Extremity is very round. [c] The Figure here repreſents the Inſide of a Pagod of Mahadeu, the Form of the God, his Worſhip, and the Homage which Devotees pay him. All the monſtrous Figures with which the Pagod is adorn'd, are ſo many Indian Symbols or Hieroglyphicks. They offer to Mahadeu Milk, Oil, Rice, and ſuch like Things.

THE Bramins are very humble and devout at their Entrance into the Pagod of Ixora, and take off their Shoes and Stockings to do him the greater Honour, before they ſet their Feet on the Threſhold. The ſame Ceremony is obſerv'd with regard to Wiſtnou. Whenever they are within a Pagod, they are always oblig'd to have the Pagod to their Right, and never to their Left. The firſt Ceremony is alſo obſerv'd in the Jewiſh

[a] Notwithſtanding that Tranſmigration, according to the Indians, is a Puniſhment inflicted on human Nature; it is nevertheleſs pretended, that the Merit of this Matyrdom is ſo great, as to change the Puniſhment into a kind of Reward.

[b] It is probable that this Figure is the Emblem of what was generally call'd Priapus; and that the modern Indian Idolaters, as well as thoſe of Antiquity, have equally conſidered it as the God of Nature.

[c] That which is under the two laſt Incarnations.

Re-

Religion. We have already taken Notice, in the Diſſertation on the Manners and Religion of the Bramins, that every Indian Deity has an Animal for its Symbol, call'd by the Indians Vahanam; to which we ſhall add, that their Gods are frequently repreſented ſitting on Tygers, or other Animals, and even on Mice. We are not to doubt, ſays Pietro della Valle, in the fourth Volume of the Voyages, but that the Indian Sages, who endeavour to keep the common People in the moſt profound Ignorance, have veil'd the Secrets of Nature, the Myſteries of Religion, and even the moſt remarkable Incidents in Hiſtories under Types and Allegories. Thus what appears vaſtly ridiculous to the Eye, and is even repugnant to common Senſe, is made in ſome meaſure plauſible, when unfolded and explain'd by a knowing and ſincere Bramin.

THE Pagods of Mahadeu, which Della Valle ſaw, were all adorn'd with various kinds of Figures, in which he agrees with other Travellers, and are generally painted red with white Streaks or Lines intermix'd. Theſe two Colours are in great Eſteem among the Indians, who, according to the abovemention'd Author, may poſſibly have borrow'd that Cuſtom from the Egyptians, which we believe to be true. The Female Indians, and a certain Order of religious Idolaters, chuſe to have their Clothes red, rather than of any other Colour. Certain Joguis put a Lay of Red mix'd with Yellow on their Bodies, which Cuſtom is of great Antiquity, ſince Strabo, on the Teſtimony of Oneſicritus, relates that the Indian Gymnoſophiſts did ſo in Alexander's Time.

THE Pagods of Mahadeu and of Wiſtnou are for ever crouded with Beggars. Della Valle relates, that thoſe who are continually entring them to Worſhip, had Bells in their Hands, which they rung. Several Joguis naked, (or who may be almoſt ſaid to be ſo, ſince they have nothing but a large Piece of Linnen Cloth wound round their Bodies, which ſcarce covers the Pudenda) aſſiſts continually in the Pagod, at the religious Homages which the People pay to Mahadeu. The Foreheads of theſe Joguis are painted Red and Yellow, but their Bodies have none of theſe Ornaments. Della Valle is of Opinion, that theſe Joguis are the Diſciples and Succeſſors of the antient Gymnoſophiſts. The Pagods are illuminated with Lamps, &c. which burn inceſſantly before the Images of Mahadeu and Wiſtnou. The ſame Ceremony is obſerv'd with regard to the other Deities.

IXORA under the Name of LINGAM.

IXORA bears alſo the Name of [a] Lingam. From the Idea under which it is repreſented in the Figure, we may beſt compare it to the [b] Priapus of the Antients. The Joguis wear the Lingam about their Necks; but it would be impoſſible for Fancy to invent any thing more obſcene, than the Poſture in which they repreſent this double Figure, to whom they aſſiduouſly offer the Firſt-Fruits of their Meals. We aſcribe to the Notion the Indians entertain, that every Thing is formed by Generation, the blind Devotion they pay to this Lingam, in which they confound the Agent with the Means he employs. It will be impoſſible to juſtify them in any Manner on this Head, but by conſidering it as a Type or Symbol, which ſtill cannot but be very ſhocking to Decency and good Manners: But we cannot help thinking that thoſe who firſt invented theſe myſterious Figures, were naturally inclin'd to ſatiate by Luſt, what they exhibited for the Emblem of a Deity.

[a] Diſſertation on the Manners and Religion of the Bramins.

It cannot be denied, but that the Worſhip which is paid to Nature, may have migrated from the Eaſt into the Weſt, together with the ſymbolical Figures under which they repreſented it: We are therefore not to wonder, that the ſame Idea ſhould have diſcover'd itſelf under different Names, to People who live at a great Diſtance one from the other; ſince, as they both receiv'd the Object of their Worſhip from the ſame Source, they were under a Neceſſity of receiving the ſame Images with the ſame Ceremonies. To do theſe People Juſtice, nothing can better expreſs the Fruitfulneſs of Nature, than the Union of both Sexes, and the Vigour of Priapus, whoſe [a] Name is very expreſſive; however, it is ſurpriſing, that Men, who, if we except ſome of the moſt brutal Savages, have always paid ſome regard to Decency, ſhould be ſo infamouſly loſt to all Senſe of it, as to carry in [b] Proceſſion with great Pomp and Solemnity, thoſe Parts of the Body, which ought never to be reveal'd but in Caſes of the higheſt Neceſſity; and [c] expoſe them publickly in the Roads, in Houſes and Temples, as is the Cuſtom in the Eaſt-Indies.

Pietro della Valle, whom we quote with Pleaſure, becauſe of his great Exactneſs, and the curious Reſearches which we meet with in his Voyages, obſerves, (in the 4th Volume, p. 69, and 209, of the Bologna Edition, printed in 1672.) that the Gods of the Indians are always repreſented naked, and that ſeveral Figures in very indecent Poſtures are ſeen in the Pagods; undoubtedly he ſaw the Lingam abovemention'd there. The other Figures might poſſibly repreſent the Vows or Homages of the devout Indians, among whom the Women don't ſcruple to proſtitute themſelves in honour of the Gods. Husbands behold with the moſt profound Humility theſe meritorious Proſtitutions, which ſo often revive what we in Europe look upon as the greateſt Injury and Affront; ſo true it is, that falſe Principles in Religion eaſily deſtroy thoſe of common Decency, and even frequently change the very Ideas which Nature has implanted in us. As a Husband is fully perſuaded he has been cuckolded by a God, he is therefore very well ſatisfied. The [d] Joguis is the Idol's Curate, and performs the Ceremony in Quality of his Proxy, while the devoutly-patient Husband, in the mean Time, waſhes the Saints Feet, and pays him the utmoſt Veneration. The People of the Houſe withdraw, and leave the Lady to the Saint's Embraces. When this Inſtitution was made, the crafty Indians undoubtedly inſinuated ſome Hopes of future Felicity at the ſame Time. When we have once found out the Secret of gaining an Aſcendant over Peoples Minds, can it be a difficult Matter to aſſure the Female Devotees, that,

There are few Readers but have heard in what Manner the Babyloniſh Women uſed to proſtitute themſelves in Honour of Mylitta, the Venus of the Chaldeans; but according to Herodotus, they never proſtituted themſelves but once in their Lives, and then to Foreigners only. Theſe Females, whoſe Heads were crown'd with Flowers, uſed to go and ſeat themſelves in the Temple of Mylitta; the Foreigner was allow'd to make choice of the She among them whom he liked beſt, which done, he threw Money to her, and the Woman thus pitched upon, was not permitted to refuſe it, though the Sum were never ſo trifling, becauſe it belong'd to the Goddeſs. The Belles ſoon did their Buſineſs, but as for the Ugly, they had the ill Luck to linger a long Time, before they could pay their Homage to Venus. Religious Proſtitutions were alſo practiſed in the Iſland of Cyprus. Tavernier mentions a Pagod of Cambaia, whither the Indian Courteſans go in Pilgrimage. Such as are grown old in the Profeſſion, purchaſe young She-Slaves with the Money they have got, and bring them up in the Trade; and when their young Pupils are of Age, their Miſtreſſes carry them to the Pagod, and there abandon them to the Idol.

We ſhall conclude with an Inſtance which manifeſtly ſhews, that the Indians look upon the obſcene Devotions mention'd in this Article, as highly meritorious. " Over " the Gate of one of the Cities of the little Kingdom of Sirinpatan, ſays Dellon in the " Preface to his Voyages, printed in 1709. ſtands a Stone Statue repreſenting Sita, Wife " to Ram, one of their Gods, about as big as the Life. On each Side of her are " three famous Faquirs, or Penitents, naked, on their Knees, their Eyes lifted up to- " wards her, and holding with both Hands what Decency will not permit me to " mention. They pretend by this Poſture —— to pay ſuch an Homage, as they judge " to be moſt grateful to this pretended Goddeſs."

The Indian Proceſſions.

THE Figure repreſents the Proceſſion of Wiſtnou, which we have already deſcrib'd in the Diſſertation on the Manners and Religion of the Bramins, and therefore ſhall ſay no more on that Head. Pietro della Valle, in the fourth Volume of his Voyages, p. 211. has given us a Deſcription of a Proceſſion of Eſwara, under the Name of Virrena-deuru, which according to him ſignifies the Lord Virrena. He has heighten'd this Deſcription with a curious Detail of the Ceremonies which he ſaw obſerv'd in this religious Act, the Subſtance of which is as follows : [a] In the Green on which the Pagod ſtands, whence Virrena-deuru was taken to be carried in Proceſſion, were three other little ones, in one whereof Baſwa, or Baſvana, who is Eſwara's Son, and Vahanam, was repreſented under the Figure of an Ox. A like Image was ſeen in the inmoſt Receſs of the Pagod of Virrena, oppoſite to the Statue of the latter; the Signal of the Ceremony was given by a Bell, which was rung by the Prieſts who were in the Sanctuary; for I believe we may give this Name to this innermoſt Apartment; thoſe without anſwer'd the Signal with Drums and Flutes. In the mean time, they ſet Lights on the two Rows of Palliſades, which were erected for that Purpoſe, from the Gate of the firſt Porch to the Entrance of the Sanctuary: They alſo lighted up Torches in the other Parts of the Pagod; a Cuſhion was got ready, on which they ſet the Idol of Virrena in a little cover'd Sedan, like thoſe which are kept ready for the Ceremony of thoſe Proceſſions. We are to obſerve, that there were two Images of Virrena in the Pagod; one whereof was of Wood, which was not taken out of its Niche: This Niche was not made in the retired Part of it, and conſequently the Indians had the wooden Statue in much leſs Veneration than the other, which was never brought out of the Sanctuary, but when the moſt ſhining Acts of Devotion were to be perform'd: They were each two Palms in Height, Ornaments and all, and were painted, gilt, and adorn'd with white Flowers. As ſoon as the March began, a Miniſter, whom perhaps we may properly call the Maſter of the Ceremonies, appear'd at the Head of the Proceſſion, holding a little Bell in his Hand, which he rang continually; he was followed by ſeveral Perſons: After which came two Torch-Bearers, who walk'd immediately before the Virrena's Sedan; another Miniſter of the Pagod walk'd next, carrying Incenſe. Such was the Order of the Proceſſion, which was firſt made in the Green round about the Temple, whence theſe Devotees ſet out by a Gate oppoſite to that by which they enter'd. After this, the Proceſſion went out of the Green into the Street, little Bells ringing, Flutes playing, and Drums beating during the whole March. Poſſibly, ſays our Author, they went and made a [a] Station at ſome other Pagod of the Place; be that as it will, they return'd back in the ſame Order, and were follow'd by a conſiderable Number of Devotees of both Sexes, into the Green on which the Pagod ſtood, whence they firſt ſet out, and round which the Proceſſion march'd three Times.

THE remaining Part of the Ceremony has certain very particular Inſtances in it: The Proceſſion, after having gone thrice round, as was before obſerv'd, ſtopt at the firſt Porch of the Pagod, juſt oppoſite to the Sanctuary. The Idol which lay in the Sedan, was raiſed by one of its Miniſters, and kept in an upright Poſture for a conſiderable Time, in order for its receiving the Homage of another Prieſt, who ſtood oppoſite to it in the Sanctuary, though at a pretty great Diſtance from it. The Manner in which this Prieſt paid his Homage, was by making ſeveral Circles with a Torch, downwards and upwards, and upwards and downwards, in honour of Virrena; and theſe religious Circles always terminated downwards. This being done, he drew a Right Line with his Torch from the Side oppoſite to the Circle, to that where the Circle began. However, the Circles don't always begin on the ſame Side, but go ſometimes to the Right, and at other Times to the Left.

THIS is what the Prieſt obſerv'd in the Sanctuary of his Idol; after which, he came out of it, and going through the Rail, or rather Palliſades, on which a certain Number of Torches were placed, he preſented himſelf before the Idol in the firſt Porch of the Pagod. We may naturally ſuppoſe, that he only, as chief Miniſter of Virrena, was allow'd to go this Way, ſince the other Devotees, not even the Prieſts themſelves, paſs'd always by the Rail. He came up to it ringing his little Bell, Drums beating, and Flutes playing at the ſame Time, and was follow'd by a young Clerk, who carried a Baſon fill'd with conſecrated Water, in which ſome Sandal Wood was put, of that kind undoubtedly with which ſome religious Orders among the Indians paint their Foreheads. The Prieſt turn'd thrice about the Idol with the Baſon, obſerving to begin always towards the Left, which was the Right, with regard to the Sedan on which the Object of this Ceremony was ſeated. The three Turns ended exactly in the Place where they began; after which, the Miniſter ſet down his Bell, and ſtopping by the Side of the Sedan with the Baſon in his Hand, dipp'd his Finger in the ſacred Water, in order to mark the Idol on the Forehead, or on ſome other Part with it; for Della Valle does not tell us which. The Prieſt pour'd ſome of this Water into his Hand, and rubb'd his Forehead with it, and did the ſame to him who carried the Statue of Virrena, and threw the Water which was left without the Pagod, at ſome Diſtance, and oppoſite to the Sedan; and taking a Wax-Taper in his Hand, drew in the Sedan, and even in the Preſence of the Idol, a great Number of Circles like to thoſe he had before made; which being done, he drew certain Lines. Having done this, he put out the Candle, and concluded this Act of Devotion by taking the Idol Virrena in his Arms, which he carried aloft till he was got to the Sanctuary, when he again ſet it in its Niche. Then another Miniſter began to diſtribute among the Faithful who were aſſembled, Chich Peas mix'd with little Pieces of Indian Nut, all which was undoubtedly bleſs'd and conſecrated in due Form. We may preſume, that theſe were the Fragments of the Offerings which had been made to the Idol; but be that as it will, the Devotees eat what the Prieſt gave them with great Reſpect and Devotion. We are to obſerve, that the Men, that is, the ſecular Part of the Aſſembly, were not admitted any farther than the firſt Court, whereas the Women were plac'd near the Rail, viz. between the firſt Porch and the Sanctuary, and to the Right and Left of the Lights.

THE Proceſſions of the Indians always open with the Sound of Inſtruments; the Muſic are generally at the Head of the Proceſſion, ſeveral of whom are Trumpets, who are followed by a great many female Dancers, two and two, and all of them unveil'd. The Virtue of theſe Dancers conſiſts in their proſtituting themſelves out of Love for the Gods. We ſhall mention them once more in the Sequel; after the Dancers, come the Sedan of the Idols, which are follow'd by a great Number of Perſons carrying Indian Pikes and Lances, adorn'd with ſilk Streamers, and ſeveral Umbrellos ſet off in the ſame Manner. Other She-Dancers walk at equal Diſtances on both Sides the Sedan; but as theſe are not oblig'd to dance, they have a Piece of Stuff like Kerchiefs on their Heads, which hangs on their Shoulders, and falls down as low as their Stomachs. Such She-Dancers as are neareſt the Sedan, have a ſmall ſilver Staff in their Hands, the End of which is ſet off with Hair; theſe Staves are to drive off the Flies from the Idol. The Prieſts of the Pagod and the Indian Friars afterwards advance forwards with Torches in their Hands.

KAMAETZMA.

THE Figure repreſents the Pagod of Kamaetzma adorn'd with ſeveral groteſque Figures, after the Manner of other Pagods. Kamaetzma, according to the Tradition of the Bramins, is Wife to Ixora, or Eſwara, but we cannot ſay whether ſhe be the ſame with Parvati. There is a remarkable Ceremony obſerv'd in honour of this Goddeſs, the artful Manner whereof diſcovers both the Credulity of the People, and the Aſſiduouſneſs of the Prieſts to make their Advantage of it. They carry annually to her Pagod, on the Day of her Feſtival, a great Quantity of Fruits of various Sorts, and dreſs up a young Child with Flowers, whom they afterwards ſet on the Side of a deep Grotto, which has a Communication with a great ſubterraneous Paſſage. Night is no ſooner come, than they ſhut the Pagod very carefully, in which the Child is left alone; but one of Kamaetzma's Miniſters comes in the Night, takes away the Fruits, and afterwards carries both them and the Child to the Bottom of the Grotto, whence he returns the next Day with the Child, crown'd with Flowers. We may preſume, that theſe Fruits are the Firſt-Fruits offer'd to a Deity, who enjoys the ſame imaginary Quality among the Indians, that Pomona had formerly among the Romans.

Pilgrimages of the Indians.

THE Indians go in [a] Pilgrimage to the Temples of their Idols, and theſe, when they fancy they have obtain'd any particular Bleſſing from them, never fail to raiſe Monuments in their Honour, as a Teſtimony of their Gratitude and Acknowledgment, wherein are repreſented the Cure which they have wrought, or the Danger they have eſcap'd. To give ſome Inſtances of theſe Cuſtoms, Pietro della Valle relates, that near Mount Gate is a Pagod ſacred to Hanuman, or Hanuvan, the Ape-God before mention'd. In this Pagod the Statue of the Ape-God is ſeen in the Midſt of a great Number of lighted Lamps[a]; the famous Traveller above mention'd ſaw a ſilver Hand hung up there near the Idol, which undoubtedly had been given by ſome Devotee, whom Hanuman had perhaps cur'd of ſome Ailment in that Part. The ſame Traveller relates, that he himſelf was an Eye-Witneſs to the Preparations which were made in this Pagod, for a ſolemn Pilgrimage that was to be undertaken, which he compares to thoſe of Loretto and Rome in the Jubilee Year. Hanuman made one of the Company, and was carried in a Sedan, Inſtruments accompanied with Voices playing as he went along.

Mount

THE fourth Figure in the Plate A, repreſents the Dreſs of a Bramin She-Pilgrim; we muſt not omit, that theſe Devotees at their Return from theſe Pilgrimages, are uſually ſet off with ſuch Leaves and Flowers as the Prieſts adorn the Faces of the Idols with. When theſe begin to wither, they are diſtributed among the Pilgrims, who receive them with the higheſt Teſtimonies of Devotion, kiſſing them, and wearing them on their Heads, as a manifeſt Token of the Veneration and Reſpect they have for them. The Indians tell us, that theſe Leaves and Flowers are endued with certain extraordinary Virtues, which they undoubtedly receive from the Holineſs of the Idol; but 'tis certain, they bring in very conſiderable Profits to the Prieſts. We are of opinion, that theſe People have the ſame Idea of Pilgrimages as other Nations; 'twould be needleſs to ſpin out our Reflections to a greater Length.

Penances, Auſterities, and other Cuſtoms of the like Nature practiſed by the Indians.

WE have already mention'd ſome of theſe Cuſtoms in the 13th Chapter of the Diſſertation on the Manners and Religion of the Bramins; but there are others much more ſurprizing than the above-mention'd, eſpecially among the Joguis, who affect to devote themſelves to the moſt dreadful Torments, from a Principle of Pride and Fanaticiſm. 'Twould be no difficult Matter to find theſe two Principles in the Hearts of ſuch as affect to be more holy than their Neighbours; and that becauſe theſe Perſons voluntarily ſubmit to certain Puniſhments which no one inflicts upon them; and which, the Author of Nature himſelf could not require at their Hands, without being unjuſt in ſome Meaſure. The Heart of Man is very oddly fram'd; was a Prince ſo cruel, as to command ſome of his Subjects to lie all their Lives among Aſhes, or to ſtand upright, and not lean once, for the ſake of procuring ſome Eaſe, till they died, ſuch a Monarch would infallibly be look'd upon as a Tyrant, and yet we meet with ſome Men who inflict ſuch Puniſhments upon themſelves. But to purſue our Reflections, there cannot one Religion be nam'd, ſome of whoſe Profeſſors don't voluntarily accuſtom themſelves to the moſt dreadful Torments and Auſterities, though at the ſame Time they dare not pretend to ſay, that Heaven commands them to torture themſelves in that Manner. Perhaps ſome Devotees might object, that Chriſtianity enjoins her Profeſſors to exerciſe theſe Severities on themſelves; but we cannot bring ourſelves to think, that ever any Perſon went ſuch Lengths, as to pull out an Eye, or cut off an Arm, to eſcape the Temptations to which they might otherwiſe be liable; and in caſe there have been any ſo ſilly as to emaſculate themſelves, in order to check certain irregular Impulſes, which very often the moſt pious Chriſtian is no more able to ſuppreſs than an Infidel, ſuch deluded Wretches have been charitably told, that the Goſpel did not require they ſhould caſtrate themſelves, and that Impotency does not make a Man a better Chriſtian.

[a] He mentions this Manner of fulfilling one's Vows in another Part of his Voyages.

BUT to return to the Joguis, whoſe Name, according to Bernier, ſignifies, United to God; they are a kind of Hermits, who are the more vile, becauſe they fancy themſelves to be diſtinguiſh'd from all Mankind by their exceſſive Sufferings: Theſe are generally ſeen ſtanding under Trees, or near their Pagods; ſome of them go ſtark naked, whoſe tangled Hair, divided as it were into Branches, deſcends lower than their Knees; they hold their Arms a-croſs over their Heads, and ſtand all their Life-time in this Poſture: Other Penitents ſleep on the Ground, with one Leg higher than the other, and their two Arms rais'd above their Heads, without once removing them. Theſe two Attitudes are repreſented in the third Compartment of the Figure A. Theſe wretched Penitents loſe inſenſibly the Uſe of their Arms and Legs; but then ſome young Novices of their Order [a] attend upon them with ſuch an Awe and Reſpect, as is worthy a better Cauſe. There are even ſome Perſons of both Sexes, who make a Vow of devoting themſelves to their Service, and theſe are wholly employ'd in ſoothing the voluntary Sufferings of the Joguis with Alms and Refreſhments, and to cleanſe them of their Filth. The four Compartments of the Plate B, repreſent ſeveral other whimſical Poſtures of theſe Penitents; thoſe of the ſecond Compartment ſlaſh their Bodies in ſeveral Places; thoſe of the third, fancy they do a very meritorious Action in feeding a Peacock for Bruma's ſake, to whom that Bird is ſacred; thoſe of the fourth, who are ever expos'd to the burning Rays of the Sun, obſerve the ſame Piety with regard to other Birds, and carry their Charity ſo far, as to let them perch upon their Heads. When theſe hold their ſpiritual Converſations, they ſit cloſe together in a Ring, and tie at the End of a Stick, a Banner or Standard, made of ſeveral Pieces of Stuff or Linen Cloth of different Colours.

THE firſt and ſecond Compartments of the Plate A, (repreſenting the uneaſy Poſture of two Female Penitents; the firſt whereof attends to the Prayers of a She-Devotee, who recommends herſelf to her; and the other fancies her Gods will look upon her continuing always in the ſame Poſture as a very meritorious Action;) oblige us to do juſtice to the Piety of their Sex, which is often more fervent than that of Men: The Reaſon of this, is, becauſe their Thoughts are leſs diſtracted; not to mention, that Women have a more obſtinate Bent, or are more inclin'd to give into extraordinary Practices. But all this is no more than the natural Reſult of the Complexion of their Minds, which are eaſily captivated by a gaudy Outſide.

SOME Joguis confine themſelves in Cages, which are ſet on the Top of a thick Stake fix'd in the Ground; theſe Cages are ſo little, that the Penitent is prodigiouſly tortur'd in them. Under theſe Priſons, and on a Piece of Wood which goes croſs the Stake, two little Idols of Ixora or Mahadeu are placed, the perpetual Object of the Worſhip of all Recluſes. Some holding a Sabre in one Hand, and a kind of Shield in the other, go up a Crane with great Boldneſs, when hooking themſelves to an Iron, which runs a conſiderable Way into their Backs, they ſpring forward into the Air, with ſuch a Boldneſs and Intrepidity, as might juſtly excite our Admiration, was not an inſupportable Pride the only Motive of it. In theſe mad Gambols, their only Care is to make a vain Oſtentation of their Sufferings, when flouriſhing their Sabres, and launching out into the moſt extravagant Praiſes of their Idols, they endeavour to draw the Eyes of the Spectators upon them, by performing ſeveral Feats of Agility, to the great Scandal of the Religion they endeavour to inſtil into the Minds of their Diſciples. Some of theſe Joguis plunge into the Ganges, in hopes of being devour'd by Crocodiles; and theſe ſilly Wretches fancy they ſhall thereby obtain the Felicities of the next Life. In fine, others kill themſelves in Preſence of their Gods.

BALDÆUS relates, that Canara in the Kingdom of Cananor is very famous for its Joguis, whoſe Lives are conſider'd by the Indians as ſo many perfect Models of Piety and Holineſs. Theſe Saints generally live in Pagods, but they often walk ſtark naked with little Bells in their Hands, in order to call the Pious of both Sexes to their Devotions. If this Author is to be credited, their Women of the greateſt Diſtinction handle the Privities of theſe Saints for God's Sake; perhaps our Prudes, who affect a ſpecious Inſenſibility, might in Time be brought to acquieſce with this kind of Devotion, were this Cuſtom to be once introduc'd among us.

SUCH are the Joguis, whom Travellers repreſent as a ſet of dangerous Hypocrites, that often conceal the moſt flagrant Vices; [a] but notwithſtanding this, the Indian Devotees go daily and ſalute them, kiſs their Hands, and ſtand in the moſt humble Poſtures, while they liſten to the Sentences which are utter'd by theſe ſhameleſs Religious. Della Valle tells us, that they live in Community, under the Direction of a Superior, in the ſame Manner as our Monks; but they are continually wandring about, even in Cities, where they always live in the Streets, or the Places of public Reſort, in which, as was before obſerv'd, they ſtand naked, without once moving, or diſcovering the leaſt Motion. We are likewiſe aſſur'd, that there never was a She-Indian, whether Wife or Widow, but beheld this Nakedneſs with a ſtoical Indifference; but 'tis certain they could not be parallel'd in Europe, where 'tis not the Faſhion to go naked.

DELLA VALLE tells us moreover, that they hold ſpiritual Conferences among themſelves, and have certain Exerciſes relating to the Sciences; but he concludes from one of their Books call'd Damerd Bigiaska, that Magic is their only Study. He adds, that they pretend to have Revelations, by the Virtue of their ſpiritual Exerciſes, Prayers, and Faſts; and that a ſecret and carnal Commerce, which they hold with the Demons or Genii, enables them to pry into Futurity. They aſſure, that theſe Intelligences appear to them in the Shape of Women; and that if they can but be ſo happy, as to bind themſelves to them by the Ties of a ſpiritual Marriage, (which poſſibly may be the Effect of an Imagination enflam'd by the Lives they lead) they then may flatter themſelves ſo far as to think they are entirely ſpiritualiz'd, and that their Nature is ſomething more than human.

AFTER having ſpoken thus far of the Joguis, we may juſtly add ſome other Particulars concerning the Enlightned among the Indians. "Some of theſe, ſays Bernier, quit the "World entirely, and generally withdraw, like ſo many Hermits, to ſome unfrequented "Garden, far remov'd from all inhabited Places, and never after once ſet their Foot in "Cities. In caſe any Thing is carried them to eat, they take it, otherwiſe they do without it, and 'tis believ'd that the Grace of God enables them them to ſubſiſt in their "perpetual Faſts and Auſterities, and above all, wrapt up in Meditation — Nay, 'tis "ſometimes ſo deep, that they continue whole Hours together in Extaſy; during which, "the outward Senſes ſuſpend all their uſual Functions, (which would be wonderful and "ſurprizing, were it true) that they ſee God himſelf under the Form of a certain very "white, ſtrong, and ineffable Light, with as inexpreſſible Joy as that of our Saints, who "have had a ſtrict Intimacy with Chriſt and the Bleſſed Virgin. He adds, that theſe "Enlightned preſcribe Rules to themſelves, in order to bind down the Senſes by inſenſible Degrees; they ſaying, for inſtance, that after having liv'd for ſeveral Days upon "Bread and Water, they muſt then withdraw alone to ſome Solitude, where they muſt "keep their Eyes fix'd on high for ſome Time, without once ſtirring; then bring them "gently downwards, and fix them equally on the Tips of their Noſes, juſt as much on "one Side as on the other..... and continue with their Eyes thus fix'd, till ſuch Time "as the above mention'd Light comes." Bernier farther aſſures us, that ſome of theſe Joguis ſtudy Chymiſtry and the occult Sciences; but the moſt dangerous of all, are thoſe whoſe Devotion being leſs unpolite and ruſtic, indulge themſelves ſo far as to converſe freely with the World. Theſe go bare-footed, bare-headed, and bind a kind of Scarf about them, which reaches down to their Knees, but then they are not ſo filthy and ſlovenly as the other Joguis: They enter with great Familiarity into the Houſes of the Heathens, who think they bring the Bleſſings of the Gods along with them: This is what Bernier relates, in a Letter of his Concerning the Heathens of Indoſtan.

THE Indians have another Order of [a] Bramins, who not only live in the ſtricteſt Celibacy, but are ſo ſcrupulouſly chaſte, as never once to look upon a Woman. They have People to walk before them, purpoſely to give notice to all the Women they meet, to get out of their Sight.

Par de pareils objets les ames ſont bleſſées,

Moliere's Tartuffe.

The Senſe in Engliſh.

Such Objects as theſe taint the Mind, and awake guilty Ideas.

SUCH Inſtances would almoſt perſuade us, that the Creator never intended Devotees ſhould propagate their Species; however, there are very ſtrong Proofs to the contrary. Nevertheleſs, the Bramins, with all their boaſted Modeſty, could not pretend to compare themſelves with the Prieſts of Cybele, ſince the latter uſed to ſuppreſs all Temptations which the fair Sex might excite in them, by a voluntary Caſtration.

DELLA VALLE has deſcrib'd the Manner of their ordaining a Doctor, Prieſt, or Religious, which merits to be taken notice of in this Place. The Candidate, cloth'd in White, with two large Umbrello's on each Side of him, was carried in a Sedan into the midſt of the Green, on which the Pagod ſtood, follow'd by a led Horſe, and accompanied with a great Concourſe of his Brethren, who intended purpoſely to honour the Inſtalment; the Sedan and the Doctors were preceded by ſeveral Soldiers and Players upon Inſtruments: During the March, the She-Dancers, who ſang at the ſame Time, and ſeemed to be led up by another Perſon that danced ſingly, and with her Face always turned towards the Sedan, danc'd a Ballet, or Figure-Dance, after the Indian Manner. The Ceremony of the Ordination was perform'd by pouring Water on the Candidate's Head. The Dances being ended, the Sedan was carried out of the City. The Proceſſion made ſeveral Stations, as they went along, the Dances ſtill continuing; but they always danc'd the laſt Figure-Dance, when the Doctor was got to his Houſe.

WE are told, that theſe Doctors, who are both Prieſts and Religious, always affect a grave, ſevere, and wandring Air; the Manner of ſaluting them, is to throw one's ſelf proſtrate at their Feet, and afterwards to kiſs them. Such as aſpire at being Gægis, are Novices for ſix Months; one of the chief Circumſtances of their Probation, is to mix about a Pound of Cow-Dung with their Victuals.

THE Figure, N° C. repreſents the Manner of accompliſhing all ſuch Vows as are made to Ganga Gramma in a Fit of Sickneſs, or any other imminent Danger. The Worſhip and Ceremony which are obſerv'd with regard to this Deity, are juſtly deſcrib'd in Ch. XI. Part II. of the Diſſertation on the Manners and Religion of the Bramins; to which we ſhall add three Obſervations. I. That the Idol which is carried up and down in a Chariot, is made like that of Jagarnat; whence it may be preſum'd, that Ganga and Jagarnat are one and the ſame Deity. II. That certain Devotees are ſo unaccountably infatuated, as to lay themſelves under Ganga's Chariot, and are there cruſh'd to Pieces, which is alſo done to Jagarnat, as was before obſerv'd. III. That they ſacrifice Hegoats in Honour of Ganga, with a View of obtaining a Remiſſion of their Sins, in which Particular, the Jews and Indians are in ſome meaſure agreed.

THERE are among the Indians certain penitent Women, who are conſulted in the ſame Manner, as antiently the Pythian Maid, and the Sybils, &c. Theſe devote themſelves entirely to the Service of the Gods, who ſometimes honour them ſo far as to lie with them. People croud from all Parts, in order to conſult them about Futurity, and their Anſwers are look'd upon as ſo many Deciſions, which as Chance ſometimes verifies, Prepoſſeſſion rarely ſuffers to be conſider'd as falſe. We ſhall conclude this Article with the following Remark, viz. That the Enthuſiaſts of all Religions, and ſuch as aſcribe to themſelves the Gift of Inſpiration, delight in confounding the Images of carnal Love with that of God. The Ideas of Marriage, Nuptials, Marriage-Bed, Generation, Embraces, &c. are always preſent to their Imaginations. They grow warm with theſe Reflections, nor are even the Legends of our Saints exempt from them, and to theſe we refer the Reader.

The ADORATION of the INDIANS, and their Religious Dances.

THE Manner of the Indians adoring their Gods, is by claſping their Hands before them, and by bringing them thus claſp'd as low as poſſible, to denote their profound Humility: They muſt afterwards be rais'd by inſenſible Degrees in a very modeſt Manner, be brought near their Mouths, be very religiouſly kiſs'd, and thus claſp'd be laid on their Heads; which, according to the Eaſterns both antient and modern, is the greateſt Teſtimony of Reſpect that can poſſibly be ſhewn to any Object. Common Prayers are always ſaid ſtanding; but when the Circumſtances of the Devotee ſeem to require a more profound Humiliation, he muſt fall proſtrate with his Face againſt the Ground, touch it with his Forehead, and kiſs the Duſt: This Homage being perform'd, the Devotee then commonly turns himſelf round ſome ſacred Tree, great Numbers of which are ſet near their Pagods. The Ceremony concludes with an Offering of Rice, Oil, or Milk; and laſtly, the Devotee goes away, having firſt beſtow'd an Alms upon the Miniſters of his Gods.

THE religious Worſhip of the Indians, with regard to their Idols, conſiſts in incenſing them, and waſhing them every Day, and preſenting them with Eatables.

WE have already taken notice of the religious Dances perform'd in honour of the Gods, by a Company of Women who unite together Religion and Proſtitution. Theſe Dances ſuit exactly the Way which thoſe Women have made choice of, they being accompanied with all ſuch Poſtures as are moſt ſhocking to Decency and good Manners. The Prieſts themſelves dance before the Idols with only a Pair of Drawers on; they have a Sword in their Hands, with which they perform ſeveral nimble Feats; the Manner of their worſhipping the Idols, is conformable to the Ideas they have form'd to themſelves of their Gods, or to ſuch as they deſire to inſtil into the Minds of the People.

The

The Veneration the INDIANS pay to SERPENTS; of their Inchantments and Oracles.

THESE Subjects have been already treated in the XXVI. and XXVII. Sections of the Conformity between the Ceremonies and Customs of the Indians, &c. to which we shall now add the following Obſervations.

THE Indians, according to Baldæus, believe that Serpents are divine Genii, and that the meeting them in one's way is propitious. They frequently call their Children and Cows after the Name of a Serpent. The various Repreſentations of theſe Creatures, make one of the fineſt Embelliſhments of their Pagods, and they even direct their Vows and Prayers to them. A [a] Traveller aſſures, "that whenever the Indians meet with Adders in their "Houſes, they firſt intreat them to go away, in the moſt reſpectful Manner; but in caſe "Prayers are ineffectual, they endeavour to prevail with them to abſcond, by offering "them Milk or ſomething elſe, but never drive them out by Force. If the Adder is "obſtinate, and will not go away, they then aſſemble the Bramins, who with all the "Eloquence they are Maſters of, lay before the Animal the ſeveral Motives which ſhould "induce it to have ſome Conſideration for the Houſe into which it is entred, &c.

"SOME of theſe Idolaters, from a whimſical Spirit of Piety, carry Milk and other "kinds of Food into the Foreſts and Roads, for the Subſiſtence of theſe groveling and "contemptible Deities; but the Reaſon of their ſo doing may poſſibly be, that as theſe "Adders by this Means meet with Food ſufficient to live upon in the Fields, it may "hereby prevent their coming to look for any in their Houſes."

WE are aſſur'd, that the Indian Prieſts employ a Charm, which has the Power of taking away all their Venom. Parard de Laval relates in his Voyages, that certain People in India ramble up and down the Country, purpoſely to practiſe an Art, which perhaps is no more than a quack Artifice, and great Skill in ſome particular Drugs. The reverend Mr. Baldæus corroborates this Circumſtance, by the Example of a German Soldier, who, by the help of certain Antidotes, handled theſe venomous Reptiles, without the leaſt Fear, and even laid them by him when he was in Bed. This credulous Dutch Clergyman owns, that he firſt ſuſpected the German for a Wizard, but he afterwards adds, that the Indians of Coromandel and Malabar can charm Serpents, and make them dance by the Power of their Song. May we not ſuppoſe, that their ſinging in this Manner is a mere Impoſition upon the People, purpoſely to make them believe they don't employ any kind of Antidote? Beſides, how did Baldæus know, but that theſe Adders might have been taught, and brought up to Hand a conſiderable Time?

The Indians have their Oracles; but Father Bouchet aſſues us in a Leter of his written to Father [b] Baltus upon that Subject, that they ceaſe in proportion as the Chriſtian Religion ſpreads itſelf in India. "The Devils, ſays he, pronounce theſe Oracles by the "Mouth of the Prieſts of the Idols, or ſometimes of ſuch Perſons as are preſent when "the Devil is invok'd——A Fact, of the Truth whereof no one in India has the leaſt "doubt, and whoſe Evidence is ſuch, as to ſilence any one who ſhould deny, that "the Devils pronounce Oracles, and that thoſe evil Spirits ſeize on the very Prieſts who "invoke them, nay, ſometimes on the Spectators. The Prieſts of the Idols have a ſet

" of abominable Prayers, with which they addreſs the Devils when they are conſulted " on any Affair. The evil Spirit throws the Perſon whom he makes choice of for his Or- " gan, into a violent Agitation; not a Limb of him but trembles, and his Head moves " up and down in a moſt frightful Manner. He ſometimes forces Tears from his Eyes " ——and ſwells him with that kind of Fury and Enthuſiaſm, which was formerly " found among the Heathens; and which the Indians to this Day look upon as a Sign " of the Devil's being preſent, and a Prelude to his Anſwers. —— The Anſwers of theſe " Poſſeſt, are generally made in equivocal Terms, whenever the Queſtions which are " made them relate to Futurity, in which Circumſtance they agree exactly with the O- " racles of the antient Idolaters.

" [a] Of all the Men who take upon themſelves to pronounce the Decrees of Fate, they " put the greateſt Confidence in thoſe Conjurers who pretend to diſcover all ſuch Thieves " as have committed any ſecret Robbery." After having try'd all the common and natu- ral Methods, they have recourſe to the following, of which Father Bouchet gives us the following Inſtance.

" Certain precious Jewels had been ſo artfully and ſo privately ſtolen from the Ge- " neral of the Army of Maduras, that it was impoſſible to fix a Suſpicion on any par- " ticular Perſon; and notwithſtanding the cloſeſt Search was made for the Thief, they " yet could not get the leaſt Intelligence who he was. At length, they conſulted one " Tiberapilli, a young Man, who was one of the moſt celebrated Soothſayers in the " whole Country. . . . . This Man gave ſo exact a Deſcription of the Thief, that he was " eaſily found out. The unhappy Wretch, who was not ſo much as ſuſpected, could " not deny what the Oracle had pronounc'd; whereupon he confeſs'd his Crime, and " proteſted it had been diſcover'd in a ſupernatural Manner.

" When ſeveral are ſuſpected to have committed a Robbery, and that it cannot be fix'd " on one ſingle Perſon, the Indians take the following Method to find out the Thief. They " write the Names of all thoſe ſuſpected Perſons on different Pieces of Paper, and lay them " in a circular Form; after which they conjure up the Devil with the uſual Ceremonies, " and withdraw, after having ſhut up and cover'd the Circle, ſo that no one can move any " Thing in it. They return ſome Time after, uncover the Circle, and he whoſe " Name is found out of its Place, is judg'd to be the Criminal."

They have another Manner of receiving the Reſponſes of their Gods, and that is by the Dreams of their Prieſts. We ſhall not take notice of ſeveral Operations, which the abovemention'd Author relates to juſtify his Opinion, viz. that the Devil pronounces O- racles in India, which he thinks are certainly above all human Power; tho' they may in reality be no more than ſo many Tricks of Hocus Pocus, like thoſe of our Juglers in Europe. We are not afraid, tho' we deliver ourſelves with this Freedom, of being look'd upon as ſo many Free-Thinkers, and as People whom an extravagant Criticiſm has filled with a Spirit of Incredulity, even with regard to Things of the greateſt Notoriety, as Fa- ther Bouchet has expreſſed it. We believe that the Indian Prieſts may be ſo far Cheats, as to invent, without the Aſſiſtance of the Devil, many Arts to deceive the People. If Caves, ſubterraneous Places, and the Hollow of the Statues of the Indian Gods, do not ſeem fit Places for impoſing on the Idolaters, it muſt be confeſs'd that the Indians are much more cunning than the Europeans: But after all, there are other Artifices capable of producing the ſame Effect.

[a] Father Bouchet. Ibid

Fa-

FATHER Bouchet takes notice of another kind of Oracle. " Certain Penitents, ſays " he, perform Sacrifices by the Water-Side in a very ceremonious Manner: Theſe draw " a Circle of one or two Cubits in Diameter. Round this Circle they place their Idols, ſo " as to ſtand towards the eight principal Points of the Compaſs. The Heathens are of " Opinion, that the eight inferior Deities preſide over theſe eight Parts of the World, " at equal Diſtances one from the other. Theſe falſe Divinities are invoked, when " ſome one or other of theſe Statues moves every now and then before all the Spectators, " and turns about in the Place where it ſtood, tho' no one comes near it. The Indians " who perform theſe kind of Sacrifices, ſometime place the Statue, in whoſe Honour the " Sacrifice is perform'd, in the Center of the Circle. Whenever the little Statue moves of " itſelf, they imagine the Gods have granted them an extraordinary Favour. But it " frequently happens, that tho' they offer up ever ſo many Prayers, the Statue continues " immoveable, which is a very unlucky Omen."

The CONSECRATION of the Ground on which they build their PAGODS. Divers Obſervations relating to the PAGODS.

THE foregoing Diſſertations make no mention of the Conſecration of the Ground on which they build their Pagods; but we muſt not omit this Ceremony, and ſome other Cuſtoms which will be mentioned in the Sequel. They firſt incloſe with Boards or Paliſadoes the Ground on which the Pagod is to be built, after which they let the Graſs grow therein: As ſoon as the Graſs is ſhot to a pretty great Height, they turn an Aſh-coloured Cow into it, who ranges up and down, and ſpends the whole Day and Night there. The next Day they view the Place where the Cow has laid down during the Night, and as Cow-Dung is thought by the Indians to be of a very ſacred Nature, they ſearch about very carefully, in order to find whether the Cow has condeſcended to honour that place with the ſacred Depoſit of her Dung; after which they dig a deep Pit, into which they put a Marble Pillar, that riſes to a conſiderable Height above the Surface of the Earth. On this Pillar they ſet the Image or Statue of the God to whom the Pagod is conſecrated: If it is dedicated to Ixora for Inſtance, then Quivelinga, whoſe Poſture we have deſcrib'd, as far as Decency would permit, is placed upon the Pillar. After this the Pagod is built quite round the Pit in which the Pillar is fix'd. That Part where the God reſides is very dark, but they light it up, purely to do him honour, as was before obſerv'd.

THE Pagods of thoſe who live on the Coaſt of Malabar, are built of Marble or hard Stone; thoſe of the Coaſt of Coromandel are made of huge Pieces of Stone, very cloſely cemented. Such is the Pagod of Rammanakoil, the Revenues of which amount to an immenſe Sum; and this Pagod is as famous in India for the Pilgrimages which are made to it, as our Lady of Loretto is among the Chriſtians. The Pagods in Malabar are cover'd with Plates of Copper, and the Gates of their Greens, which anſwer to the Courts that were before the Jewiſh Temples, are cover'd with the ſame Metal. Theſe Gates are generally made of Marble, and are enrich'd with ſeveral Figures of wild or monſtrous Animals. On the Front of the Building, various kinds of Monſters are repreſented, which are ſo many Emblems of the Gods of the Indians, and may poſſibly, at the ſame Time, be of Uſe to fill the Minds of the People with a religious Terror. It is manifeſt from the eighth Chapter of Ezekiel and the tenth Verſe, that this kind of Painting or Sculpture was in uſe among the antient Idolaters, and there's no doubt but theſe Ceremonies, which are ſo general over all the Eaſt, were originally borrowed from the Egyptians.

Besides the great Pagods, which may in ſome meaſure be conſider'd as ſo many Pariſhes and Cathedral Churches, there are a numberleſs Multitude of little ones, built up and down the Fields and Cities, all erected from various Motives of Piety. There are eſpecially great Numbers of them about thoſe Places where dead Bodies have been burnt; and the great Men in India have ſeveral, in which they perform their private Devotions; and theſe have their particular Prieſts, in the ſame Manner as our Chapels.

We have already obſerv'd, that the Indians bare their Feet and Legs before they enter into the Pagod of Ixora; the ſame Cuſtom is obſerv'd with regard to all other Pagods; and as Ablutions make one of the moſt eſſential Parts of their religious Worſhip, they always have ſeveral Tanks or Reſervoirs of Water dug for the Uſe of the Faithful. Linſchooten relates, that the Prieſts of Calicut preſent conſecrated Water to all who enter into the Pagods, which Cuſtom is pretty remarkable.

[a] The Teachers make a pretty explicit Diſtinction between venial and mortal Sins. Ablutions are adapted to both; as for inſtance, they pretend to expiate a petty Sin, and to ſink, as it were, to the Bottom, by plunging over Head and Ears in the Ganges, or ſome other ſacred River; but there are others of ſo black a Dye, that no Water can poſſibly waſh them out, be the Ablutions ever ſo many Times repeated; and the Wretch who has arrived at ſuch a Pitch of Wickedneſs, is thrown out of his Caſte, and certainly put to Death. The Indians rank the following among the venial Sins; the ſuffering one's ſelf to be touched by an impure Perſon, the touching a dead Body, (nay, ſo ſqueamiſh are they on this Head, that they refrain from all Communication with the Relations of the Deceaſed for a Fortnight together) the coming near a Woman in Childbed, or the touching her Child. The ſame Number of Days is obſerv'd with regard to them; which Cuſtom is agreeable to that of the Jews on the ſame Occaſion. They alſo conſider as a venial Sin, the coming near a Woman who has her Naturalia, and the touching of thoſe who have touch'd unclean Perſons. If any Perſon, regardleſs of the Uncleanneſs he may have contracted, preſumes to eat Rice before he has purified himſelf, he is guilty of a mortal Sin. All Perſons of Diſtinction, who eat Rice prepar'd by People of an inferior Caſte, or have any Commerce with Women of a meaner Extraction than their own, contract the ſame Guilt. Any one who mixes together Rice which was put into different [b] Diſhes, and afterwards eats it, commits a mortal Sin. If ſeveral Bramins, though all of the ſame Caſte, eat together, they commit a Sin; and if any one preſumes to touch with his Right-Hand (which is the Hand they eat with) the Perſon who ſits next to them, ſuch Action is alſo looked upon as ſinful.

When the Meal is ended, they are obliged to gather up all the Rice that is left, and throw it away as a Thing unclean. They clean with very freſh Cow-Dung the Place where they had eat; and though no more than a ſingle Grain of Rice, of that which they had fed upon, were to fall upon a Perſon, that alone would make him unclean; and the Perſon thus polluted, muſt run that Moment to the Water, and waſh himſelf thoroughly. If a Perſon puts his Finger into his Mouth, he thereby pollutes himſelf. If two Perſons of different Caſtes waſh together, and that he of the inferior Tribe happens to ſpurt Water on the other, the latter is thereby render'd wholly unclean, and the Ablution muſt in this Caſe be perform'd over again.

The Manner how Ablutions are perform'd by the Heathens of Malabar.

[a] WE before took notice of certain [b] Reſervoirs of Water, which the Indians call Tanks. When the Malabarians waſh themſelves in theſe, they are quite naked, ſave only a Piece of Linnen Cloth, of about two or three Fingers Breadth, which they wind round their Bodies. Theſe, before they go into the Water, ſhake a little of it into the Air, with three Fingers of the Right-Hand, in honour of Brama, Wiſtnou, and Ixora, pronouncing the following Words at the ſame Time; In drawing near this Water, and touching it, I renounce all my Sins. We muſt not omit three Particulars, which they believe concerning Tanks. 1. That the Stone which ſtands near thoſe Reſervoirs of Water is Brama. 2. That the Place in which they waſh themſelves is Wiſtnou. And, 3. That the Tank itſelf is Ixora. At their firſt going into the Water they divide it with their two Hands, and immediately plunge into it, after which they take Water and throw it eight Times into the Air, for the ſake of thoſe [c] eight Beings who preſide over the Univerſe; which being done, they waſh their Faces thrice, invoking at the ſame Time Siri Pagod, Wiſtnou's Wife. In fine, they take Water a third Time, and throw it towards Heaven, as an Offering to the Sun. They then rub their Hands and Feet with Cow-dung Aſhes, diluted in a little Water, crying out at the ſame Time, be purified. They muſt put theſe Aſhes in the Hollow of the Left-Hand: the Right, according to the Indians, being the Image of Heaven, and the Left of the Earth. They likewiſe ſay, that the Hollow of the latter repreſents the Part where Generation is performed. The Right-Hand laid upon the Left, forms the complete Figure of the Egg which we have already deſcribed, under the Name of Ixoretta, when we mentioned that Divinity. It was neceſſary to give the Reader this Hint, in order for his better underſtanding what we ſhall hereafter mention on the Ceremony of the Indian Purification. Theſe, after taking ſome Cow-Dung Aſhes, preſs the Right-Hand againſt the Left, imagining they then repreſent Heaven and Earth joined together. They afterwards disjoin them, and ſay that this repreſents the Separation of Heaven and Earth. They afterwards write the two following Syllables on the Aſhes which they have in the Hollow of their Left-Hand, viz. Ja-ra, which theſe Idolaters ſay, expreſs the Combat between the Fire and the Air in the Egg, before they were diſunited. This Writing being ended, they then lay their Hands on every Part of the Body; firſt a little above the Navel, afterwards on the Navel itſelf, on the Hollow of the Stomach, on the Breaſt, the Forehead, the Head, the Crown of the Head, the Eyes, the Ears, and the lower Parts of the Body. While all this is doing, they turn themſelves towards the eight Governors of the World, and ſhew their Hands are empty in the Attitude of a Perſon who beſtows. They conclude the Purification by taking up Aſhes with three Fingers of the Right-Hand, with which they rub their Foreheads, their Shoulders, and Breaſts, in honour of Brama, of Wiſtnou, and Ixora.

[a] Baldæus's Deſcription of Malabar. The Ablutions of the Bramins are taken notice of in the Diſſertation on their Religion and Cuſtoms, Chap. X. Part I. but with ſome Difference.

[b] They nevertheleſs uſe the running Stream as often as Opportunity permits, and fancy the waſhing in theſe to be more meritorious than the bathing in any ſtanding Water. Poſſibly the Indian Legiſlators may in this Caſe have had a View to what was proper and convenient for their Country, for all that is required in India is only the waſhing and bathing one's ſelf. See Bernier's Voyages to Mogul, Vol. II. p. 138. Dutch Edition printed in 1709.

[c] Their Names and Functions are found in Part II. Chap. I. of the Diſſertation on the Religion and Cuſtoms of the Bramins.

The Holy Aſhes, &c.

FROM what has been ſaid, 'tis pretty evident that Cow-Dung Aſhes are look'd upon to be of a very holy Nature; [a] and indeed the Indians ſprinkle their Foreheads, and both their Shoulders, and Breaſts with them every Morning. Theſe Aſhes are daily offer'd to the Gods, and the Joguis ſeldom fail of having a good Stock of them by them, in order to diſtribute them among the Devotees, who always reward them very liberally with Alms. The Joguis alſo affect to cover their Faces and Bodies with theſe Aſhes, and alſo ſcatter them over their Idols. In fine, we ſhall obſerve that in the Courts of ſeveral Indian Princes, certain Perſons are appointed to preſent regularly theſe Aſhes diluted in a little Water, and laid on the Leaves of an Indian Fig-Tree. This Ceremony is perform'd publickly, and in the Morning, in order that all their Devotees may partake of this ſalutary Unction. 'Twould be needleſs to trouble the Reader with the fabulous Stories by which they endeavour to give a Reaſon for the Inſtitution of this Cuſtom, therefore I ſhall refer him to Baldæus.

WHENEVER the King or Samorin of Calicut goes to pay his Devotions in the Pagod, all the Way through which he paſſes is purified with freſh Cow-Dung: This being done, two Women walk before his Majeſty, carrying two Veſſels full of this Cow-Dung diluted in Water, and ſcatter it before him. The King is faſting, but the Ablution was perform'd before. In fine, not to trouble the Reader any farther with the ſacred Qualities of Cow-Dung, 'twill be ſufficient to obſerve, that the Indian Idolaters employ it in every Thing which requires Purification. They alſo uſe it for the cleaning their Houſes, their Moveables and Utenſils.

EVERY Part of the Body of a Cow is inhabited by ſome Deity or other. As for inſtance, Quenevady and Superhennia reſide between its Horns, the Sun and Moon in its Eyes, Brama's two Wives in its Ears, Ixora in its Noſe, Wiſtnou on its Tongue, &c. But were not all theſe ſilly Particulars the Dreams of ſome Indian Poet? Perhaps too they meant no more in it, than to expreſs the excellent Properties of this Animal. Be that as it will, Cow's Piſs is of ſo ſacred a Nature, that thoſe among them who are inſpired with a true Spirit of Devotion, make no ſcruple of pouring it into their Hands, waſhing their Faces, and even drinking it.

THE Malabarians aſſert, that Kings are bound to be the Protectors of Cows and Bramins. The Samorin above-mention'd [b], offers Flowers to thoſe Animals every Morning.

The Feaſts, Faſts, and other religious Practices of the Indians.

HERE follows ſome Additions to what has been already related on this Head, in the Diſſertation on the Religion and Manners of the Bramins. The Indians have a kind of Carnaval call'd Huli. The Engraver has exactly expreſs'd all the different Poſtures of their Carnaval in a former Plate.

[a] Baldæus, ubi ſupra.

[b] Six of the Samorin's Pages adorn'd with theſe Flowers, and powder'd, if I may uſe the Expreſſion, with Cow-Dung Aſhes, preſent themſelves daily at this Prince's Levee, who afterwards ſends them to preſent Flowers to his Cows.

THEY ſalute the Sun every Morning, and throw up Water to that Planet whenever they perform their Ablutions, in order to prevent the evil Genii who inhabit between the Mountains from oppoſing his Riſing.

THE Indians are extremely ſuperſtitious with regard to [a] Eclipſes, and redouble their Ablutions whenever theſe happen. Bernier has deſcrib'd the whole Ceremony of one of theſe Ablutions. "The Moment theſe Idolaters perceiv'd that the Sun began to be "eclips'd, they made a great Shout, plung'd themſelves immediately over Head and "Ears into the Water, and ſtanding upright in it, their Hands and Eyes lifted up to-"wards the Sun, they mutter'd out their Prayers, took up Water every now and then, "and threw it up towards the Planet of the Day." While this was performing, they held down their Heads, and made ſeveral Motions with their Arms. After this they again repeated their Prayers, plung'd themſelves afreſh, and continued ſo to do till the Eclipſe was over. Then they all withdrew, having firſt thrown ſeveral Pieces of Silver a conſiderable Way into the Water, and given Alms to the Bramins, who never fail to aſſiſt at this devout Solemnity. The Indians were no ſooner come out of the Water, but they chang'd their Clothes; and ſuch as were moſt charitable, gave thoſe they had pull'd off to the Bramins.

THE Indians imagine that the Eclipſe of the Sun is [b] owing to the Malice of an evil Genius, who abuſes that Star, and gives it that black Colour. They are firmly perſuaded, that the great Source of Light muſt certainly ſuffer the moſt dreadful Torments in this Diſtreſs; and conſequently that 'tis the Duty of every faithful Indian to endeavour at its Deliverance; and this they are ſure of obtaining by Prayers, Alms, and Ablutions. All theſe Actions are infinitely more meritorious during the Time of an Eclipſe than on any other Occaſion.

THE Devotees among the Indians are oblig'd to offer up their Prayers thrice a-Day, i. e. in the Morning, at Noon, and at Night, with their Faces turn'd Eaſtward, and are to waſh themſelves as many Times.

[c] THEY keep ſeveral Faſts, one of the chief whereof is Egadexi, a Word ſignifying eleven. This Faſt is obſerv'd the 11th of the Full Moon, and the 11th of the New, ſo that they faſt twice every Moon. They then make but one Meal, which is always at four or five a-Clock in the Afternoon; but they are not allow'd any other Food except Beans, Peas, Milk, and Fruits; and Drinks of every kind are alſo forbid them during theſe Seaſons of Penance. The fabulous Original which they aſcribe to this Faſt, is too trifling to be taken notice of in this Place.

[d] THE Faſt call'd by them, Quiveraſiri, falls in the Month of February, and is very ſevere. They are not allow'd either to eat or lie down for four and twenty Hours, during which they relate the fabulous Hiſtories of their Gods, and of their Tribes. They go ſeveral Times in Proceſſion round their Pagods, and viſit them all Night long till they ſee the Dawn appear. 'Tis then they ſacrifice to their Gods, offer them Money, and give Alms to the Prieſts, which concludes the whole Faſt.

[a] The Women have a particular Faſt-Day, call'd Tirinadiri ; 'tis kept on the 27th of the Moon, in Commemoration of the Death and Reſurrection of Canteven, who is the Cupid of the Indians of Malabar and of Coromandel. 'Tis related, that Ixora being jealous of certain Familiarities which were obſerv'd between his Wife Parameſceri and Cupid, burnt the amorous God with a Glance from the Eye which is plac'd in the midſt of his Forehead. The diſconſolate Parameſceri could not ſurvive the Loſs of the fond God; but ſome Time after, went to a Mountain and there obtain'd a ſecond Birth. Here the unhappy Goddeſs ſpent her Days in Retirement and Penance, with a firm Perſuaſion that Abſence, and a ſpecious Appearance of Remorſe, would cure her Husband's Jealouſy; and indeed Ixora's Anger began to cool, and was no longer able to reſiſt that conjugal Tenderneſs which again began to revive in his Heart. He was vanquiſh'd by her endearing Softneſs, and promiſed to be a more kind Husband for the future, and to reſtore the Family to that Tranquility which he, by a Fit of ill Humour, had interrupted. The Reſult of the whole, was, that he confeſs'd his Fault with the beſt Grace imaginable, and as a Pledge of this Renewal of their conjugal Fondneſs, he conſented that Cupid ſhould again be raiſed from the Dead. Thrice happy in being a Cuckold, and at the ſame Time contented with his being ſo!

[b] The Faſt of Maſaupada is as holy a Faſt as the three abovemention'd. Their Devotees are oblig'd to obſerve it regularly for twelve Years together, after which they may reſt aſſur'd, that the Gods will multiply in an extraordinary Manner thoſe Years, and alſo the Bleſſings of Life. Here follows the whole of this Devotion. They begin a Faſt the laſt Day of October which continues to the tenth of December following. They are oblig'd to waſh themſelves daily, to change their Clothes, and viſit a Pagod ſacred to Wiſtnou. In the Morning, the Devotee cloth'd in very neat and clean Apparel, goes an hundred and one Times round this holy Pagod; but thoſe of the moſt conſummate Piety, go a thouſand and one Times. While this Duty is performing, they are oblig'd to mumble over ſoftly one of Wiſtnou's myſterious Names an hundred and one Times, and be very careful they are not over-heard. The Devotee is to eat nothing but Figs and Milk, muſt abſtain from all Commerce with Women, muſt let Wiſtnou be his only Theme, and be eternally ſinging his Praiſes. The ſecond Year the Faſt begins on the firſt of December, and ends the tenth of January: The third, the firſt of January, and ends the tenth of February; and ſo on to the twelfth Year. Maſaupada ſignifies the Month of Faſting.

The STUDY of the BRAMINS.

WE ſhall conclude theſe Remarks on the religious Ceremonies of the Indians of Malabar and Coromandel, with a curſory View of the Studies of the Bramins.

[c] THE City of Benares or Benarous, ſituated on the Ganges in Bengal, is the general School, and, as it were, the Athens of the Heathens of India, and is [d] therefore frequented by all thoſe Bramins and Religious, whoſe Inclinations lead them to Study. There are no Colleges nor Schools in the Eaſt Indies among us in Europe; but the Maſters and Doctors are diſpers'd up and down the City of Benares, and live chiefly in the Gardens or the Suburbs. Some of theſe Doctors have four Pupils, others ſix or ſeven,

[d] In a Deſcription of the Indies, written by a Mahometan, and tranſlated into French by M. Renaudot, printed in 1718, mention is made of Canouge, as a City peopled with Indian Poets and Philoſophers. Notice is alſo taken there of certain Academies of Sarendip or Ceylan, which in all probability does not ſubſiſt at this Time.

and the moſt eminent among them twelve or fifteen at moſt, who ſtudy ten or twelve Years under their Maſters. " Their Study in general, according to Bernier, is carried " on after a very cold and languid Manner, which is owing to the laggiſh and indolent " Diſpoſition of the greateſt part of the Indians, to which the Heat of the Country, and " their Diet, do not a little contribute: And as they are not like the Europeans excited to " Labour from a Principle of Emulation, and that Hope which we entertain of making " a conſiderable Progreſs; they therefore ſtudy at their Eaſe, and without torturing their " Brains, while they eat their Kichery, or Mixtures of Pulſe, which wealthy Merchants " provide for them." Nevertheleſs, ſeveral Travellers, and among the reſt the Miſſionaries, ſpeak very advantageouſly of the Vivacity and Penetration of theſe Indians, a Caſt of Mind much more natural to the Heat of the Southern Climates, than to the Cold of our Northern ones. As to Emulation, and the Hopes of making a Progreſs, poſſibly theſe are unknown in Mogul, where Heatheniſm is not predominant; but 'tis different in other Parts of India, where the Studies of the Bramins are had in great Eſteem, and generally pave the Way to every Thing which may flatter the Pride and Vanity of Men.

" THEIR firſt Study, ſays Bernier, is the Hanſcrit, which is a Language that bears " no manner of Affinity with the Indian Tongue that is generally ſpoken, and is known " only to their Literati." In which reſpect, it may be conſider'd in the ſame Light as the Hebrew, the Greek, and Latin in Europe.

" HANSCRIT is as much as to ſay, The pure Tongue. They call it after this Manner, " and even give it the Name of Holy and Divine Language, becauſe they are of Opinion " that God, by Brama's Intervention, publiſh'd the four [a] Beths, or ſacred Books, in this " Tongue." So that this Language and theſe Books are exactly the ſame with regard to them, as the Hebrew and the Bible are with us. " They pretend that this Language is as " antient as Brama, whoſe Age they always reckon by Lecks, or hundreds of thouſands of " Years..... Be that as it will, we muſt allow it to be of great Antiquity, ſince the " Books of their Religion, which are undoubtedly ſo, are written only in that Tongue; " not to mention that the philoſophical, phyſical, poetical, and a great Number of Books " in other Faculties, are all written in it, a great Hall in Benares being fill'd with them.

" AFTER they have learn'd the Hanſcrit, (which is a very laborious Task, becauſe they " have no good Grammar of it) they generally apply themſelves to read the Purance " which is a kind of Gloſſary, and Abridgment of the Beths; for theſe Beths are huge " Volumes, if thoſe, ſays Bernier, were the Beths, which I was ſhewn at Benares: They " are vaſtly ſcarce, and my Aga could never meet with them, tho' he did all that lay in his " Power to purchaſe a Set; and indeed they conceal them very cloſely, for fear of their " falling into the Hands of the Mahometans, who frequently commit them to the Flames. " Some, after having read the Purance, apply themſelves to the Study of Philoſophy; " but here they make but a very ſlender Progreſs."

FROM their ſix moſt celebrated Philoſophers, ſix different Sects have ſprung, each whereof have their Followers, who are all poſſeſs'd with that Spirit of Jealouſy and Prejudice which prevails in other Countries; each of them flatters himſelf he has Truth on his Side, and fancies he has hit on the true Senſe of thoſe Books in which the Myſteries of that Philoſophy are compriz'd better than the reſt. Beſides theſe ſix Sects, there is another in Mogul, which is divided into twelve Branches: " But this Sect is not ſo nume- " rous as the reſt; its Followers are hated and deſpis'd, and look'd upon as Atheiſts and " People of no manner of Religion, &c.

[a] It is the ſame with the Vedam mention'd in the Diſſertation on the Religion and Manners, &c. Part I. Ch IV.

" THE Books wherein the Tenets of all theſe various Sects are contain'd, treat of the " firſt Principles of Things, but after a very different Manner: Some hold that all Things " are compos'd of little indiviſible Bodies, not becauſe of their Solidity ..... but in pro- " portion to their Smallneſs; in which they agree pretty nearly with the Opinions of " Democritus and Epicurus, but in ſo confus'd a Manner ..... that one ſcarce knows " what to adhere too ..... which poſſibly may be as much the Fault of their Doctors, " as of the Authors they interpret. Others teach, that all Things are compos'd of Matter " and Form ..... There are others again who teach, that all Things are compos'd of the " four Elements, and of Non-Entity ..... which is almoſt the ſame as our Privation. " They admit various Manners of this Non-Entity: Some hold that Light and Darkneſs " are the firſt Principles of all Things ..... others admit Privation, or rather Privations, " which they diſtinguiſh from Non-Entity. There are ſtill others, who pretend that all " Things are compos'd of Accidents ..... but they are univerſally agreed that theſe " Principles are eternal ..... They have a great Number of little Treatiſes of Phyſic, " but theſe are rather Collections of Preſcriptions than any Thing elſe: The Chief, and " at the ſame Time the moſt antient, is written in Verſe;" as was formerly the Cuſtom of ſeveral People of Europe, who ranking Phyſic among the divine Myſteries, us'd to work up its Doctrine in the ingenious Obſcurity of Poeſy. For which Reaſon, the Prieſts among the Gauls, the Greeks, and Egyptians, were Phyſicians at the ſame Time, as is ſtill the Cuſtom in America, which has been already obſerv'd. " The Practice of theſe " Indians differs pretty much from Ours; the Principles which they have eſtabliſh'd are " as follows: That a Perſon who is ſick of a Fever does not require much Nouriſhment; " that Abſtinence is the beſt Remedy againſt Diſeaſes; that nothing can be worſe for a ſick " Perſon than Meat-Broths, or ſooner putrifies in the Stomach of one who has a Fever; " that Bleeding ſhould never be us'd but in Caſes of the greateſt Neceſſity, ſuch as when " there is any fear of a Patient's being delirious, or when they find there is an Inflam- " mation in the Breaſt, the Liver, or the Loins." 'Twould be to no purpoſe to aſſert that this Practice is not the propereſt in ſeveral Caſes; it ſucceeds in the Indies, which ſufficiently juſtifies it againſt our Notions on this Head.

THE Indians have no manner of Skill in Anatomy, the Reaſon of which is, becauſe they never open either human or any other Bodies.

" As to Aſtronomy, they have their Tables, by which they foretel Eclipſes; and tho' " they may not calculate them with ſo great a Nicety as the European Mathematicians, " it is certain they come pretty near the Matter; however, they argue in the ſame Man- " ner on the Eclipſe of the Moon, as on that of the Sun; they aſſert that it is owing to " its being barbarouſly treated by a black and ugly Devil ..... They likewiſe affirm, " that the Moon is four hundred thouſand Coſſes above the [a] Sun, i. e. upwards of fifty " thouſand Leagues; that its Light is not borrow'd, and that it is hence we receive a " certain vital Water, which ..... is congregated in the Brain; whence it deſcends, as " from a Source, into the ſeveral Limbs for their reſpective Functions. They moreover " aſſert that the Sun, the Moon, and all the Stars in general are Deutas, i. e. Genii." " Theſe two laſt Opinions are neither new, nor peculiar to the Indian Doctors. " They " pretend, that Night is made by the Sun's withdrawing himſelf behind a Mountain, " ſituated in the midſt of the Earth, which Mountain is ſeveral thouſand Leagues in " Height, and is ſhap'd like an inverted Cone, ſo that they never have Day, but when the " Sun comes from behind that Mountain.

" THEY believe that the Earth is a flat Superficies, and of a triangular Form; that " it has ſeven Stories, all which differ in Beauty, in Perfection, and in the Inhabitants

" with which they are peopled ; and that each of them has a Sea round it." The Reader may turn to what was before obſerv'd of theſe Seas, of the Mountain plac'd in the midſt of the Earth, and of the different Orders of Spirits, of Genii, and of ſubaltern Gods who inhabit theſe Seas. All theſe Notions, when taken in a literal Senſe, make an odd jumble of Nonſenſe; but ought they not to be conſider'd in the ſame Light as thoſe Deſcriptions we meet with in Books of Devotion, and even the Scriptures? What Reply could we make to the Indians, if, becauſe our Saviour has ſaid that a[a] River of living Water ſhould flow from the Man who believ'd in him, a Mogul Painter ſhould repreſent a good Chriſtian diſſolving away in Water, and his Belly as an ever-running Spring? Might we not juſtly laugh at the Artiſt? However, tho' we venture to argue after this Manner, we don't at the ſame Time endeavour to account for all the Abſurdities in the Syſtems which the Heathens have form'd to themſelves.

" THEIR Chronology is as erroneous as their Geography ; they don't aſſert that the " World is eternal, but they tell us that 'tis of vaſt Antiquity ; it will, ſay they, laſt four " Dgugnes, each Dgugne containing an hundred Lecks, i.e. an hundred Times an " hundred thouſand Years:" Nevertheleſs they are not exactly agreed with regard to the World's Duration. But we ſhall obſerve by the Way, that all the antient as well as modern Eaſterns, univerſally aſcribe a greater Antiquity to the World than we do, which is ſo much the more ſurprizing, ſince it ſeems natural to think that the Aſiaticks ſhould have preſerv'd, either by Tradition, or ſome other Means, more exact Monuments upon this Head.

THE Notions they have of Genii and Demons are very ridiculous and confus'd: " Theſe, ſay they, are of three kinds, viz. good, bad, and indifferent. . . . . According " to ſome, they are made of Fire, or as others ſay of Light; many affirm they are in- " corruptible; others, that they are even Portions or Parts of the Deity; in fine, others, " that they are ſo many Deities, ſeparated and diſpers'd up and down the World."

As to Phyſics, their Notions are, that ſeveral Individuals of each Species, that ever hath exiſted, or ſhall exiſt to the end of Ages, were created from the Beginning of the World. But to paraphraſe this Notion, they believe that all theſe Individuals were comprehended in the firſt or original Bud of each Species, and that they only unfold themſelves in the Time appointed by Heaven, in order to fill up that Place in the World, for which they have been predeſtinated.

Americans, their Original, 1. The Moderns excel the Antients in Navigation. Diſcoveries made by the Antients, vaſtly inferior to thoſe of the Moderns, ibid. Antients had little Knowledge in Aſtronomy. Some of their Diſcoveries owing to Chance. Probably the Antients were unacquainted with America. The Predictions of Seneca the tragic Writer, the Product of Fancy. How America was firſt peopled we cannot tell. Some Hints on their Original. The Conformity of their Cuſtoms with the People of our Hemiſphere. Purchas thinks America has not been long peopled. Otherwiſe why ſo many Deſarts in the Midſt of it? Or had not Colonies ſent to it? The Mexicans cannot trace a thouſand Years backward. Theſe Reaſons invalidated: 1ſt, The Inhabitants of America were thinn'd by their bloody Wars, and their devouring one another. 2dly, Not probable that Mexico and Peru were deſart four or five thouſand Years. No People, the Jews and Chineſe excepted, can trace higher than two thouſand Years. Many Ages required for the Eſtabliſhment of the different Nations in America. The Spaniards found the Iſlands thereof well peopled. The great Variety of Languages among them conſider'd. Could not arrive at the Perfection they were in, in ſeven or eight hundred Years. Reflections on the European Languages, to prove the Antiquity of thoſe of America. Probably, Colonies came firſt to America by Land. That Phenician Sailors were caſt there by a Storm. Some Probability of this from the Hiſtory of the Americans. Thoſe Men ſuppoſed to be Giants, ſome would think the Canaanites, whom Joſhua had forced from their Dwellings, ſettled in Peru. The Americans could make but very ſhort Voyages, having but little Veſſels, 3. Why America was peopled by the Phenicians and Carthaginians, N. 3. Becauſe of the long Voyages of thoſe People to the Canary Iſlands, &c. Arguments againſt it. That thoſe People rather ſailed to the ſouthern Parts of Africa. Other Arguments to prove it probable that they might have been there. That the Antients always endeavour'd to ſet the Foundation of famous Cities and great Men in the moſt conſpicuous Light, and that the Vulgar were fond of the Deceit, ibid. Difficult to know when America was firſt peopled, 4. The Peruvian Annals ſcarce comprehend four Centuries. Affinity between the Cuſtoms of the Phenicians and Americans. Both live in Huts, and rove from Place to Place. That of Languages not to be depended upon. Some Phenician Words in the American Tongue, 4. Some think the Americans owe their Original to the ten diſperſed Tribes of Iſrael, 5. The Americans ſay, that ſix Perſons ſaved themſelves in a general Deluge, N. 4. The Delightfulneſs of the American Climate, ſuppoſed to invite the Carthaginians thither. Some Traces of the Jewiſh Religion found in Yucatan, 5. Emanuel de Moraes thinks the Jews ſettled in Braſil. His Reaſons from the Conformity of their Cuſtoms in Marriages, Mournings, &c. Theſe Affinities however of little Weight. Grotius his Opinion of the Original of the Americans. That the Inhabitants of Panama and Mexico came originally from the North. De Laat ſeems to have refuted Grotius's Opinion. Grotius thinks the Peruvians came originally from China. His Reaſons, from the ſprightly and penetrating Genius of both, 5. Worſhip, Hieroglyphics, particularly their great Lawgiver Manecocapac. De Laat's Refutation of this. That the Peruvians were never as skilful Artiſts as the Chineſe. De Laat refuted. The Peruvians did not underſtand Navigation. The Chineſe Veſſels cannot perform long Voyages. The Idolatry of the Chineſe different from that of the Peruvians. The latter ignorant of the Art of Writing. Original of the Americans vaſtly obſcure. They regard the Time preſent only. Original of the European Nations not well known. Difference between the Americans and ourſelves. The Greeks and Romans could not boaſt a very great Antiquity. The Author's own Notion of the Original of the Americans. That America was very populous a few Centuries after the Flood. How peopled. Kingdoms form'd, 6. In the infant Ages of the World Husbandry was the only Employment. How the firſt Conqueſts were made in Aſia. A rich Shepherd ſends away a Son, or a Dependant, to a great Diſtance, with a numerous Flock. From this Flock another ſprings. The Shepherd thus detach'd, grows rich, and ſends away in like Manner a Son or Servant with a Flock, and ſo on; by which means Europe, Aſia, Africa, and America, were peopled in two Centuries. A Computation how the Poſterity of Noah may have peopled the three former with thirty two Millions of Inhabitants in an hundred and fifty Years. Biſhop Burnet's Travels quoted on this Occaſion. Arguments to ſupport this Computation, from the ordinary Courſe of Nature, 7. That Part of Noah's Poſterity above-mentioned, probably went to ſeek their Fortunes in America. How theſe might people it. That Mankind were much more robuſt and vigorous in thoſe Days. Health not prejudiced by Luxury. Theſe Colonies paſs'd into America by the way of Tartary. Reaſons of it. From Father Hennepin, who relates that four Savages came as Ambaſſadors to the Iſſatis, and made a prodigious long Journey by Land. That there are no Straits of Anian. That the Savages above-mentioned inhabit the North of California, which extends, perhaps, to the Frontiers of Tartary, &c. This Conjecture probable. The North Part of Japan ſtill undiſcover'd. The Japaneſe themſelves ſay, that the People who live to the North of their Country, inhabit a Country of a vaſt Extent, 8. The Japaneſe as little acquainted with thoſe Countries as the Europeans. This Country muſt extend twelve or thirteen hundred Leagues, from California to Tartary. Proofs that the Lands of Jeſſo and Japan are join'd. Tartary may be called the Nurſery of all Nations. The old World govern'd by Nations who came originally from Tartary. Tartarians and Americans lead much the ſame Life. Both continually in Wars. A Similitude from their Face and Shapes. Proved from European People, viz. the Lombards, Gaſcoons, Spaniards, Normans, Granadans, Turks, 9. New-Comers acquire inſenſibly the Air and Cuſtoms of the People whom they ſettle among, yet ſtill preſerve a Tincture of their Original. BANIANS, a People of India, from Mr. Lord's Relation, 305. Are meanly habited. Deſpiſed by the Mahometans. Profeſs great Probity. Employ'd as Brokers. Are great Cheats, ibid.

Banians, or Shudderys, the third Indian Caſte, 336. Are Merchants or Brokers. An innocent and harmleſs People. The ſame Number of Caſts as the Banians. Odd Way of buying and ſelling, ibid.

Banians, Reflections on their Principles, 340. Their firſt Age a Figment of their own deviſing. Peopling of the World by placing four Women at the four Winds, ridiculous. The ſame of the ſecond Age. Their Tenets ſilly and ſuperſtitious. Their Fondneſs for the Number Four. The Peruſal of the Abſurdity of the Banian Religion, may ſtrengthen Chriſtians in theirs, 341

Baſtards, Notions which different Nations have of them, 50. Injuſtice of the Europeans with regard to them. Some American Nations very jealous on this Head. Conduct of the Jews and Chriſtians with regard to Baſtards. Whim of the Mahometans, ibid. The continual Cuckoldom of the heathen Gods. Ancients, who gloried in being thought the ſpurious Offspring of Gods. Lacedemonians allow their Wives to proſtitute themſelves with their Slaves, but ſend the Children away, 51

Beauty of the Americans, 33. Some Reflections on Beauty in general. As ſome Beauties pleaſe all Men, ſo Deformity may appear ſo to all Eyes. That we could never admire Monſters, ibid. The Beaſts abhor Deformity. Objected, that the Author of Nature might have made all Men deform'd. Anſwer to it. Thoſe Savages who bruiſe the Noſes of their Children have not a juſt Idea of Proportion, 34. Verſes upon Beauty, N. ibid. Odd Taſte of the Africans. Whimſical Cuſtom of the Miſſiſippians, who make their Children's Heads into the Form of a Cone, which puts them to dreadful Pain. Some Americans ſmear themſelves with Greaſe and Oil. Reaſons why the Negroes are black, 33. From the burning Sands in Africa, ibid. and the few Rivers. Thought alſo to proceed from the Climate they inhabit. Americans have generally long black Hair. Europeans very whimſical in their Taſte, with regard to the Beauty of Hair. Difficult to determine whether the Fair or Brown are moſt beautiful. Diſtich from Fontenelle. Antient Poets generally made their Goddeſſes fair. Beards in no Repute among the Savages. The Americans look upon them with Veneration, 35. The Antients lov'd large blue Eyes. The French admired greeniſh Eyes formerly. A large black Eye now moſt eſteem'd. The Americans are tall, well-ſhaped, nimble, and active. Thoſe who inhabit the Mountains, very nimble. Men depend much on the Soil. Were the Inhabitants of Valleys to be carried upon Mountains, and vice verſa, they'd be very much chang'd. That Nations may change their Manners entirely. Prov'd from Ammianus Marcellinus and Ceſar. Exemplified in the Gauls and modern French, 36. Reflections on the Fickleneſs of the French, with regard to Dreſs, which they make a very ſerious Article, from Monſ. Muralt, N. 37. The Poſterity of robuſt People may be very weak, which may be owing to ſeveral Cauſes. The American Nations not ſuſceptible to theſe Changes, becauſe they adhere ſtrictly to Nature. Are almoſt as unpoliſh'd as Brutes. Sneer upon our European Debauchees, ibid. The French vaſtly polite in the moſt inſignificant Trifles, ſuch as in taking up a Glove, &c. Burials of the Americans, 71. The Cuſtom of bewailing the Dead, founded on a natural Principle. To what this Cuſtom may poſſibly be owing. Some Nations cut off their Hair in Token of Sorrow, ask the Deceaſed why they left the World? Whether he wanted any Thing when alive? &c. This Cuſtom accounted for. Poſſibly took its Riſe from ſome great Perſon's lamenting a Friend or Relation, who was immediately imitated by his Subalterns, out of meer Flattery, ibid. This Ceremony being imitated by others, grew up inſenſibly into a Cuſtom, ibid. Heighten'd by the Superſtition natural to Man. The Savages of North-America bewail their Dead, and keep their Corpſe and embalm them. Funeral Songs ſung by their old Women, &c. Obſerv'd alſo by the Romans. A more accurate Deſcription of the Calumet, ibid. It is a Paſſport to all who go to the Allies of ſuch Nation as ſend it. The Symbol of Peace. The Seal of all public Undertakings, of all important Affairs, and public Ceremonies, 81

Calumet-Dance, 102. In a Hut in Winter-Time, in the open Air in Summer. A great Mat ſpread. The tutelary Deity placed on it. The Calumet on its Right Hand. A Trophy of Bows, Arrows, &c. round the Calumet. The Deity ſaluted. Incens'd with Tobacco. All ſet round on their Poſteriors. The Calumet is taken up by an old Man, who dances. The Motions of the Calumet odd and whimſical. A Battle, to which they are incited by Kettle-Drums. The Man who holds the Calumet, invites ſome young Man to fight him, who accordingly does ſo. The Combat fought in Cadence. The Conqueror relates his military Atchivements to the Aſſembly. A Preſent made him. The Calumet given from Hand to Hand, ibid.

Captives, how treated among the Americans, 105. A Priſoner is bound when he ſings the Death-Song, ibid. Particulars of one of theſe Songs, N. ibid. Warriors return from the Inroad, they break into the Dead Sheut, ſing the mournful Song. A Lane made for the Captives to paſs thro', who are beat with Clubs by the Youths of fourteen or fifteen Years of Age. Priſoners diſtributed among the People. They may either ſave the Slaves, or fatten them to kill. The Death of theſe Captives a kind of Sacrifice, ibid. The Iroquois fatten, and dreſs them as fine as poſſible for this Ceremony. Sentence paſſes upon the Captive, and he is tied to the Stake, when they burn his Body with Inſtruments, and he ſings the Death-Song. He laughs at his Executioners. His Hair and Skin torn off, and left hanging on his Shoulders. He is loos'd from the Stake, pelted with Stones, his Fleſh cut and mangled, he being ſtill alive. After he is Dead, they run up and down with Clubs to drive his Soul away. Women to whom Male-Slaves are given, ſometimes fall in Love with him, when he is reſtor'd to his Liberty with great Ceremony. Another School for Modeſty, Sobriety, &c. School for bodily Exerciſes. Oblig'd to ſuffer Hunger, Thirſt, the Inclemencies of the Weather, &c. Colleges for young Ladies. Govern'd by Matrons. Taught Works, and kept under a very ſtrict Confinement. Probation of ſuch Youths as were deſigned for War. Employ'd as Porters to carry the Baggage. Such Novices as turn'd pale at the Sight of an Enemy, rejected, 164. Their Education equal to that of the Europeans, or of the Greeks and Romans. Very negligent in ours, both with regard to the Mind and Body. The Plays and Sports of the Mexican Youths intermix'd with Religion. The toſſing of a Ball the principal Diverſion, 165

INDEX.

Children of the Peruvians, 205. Extraordinary Feasting at the weaning of the Incas Children. The Child named. Ceremony thereof. The Child's Hair cut, and Offering made to it. They drink very hard, otherwise it would be no Festival, ibid. Their Children in general not brought up too tenderly. Wash'd with cold Water the Moment they are born, to inure them to Hardships. Kept in a kind of a Cradle. Never took them in their Arms. Swathed them with old Clouts. Odd way of giving them suck. Never but three Times a Day, to prevent their being Gluttons. The greatest Ladies nurs'd their own Children. Their Bodies strengthen'd by Exercise. Their Minds cultivated very young. Taught to abhor Idleness and Luxury, 205

Circumcision, 223. Not practised by the East Indians. By the Savages of Guinea. A natural Expedient to facilitate Procreation. A Token of the Alliance which God had made between Abraham and his Posterity. The Angel would have kill'd Moses's Son because he was uncircumcised. That the Midianites did not use it, ibid. The Jews, by the Word Uncircumcised, seem to have understood all other Nations. That some would not be able to propagate without it. Herodotus tells us, 'twas practised by the Inhabitants of Colchos, Egypt, and Ethiopia, ibid. The Troglodites used it, according to Diodorus Siculus. That Thales the Philosopher got himself circumcised to ingratiate himself with the Egyptians. Three Reasons which could induce Men to practise Circumcision. 1st, In Obedience to the Religion they profess'd. 2dly, The Impossibility of getting Children without it. 3dly, The Example of those among whom they resided. Reasons why the Egyptians could not be induced from the first Motive, 224. Why they borrowed Circumcision from the Jews. The Egyptians have, in all Ages, been superstitious. Dreadful Catastrophes have happened among them. The Egyptians must be struck by the great Prodigies which were wrought by Moses, 225. The antient Heathens rank'd in the Number of their Deities, all such of other Nations as they thought powerful. Probable, that the Egyptians did not use Circumcision before the Children of Israel left their Country, ibid. The Miracles which Moses wrought among the former, gave them the highest Idea of his Person and Religion. Objections to the Arguments abovementioned, ibid. Herodotus makes no mention of the Time when the Egyptians first used Circumcision, ibid. A second Objection. Answer'd. Probably the Troglodites borrow'd it from the Egyptians, 226. The Negroes of Guinea use the Mahometan Circumcision. They follow the Religion of Mahomet, but imperfectly. That the Negroes did not practise Circumcision before Mahomet's Time. Several Ethiopians profess'd publicly the Jewish Doctrine. The Eunuch of Candace Queen of Ethiopia. They used to go and worship in Jerusalem. Had a most exalted Idea of the Jewish Religion. Herodotus known to relate Falshoods sometimes. To affirm that the Negroes of Guinea are obliged to circumcise, a Mistake, 227. Reflections on this. The Jews falsly supposed to be oblig'd to make use of it. Circumcision, a Type of what. To point out how Mankind ought to behave according to their Hearts. Some object, that Circumcision was only a Means of facilitating Procreation. Philo quoted on this Occasion. Several natural Reasons of Circumcision, 228. Those who practise it, don't procreate more than the Uncircumcised. That the contrary happens, 229

Commerce between the two Sexes in America, 42. The most brutish Nations softened by Love. The Principle of this Passion the same among Savages as us. The Difference only in the Manner of revealing it The whimsical Manner of a Canadan's disclosing his Passion, as rational as that of our European Gallants. The Europeans and Americans equally ridiculous in this Article, ibid. An old Iroquois addresses a young Savage as gracefully, as a superannuated European Lover his blooming Mistress. Nature was always the Painter on these Occasions. The way of making Love among the Americans, very simple and unrefined, ibid. Their Women not so cruel as our European Ladies. The Savages look upon a young Maiden, as a free uncultivated Piece of Ground, that ought to be the Property of the first Comer. In some Parts of Peru, the greatest Prostitutes get Husbands soonest. How a Savage make his Addresses. Must ask her Father's Consent, and be able to maintain her. They have not stifled all the tender Emotions of Nature, 43. Nor are like us, surrounded with Objects which make us deviate from Virtue; nor have those Conflicts between Reason and the Passions, ibid. Curtezans in China, whose Age, Price, &c. are writ over their Door, and also in Rome, N. ibid. Reflections on the pernicious Customs introduced from time to time among us, 44. Verses from Moliere's Misantrope, against such as are too rigidly virtuous. Considerations on the Restraint which is put on the Fair Sex, who are not allow'd to break their Passion first, ibid. Verses on the Love of Scandal, from Dryden. On great Souls, from Pope's Essay on Criticism, N. ibid. Tender Lines on the Happiness of Beasts in Love, and the Unhappiness of Women, from Pastor Fido, 45. The Savages more human in Love than we. Their Families maintained at a small Expence. Their Arrows always procure them Subsistence, ibid. Canadan Courtship lasts six Months. The Lover paints his Face, &c. The Brasilians strike up at once. The Americans prostitute their Women, 46. The Inhabitants of Ceylan prostitute their Wives and Daughters to Guests. As also the Iceland Maids. Thracians admitted of the Gallantry of their Virgins, N. ibid. In some Countries, the Lord lies with his Vassal's Wife on the Bridal Night, ibid. A gay Reflection on this Custom. The Turks have a quite different Notion of it, 47. A Plurality of Husbands in the East-Indies, ibid. On Men who are persuaded they have cropt their Wives Virgin Flower, and are mistaken; from Brantome, N. 46. Husbands that lend out their Wives to their Friends. Women purchased by way of Tasting. Satyr against old Women who marry. Gay Saying of an old Woman, from Brantome, N. 47. That many of these antiquated Creatures send their young Husbands packing into the other World, ibid. Canadan Women marry but once. Whether Polygamy is not as lawful, as a Husband keeping Mistresses? ibid. The American Women chaster than ours. Reasons for it. Arguments against it. The Floridans Love in a shocking Manger. Most Americans do not marry in the Degrees of Consanguity. No such thing as Portions. Solon's Institution on this Head. Motives of it. The Savages oblige their Wives to be true to their Bed. Their Wives very faithful. Were it not for Honour our Girls would be wanton, 48. Americans Jealousy differs vastly from that of the Europeans. The Men do not maste use of our Arts. Brantome's Rule when a Wife loves at Random, 49. Prior's Rule for keeping a Wife virtuous, N. ibid. Unjust to put a Woman who violates her Marriage-Bed to death. Frenchmen always revenge themselves by paying their Wives in Coin. The Italians act very differently. Verses on that Subject. Condition of the American Wives, no better than that of our Srevants, ibid. Ridiculous for Eunuchs to guard Women. Severity of some European Husbands to their Wives. Despised by Men of Honour. Old Women consider'd by some as Lumber. Few Coquettes in America, 50

Conformity of the Heathen Doctrine to that of the Christians, 437. Indians formerly acquainted with our Mysteries. Since adulterated, ibid. The Trinity shadowed under the three Persons Bruma, Vixnu, and Rutrem. All Things visible and invisible made by the former. Transmigration substituted for the Resurrection. Original Sin. Cleansed from Sin by washing in Rivers. Sacrifices to their Gods of several sorts. Their Rosaries or Chaplets of Beads describ'd, 438. Their prodigious Virtues. Those who wear a particular sort of these, may commit any Sin with Impunity, ibid. Indians have some Notion of the Fall of Lucifer, &c. 439. Their Account of it. Their whimsical Description of the Deluge. A grotesque Relation of the Battles of David and Sampson. Great Veneration the Indians have for these Fables. Interest the Spring which sets the Priest at work, and makes him publish so many Fictions. Grotesque Story of Ram, ibid. & seq.

Consecration of the Ground on which the Pagods in India are built, &c. 487

Coronation of their Monarchs, 160. Elected by the People, but the whole managed by the Nobles. The elected Monarch obliged to make a Campaign; after which he is inaugurated with great Pomp. A Speech made to the King upon the regal Office. The High-Priest anoints him. Puts a whimsical Cowl over him. His Coronation Oath, ibid. That the Sun shall give its Light, &c. A very whimsical Contract, 161

Councils of the Savages of Canada and Mississippi, 101. Composed of all the old Men of the Nation. Proclaim'd by a Cryer. The Speaker harangues in the midst of the young Men, ibid.

Creation by Brahma, 337. Whimsical Account of it. The Leaf of a Tree in the Shape of a Child playing with its Toe in its Mouth, floating on the Water; a Flower issues from its Navel, whence Brahma drew his Original. Brahma had at first five Heads. The middle one split. He is very proud, ibid. Brahma created the World, and presides over it with Sovereign Sway, 338. Has several Subalterns. Devendre the Chief. The eight Worlds, and their Situation, ibid.

Creation, according to the Bramins, 306. God being alone, resolves to create the World. Consults with himself about it. Creates four Elements, which at first are mix'd together. Separates them with a great Cane, which he blew on the Waters, and makes the Firmament. Forms the Earth and Sea into a Ball, and with a humming Sound places them in the midst of the Firmament. Sun and Moon created. The Elements being disposed, fulfil their several Parts. The Lord conveys a seminal Virtue to them. The World measured by four Cardinal Points of the Compass. Man created by God's Command, and comes from the Bowels of the Earth. Description of its Birth. How 'tis animated with Life. His Colour begins to glow, his Eyes to disclose themselves. Woman created; call'd Parcoutee, and the Man's Name Pearous. They cohabit as Man and Wife. Have four Sons, Brammen, Cuttery, Shuddry, and Wyse. Their Tempers varied according to the different Elements. Brammen melancholly and ingenious, and therefore ordain'd by God for Knowledge. Cuttery of a martial Spirit; appointed to govern Kingdoms, ibid. Shuddery of a milder Nature, made a Merchant. Wyse subtile and ingenious. These peopled the World, 307. God creates four Women for these four Men, and places them at the four Winds, that their Progeny might spread the better, 308

Cuttery, the second Son of Pearous, 309. The Almighty consigns him to the West. Goes out with a Sword in his Hand, ibid. Repines, because he cannot meet with any Thing to encounter His fiery Temper. Comes to a high Mountain and meets with a goodly Personnage. Proves to be a Woman. Her Person describ'd. Is very couragious. Description of the Instrument she held in her Hand. Her Name Teddicastree. They fight. Give several Wounds. Desist from, and renew the Fight. Night comes on, and neither are victorious. They fight the next Day. Cuttery breaks her Instrument. She changes it into a Bow. The second Day ends. They fight the third Day; he with his Sword, she with her Bow and Arrows, 301. The Woman gains the Advantage. The Close. The Victory still equal. He addresses her in an amorous way. His Arguments why they should not fight. She yields to them, and they become amorous Friends. From them descended a warlike Generation, which peopled the West, 311

Cutterys, the second Caste in India, 334. All Kings and Soldiers of this Tribe. Consider'd in their flourishing, their declining, and present State. In their flourishing State, were Kings and Rulers of India, and call'd Rajahs. These had four Men chiefly about their Persons. First, Soothsayers. 2dly, Politicians. 3dly, Companions for Conversation. 4thly, Generals. Rajahs divided into thirty six Tribes. In their declining State. Raanedeuill, a virtuous Woman, prophesies their Downfal. A Rajah dies, and his Son builds a noble Monument to his Memory. Enquires of the Soothsayers, whether it should exist long or be ruined, and by whom. A King named that should destroy it, ibid. Sends to bribe him, 335. He is not found, but one Alaudin, who was a Woodman. The Messenger goes to him, and tells him his Errand. Makes great Promises, and begs him to spare the Monument. The Woodman refuses the Treasure offer'd him, and answers, that he must fulfil the Dictates of Providence. His Parents advise him to accept of it, and accordingly he does so. A Quirk of his upon that Occasion. Alaudin raises Soldiers, becomes King of Delee, and overthrows many Rajahs. Leaves the Conduct of his Wars to Tattercon his Cup-Bearer, whom he makes King of Guzzarat. Their present State. Some of the Rajahs yielded; others fled to Retirements, and made Inroads, ibid. Names of Rajahs unconquer'd to this Day, 336

Customs of the Heathens, of great Use in illustrating several Passages in the sacred Writings, &c. 106

DANCES of the Americans, 101. Of several kinds That of the Calumet, the Leader's Dance, the War, the Marriage, and the Sacrifice Dance. That of the Calumet the finest to receive Ambassadors or Foreigners. How they meet and dance round the Officer, who bears the Calumet half an hour, ibid.

Days, lucky and unlucky, of the Bramins, 324. Very superstitious on this Head, ibid.

Deity, in what Places worshipped by the East-Indians, 235. Men made choice of gloomy Places, and Shades made by lofty Trees, to pay their Devotions to the Deity. The Jews worship false Gods in Groves. The pious sacrifice to God upon Hills. An Altar erected in Opposition to the express Prohibition of the Law. Reasons given for it, ibid. The Jews expressly forbid to sacrifice Victims any where but in the Temple. Indian Idols dispersed up and down the Fields, and lodg'd in little tufted Woods. Jews erected Trees for the Service of Travellers. The Heathen Pagods dark and low. The Jews thought God delighted in gloomy Places, thick Clouds, &c. 236. Most Nations of Antiquity had the same Opinion, ibid. Physical Reasons why the People chose gloomy Places for worshipping the Deity. Darkness raises a Veneration for the Deity, 237

Devandiren, King of the Gods, 425. Is cloy'd with the Sweets of Heaven, and comes upon Earth; goes to a Solitude inhabited by a Penitent, Gaudamen by Name, who had a most lovely Wife; is distracted y fond of her, and endeavours to make her violate her Husband's Bed, which she refusing to do, the God has recourse to Artifice. The Penitent rising to rite at Cock-crowing, to go and wash in the Ganges. Devandiren assumes the figure of a Cock, and crowing much earlier than the House Cock used to do, the Penitent rises, goes to the River, and finding it was but Midnight, returns back, and sees the God in Bed with his Wife. Exasperated, he curses Devandiren, 426. Wishes certain infamous Marks may appear upon this God's Body, which accordingly happen'd. The God beseeches the Penitent to mitigate the Severity of his Curses. The Penitent was touch'd, and the God's Body was from that Time cover'd over with Eyes like a second Argus. Gaudamen's Wife was changed into a Stone; but Vixnu treading upon it, she was re-metamorphosed to the same beautiful Creature, and lived afterwards in Unity with her Husband, ibid.

Diet of the Americans, 52. Not luxurious or delicate in it. Unacquainted with the Use of Bread. Of what they make their Cakes. Made Biscuits when they went a hunting. Some eat Maiz. Food of the antient Romans, ibid Illustrious Example of Roman Probity and Frugality, in the Person of Caius Fabricius, N. ibid. North Americans had no Salt, 52 Antients esteem'd it much. American Savages broil their Victuals, or dry it in the Sun. Drink Water, but invented strong Liquors, 52. The Caouin of the Brasilians, a Spirit drawn from Maiz. They drink to great Excess, and would knock down our European Bacchanals. Use to drink out of prodigious large Goblets. Their Women quaff heartily, 53. Verses from Addison's Cato on the great Abstemiousness of the Romans. Verses on the good Effects produced by Wine. Water extremely wholsome, N. 52. English, French, and Dutch Women drink. Women apt to indulge in their Cups, beyond the Rules of Decorum. The Life which Wine gives to Love, 53. The Savages eat in a slovenly Manner, without Knives, Forks, Table Cloths, &c How the Savages of North America entertain their Guests; wait upon them, and sing all the Time. Before Table Cloths were invented, the Dutch had a blue Rag that used to go round the Table. The French Cooks have refin'd our eating, 54. Savages have religious Banquets; are heighten'd with Songs. Possibly the religious Festivals of the Antients tients had not much Religion in them. The Germans uſe very long Graces at Meals. The Canadan Women don't eat with the Men. The French don't value an Entertainment, unleſs it be heighten'd by Women. The antient Romans not very polite to the Ladies, 55. Fine Satyr of the famous Lewis Cornaro againſt Luxury, N. 54. French Women accuſed by Monſ. Muralt of giving themſelves maſculine Airs, N. 55. The Dutch Parties of Pleaſure with their Women very ridiculous, 57. The Men and Women in different Rooms. The Savages withdraw from their Women out of Contempt, ibid. The Dutch know nothing but to caſt up an Account, and to look after their Shops. Their young Women too much confin'd from the other Sex, and therefore ſooner impos'd upon by them. The Savages vaſtly human to one another, ibid. Obſerve the Laws of Hoſpitality. The Gauls, French, antient and modern Germans, very hoſpitable, 56. All Debates of the Savages open'd with a Pipe. When Tobacco was firſt brought into Europe, 57

Diſeaſes of the Americans, and their Methods of Cure, 57. Often by violent Exerciſes. Some Reflections on the great Advantages of it. Of more Uſe than the Preſcriptions of the ableſt Phyſicians, ibid. Verſes from Dryden on this Head, N. ibid. The Floridans uſe Vomits, and lance the Parts troubled with the Rheumatiſm, ibid. Good Effects of Friction. Braſilians preſcribe a long Courſe of Abſtinence to their Patients. The Peruvians employ'd Simples, natural and artificial Fires, to cure their Sick. A ſingle Atom may be the Cauſe of incurable Evils. The Mechaniſm of the human Body wonderful. Life and Death are contiguous. Our State of Miſery conſider'd. Man does not owe his Health and Strength to Phyſic, but a Freedom from Cares, 58. Savages of North America live 140 or 160 Years, 59. Des Cartes on the Paſſions of the Soul quoted, N. ibid. Character of Lewis Cornaro's Sobriety, from Monſ. de Thou, ibid. Inhabitants of Cities don't live to ſo advanced an Age as thoſe who live in the Country. Prieſts often uſe Inchantments to heal their Sick. Anſelmiſts, who pretend to cure Wounds by mumbling a few Words. Numberleſs ſuperſtitious Practices employ'd in healing Diſeaſes. The Savages are patient to a Miracle; lay burning Coals on their Arms to heal their Diſtempers. Penances and Auſterities among the Mexicans, Peruvians, Virginians, &c. The antient Lacedemonians uſed to try the Patience of their Children before the Altar of Diana, 59. The Spaniſh Cruelty and Barbarity condemn'd, N. ibid.

Dreſs of the Americans, 28. A Paſſage from Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, N. ibid. Some American Nations go naked, ibid. Cuſtom makes us wear Clothes. Children not aſham'd to go naked, till taught otherwiſe. An Objection; Why then do the Savages cover the Pudenda? Anſwer'd, That their Anceſtors probably had heard of the Diſobedience of the firſt Man. Picts went naked, till frequented by the Romans, ibid. Naſtineſs of the Hottentots. The Cuſtom of wearing Clothes not the Effect of Religion. A Man may go naked, and be very devout. Uſe would ſoon reconcile it. Some Americans ſhut the Pudenda up in a Caſe; ſome of theſe adorn'd with Gold and Pearls. Some American Nations wear a Skin over their Shoulders, which is the primitive Dreſs, 29. A Paſſage from Milton to this Purpoſe, N. ibid. Others adorn'd with Tufts of Feathers, 28. Savages who wear a kind of Mat, and a ſort of Stockings. Go generally bare-headed, and their Hair falling on their Shoulders, ibid. Some burn their Hair off with Stones made red hot. Others burn it quite cloſe to their Ears. Others again rub their Hair with Oil, and ſtick it full of Feathers. Cuſtom of wearing long Hair natural. Cuſtom of the French on this Occaſion. The Chineſe fancied they'd be carried up to Heaven by the Hair of the Head. Antients often went bare-headed, 30. A fine Paſſage from Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, on the native Beauty of our firſt Parents, N. ibid. Mr. Locke would that Children of a Year or two old ſhould never have their Heads cover'd, it preſerving from Colds, Catarrhs, N. ibid. Why the Engliſh butt ſo ſtoutly with their Heads, ibid Conformity of the Americans, and ſome other Nations, with reſpect to the adorning the Head, ibid.

EASTERN Princes, 222. Reflections on their chuſing either to reign or die On the bloody Adminiſtration of ſome Princes, and the Fickleneſs and Diſaffection of Subjects. The little real Affections the Eaſterns bear to their Monarchs, owing to the Pride and Cruelty of the latter. The Eaſterns in general effeminate, and leſs capable of real and ſolid Virtue than the Europeans. Sometimes Kings forced to be cruel, ibid.

Eclipſes, how form'd, according to the Eaſt-Indians, 388. A Feaſt of the Gods. The Adder Sexon invited, who coming late, ſome Butter was ſet by for him. The Sun and Moon eat it up. The Adder comes in, is angry, and ſwallows them; But ſoon throws them up again. 'Tis on theſe Occaſions Eclipſes are form'd, ibid. Further Particulars thereof, 389

Edifices, public ones in India, 250. Pagods, &c. generally built of great black Stones. Deſcription of them. No Wood uſed in thoſe Buildings. Solomon's Houſe, ibid. Houſes of the Indians, in what Taſte. Viſits. A very rude Compliment to ask a Man how his Wife does, 251

Employments of the American Women, 41. Wholly domeſtic. Never come to Councils, nor allow'd to eat with Men; but this not from Jealouſy, but from their Contempt of the Fair Sex. The Gauls and antient Germans admitted their Wives to their Entertainments and Councils, and all Parties of Pleaſure. Some Reflections on antient Chivalry, when Ladies were fought for. Our Gallantry leſs affected, and more fickle than that of our Anceſtors. The Savages more uniform than we, ibid.

Eſſences of the Eaſt Indians. Fond of Flowers and Eſſences. Sprinkle one with Roſe-Water in their Viſits. Vide the Notes [a b c], for whimſical Reflections on Hungary Water, &c. The Powder of Sandal, a very fragrant Wood. They powder themſelves with it. Their Women employ themſelves in making Noſegays, Garlands, and Chaplets of Flowers, ibid.

Events, how the Americans tranſmitted memorable ones to Poſterity, 74. Some pretend they were ignorant of the Art of Writing. Others, that they made Books with Leaves of Trees, and writ in them. Deſtructive Zeal of the Spaniſh Monks and Prieſts condemn'd all their precious Mouuments to the Flames. Their Books conſiſted of Hieroglyphics and Paintings, under which hiſtorical Events and the Phænomena of Nature were repreſented. In what Manner the Spaniards pointed out the Year emblematically. When the Spaniards enter'd Mexico, the Peruvians had neither Letters or Characters after the Manner of the Chineſe, or Figures as the Araucans. Had ſome Notion of Painting, but rude and artleſs. Oral Tradition, and the Quappus, or Quippos, their only Regiſters. Quippos were Strings made of Cotton or Guts, ibid. The Peruvians threw little Stones into the Shape of a Wheel, in order to learn any Thing by Heart; and by theſe they were afterwards taught the Principles of Religion. The Order in which the Mexican Hieroglyphics were rang'd, 75

Ganges, a River in India, and the Countries thro' which in flows, 243. What St. Jerom ſays of it. That the Rivers now call'd Tigris, Ganges, and Euphrates, are not thoſe antient Rivers which iſſued out of Paradiſe. St. Jerom talks of Emeralds, Carbuncles, and Mountains of Gold, near that River. The City of Achim is poſſibly the ſame with Ophir, mention'd in Scripture. Solomon's Fleet ſent for Gold. Monſ. Huet's Opinion about this Voyage, ibid. Crocodiles, Tygers, and Rhinoceros's on the Banks of the Ganges. Will take Children out of Houſes. Particulars relating to Crocodiles. Indians have a particular Veneration for the Ganges. Think it a great Happineſs to die in its Waters. Sick Perſons carried on its Banks. Ceremonies on that Occaſion. Such as live a great Diſtance from it, ſend for its Waters, 244. Their Pagods furniſh'd with it. Reflections on the Darkneſs which has overſpread the Minds of Idolaters. The Veneration the Indians have for the Ganges, to what poſſibly owing. By them thought a God. Pay a great Veneration to Floods and Rivers in general, 245

Ganges, the mythological Origin thereof, and the Hiſtories of Belli, Sagara, and Bagireta, 400. The Ganges came originally from Heaven. Belli the Ratjasja, empower'd by Eſwara to overcome all his Enemies. Swell'd with Pride, ibid. The Egg-Shell with which all the Worlds are ſurrounded. The Egg-Shell crack'd. A white Horſe offer'd in Sacrifice. A difficult one. The Horſe ſent up and down the Country, with a Writing fix'd on its Tail. Eſcorted by a great Number of Women, and ſixty thouſand young Men. The Horſe ſtole away, and hid under the ſeventh World, 401. A fluttering Devil gives notice where he was. They eat the Earth down to the Center, and come at the Horſe. A young Man leaps upon him. Eſwara takes the Ganges upon his Head. A holy Man ſwallows the River up, which afterwards iſſues out of his Thigh. The Aſhes of ſixty thouſand Perſons being water'd by it, they come to Life again. The Ganges call'd the Celeſtial River, the River of the Thigh, and Bagireti. Reaſons why it was ſo call'd, ibid.

Gardens, in India, how laid out and water'd, 258. A confus'd Medley of Trees, without Order or Symmetry; but very pleaſant. Preferable to Parterres in hot Countries. Every Garden has generally a Well or Pond in it. A Baſon hard-by this; which being fill'd with that Water, and a Hole at the Bottom, it diſtributes the Water up and down the whole Garden. A more convenient way than watering them with Pots, 259

Garrouda, the Bird, its Origin, 379. Strange Story of Caſſiopa's (one of the firſt Bramins) two Wives, and a Horſe, about which a Wager was laid. Diti conceives, and lays two Eggs. A Child iſſues from one, which was broke, ibid. The immature Babe is angry, flies up into the Air, and undertakes to guide the Sun's Chariot. Garrouda iſſues out of the other Egg. Fetches the Amortam (a Liquor) to reſcue his Mother out of Slavery. How the Tongues of Serpents firſt became forked. Viſtnou made choice of Garrouda to carry him as the Eagle does Jupiter, ibid.

Gasjendre Motsjam, his Story, according to the Bramins. Sung always at Day-break, 365. A high Mountain in one of the ſeven Seas of Milk. Has three Summits, of Gold, Silver, and Iron. A Deveta diverts himſelf with his Wife in it, but neglects paying Honour to a holy Being, who offended at it, threatens that the Deveta ſhould be turned into an Elephant. The Deveta begs Pardon, but in vain. Is metamorphoſed into a Beaſt. Going to drink in a Pond, he engages a Crocodile, and the Battle continues a thouſand Years, 366. The Elephant defeated, and returns to his natural Shape. Is reſtor'd to his former State by Viſtnou, ibid.

HELL, according to the Indians, 427. Its Situation. The Preſident of Hell. His Secretary, who writes down the Actions of all Men. The Preſident very juſt. Manner of the Trials. Man may be puniſhed firſt, and rewarded afterwards, or rewarded firſt and puniſhed afterwards; after which he returns back upon the Earth. Puniſhment of the Damn'd in Hell, 428. How to obtain a quick Paſſage over the burning River. A ſecond Preſident of Hell, call'd Yhamen. Story of his dying, and riſing again. A Penitent deſires the God would let a Child be born to him. He grants it, and leaves him to his Option; who makes choice of a Child that ſhould be virtuous, but die in his ſixteenth Year, 429. The Child is born; grows up, and is very pious. Being ſixteen Years old, Death ſends for him. The Youth refuſes to die; whereupon Yhamen, the King of Death, comes riding upon a Buffle, and ſummons him to die. The Youth refuſes. Yhamen throws a Rope about his Neck, and was going to drag him into Hell, when the God Xiven, and Rutrem, deliver him, and kill the King of Death. Ill Conſequences which attended it by Mankind's multiplying to much, 430. Xiven reſtores

Holy-Water of the Indians, 240. Jews had theirs. Indian Holy-Water is only Cow's-Piſs. That the Luſtration with it will draw down the peculiar Protection of the Gods, and drive away every Evil. Reaſons why the Indians pay ſo great Veneration to Cows. That they are the beſt and moſt perfect of all Beaſts. The Tranſmigration of Phoe. The Egyptians worſhipped the Ox. An Emblem of Fruitfulneſs, ibid. Colour of this Beaſt. Pronounc'd Oracles. Good and bad Omens at conſulting Troglodites uſed to ſtrangle with an Ox's Tail all ſuch as were paſt their Labour, ibid. Thought it was doing them a moſt ſingular Honour. The great Service the Ox does to Man, may poſſibly be the Reaſon of the great Veneration paid him. Particulars of the Things in which he is ſerviceable. This Beaſt firſt taken great care of, becauſe of his Uſe to Man, and afterwards worſhipped. Statue of an Ox on the Frontiers of Bengal. To what Uſes applied, N. ibid. Indians ſet a little Cow of Wood or Stone on a Pillar in ſeveral Places, ibid. An Ox's Head fill'd with Arabic Characters thought to be a Taliſman, 242. The Brazen Serpent of the Jews in the Wilderneſs, perhaps a Taliſman, as alſo the Palladium of the Trojans, ibid.

Hunting, Ceremonies obſerv'd by the Americans before they go on theſe Exerciſes, 107. Preparations for chaſing the wild Bull. Dance the Calumet. A Piece of Cloth carried by way of Standard. They halt to bewail the Death of thoſe wild Bulls they ſhould kill, and make a Fire of Bulls Dung dried in the Sun. Young Savage, the firſt Time he goes a Hunting, prepares himſelf by Faſting, and daubs his Face with Black. Devotes a Piece of Fleſh from every Door to the great Spirit, ibid.

Husbandry of the Americans, 63. They don't till the Ground as we do. Turn it up with wooden Hooks, and grub up all the Weeds. Manure the Soil with the Aſhes of them, and Fiſh Shells. Sow their Corn in May, as we do our Beans. Harveſt being come, they hoard their Corn in Pits, having no Apartment above Ground. Several Europeans uſed to do the ſame, ibid.

Huſcanawing of the Virginians, celebrated every fifteen or ſixteen Years, 118. The beſt-ſhap'd, and moſt ſprightly Youths choſen for this Diſcipline. Dangerous to refuſe undergoing it. Shut up for ſeveral Months, and have no Suſtenance allow'd, but a Decoction, which turns the Brain. Deſcription of the Huts in which they are ſhut up. Theſe Youths loſe their Memory. Are not allow'd to remember any Thing after the Ceremony. Several die under this cruel Probation. Oblig'd to a Religious Secrecy during this ſevere Diſcipline. To reveal any Thing of it, is puniſh'd with Death. Reaſons the Virginians give for this Probation; to root out the Prejudices of Youth, &c. The Antients had pretty near the ſame Notions, 119

Idolatry of the Americans, 12. Two kinds of Idolatry, both almoſt as old as Mankind. The firſt, the Worſhip of the Stars and Elements; the ſecond that of Man; both roſe from Pride and Fear. The leaſt Trifles or Gewgaws thought agreeable to God, ibid. Idolatrous Worſhip in the Main of the ſame Texture. Whether a ridiculous Worſhip, or Atheiſm, moſt agreeable to the Deity. Bayle has determined for the latter. Leſcarbot of the ſame Opinion. A Quotation from him, ibid. 13. Antient Idolaters ſuppoſed Subaltern Deities. The Americans alſo. The Canadans believe there's a Devil and Genii in inanimate Things. Their Belief in a God, his Son, his Mother, and the Mother, and Planet of the Sun. Creed of the Virginians and Floridans. The bare Light of Reaſon informs Mankind they ought to believe in a Superior Being, ibid. Canadans believe the Devil throws Duſt into their Eyes, N. ibid. American Idea of God and the Devil, bears a Conformity to Eaſtern Principles. Greeks and Romans had good and evil Genii. The South-Americans think Arrows inform'd with Genii. The Antients ſuppoſed an univerſal Spirit, ibid. The Notions the Americans have of the Supreme Being abſorb'd in Fictions. Fables, the Offſpring of a crazy Imagination. Idea which the Americans have of the Deity examined. That like Children they form it agreeable to their little Capacity. ibid. Prov'd from an ignorant Father's inſtilling fantaſtical Notions of the Deity into his Child. The whole made up of Puerilities. The Child thus taught adds afterwards his own ſilly Whims to what he had imbib'd. This Argument illuſtrated, from the Suppoſition of a King, who was to prohibit his Subjects Knowledge in general, and command them to live in a wild Manner, whereby they'd ſoon become very illiterate. Inferences of the Americans, 14

Idolatry and Paganiſm, chief Cauſes of, it, 229. Moſt Religions aroſe from ſomething good. The fabulous Hiſtory of the Gods founded on Truth, but very much diſguis'd, ibid. Surpriſing how ſo great a Change in Religion could be wrought. What Things are the firſt Cauſes of Error. Another Cauſe of Idolatry, the Idea which Men had always form'd to themſelves of the Divine Being. Reflections on it. Mankind firſt ador'd the Planets. Next Fire. Reaſons of this. Firſt worſhipped as the Sun's Repreſentative. The Chaldeans affirm that Fire is the ſtrongeſt and moſt powerful of all the Gods, 230. An Egyptian Prieſt denies it, and proves his Aſſertion thus. He has a large Statue made of porous Earth. Fills its Belly with Water, and ſtops the Holes with Wax. The Chaldeans prepare a Fire, and the Egyptian Prieſt puts his Statue againſt it. The Wax diſſolves, the Water pours forth and puts out the Fire. In what Manner the Egyptians ſolemnized this Victory. The Perſians alſo worſhip Fire, 231. Fire carried at the Head of Caravans in the Eaſt. Probably might be imitated from the Pillar of Fire which walked before the Iſraelites in the Night, N. ibid. Fire carried before the Perſian Kings, attended by 360 Prieſts. Perpetual Fire of the Greeks and Romans. Afterwards Mankind worſhipped their own Species; then Beaſts, and the very Refuſe of Nature. The ſwelling Style of the Eaſtern-Writers encreas'd Idolatry, ibid. The Poets contributed greatly to it. The generality of Mankind did not ſearch into the Senſe ſhadowed under the Figure, but conſidered the Figure itſelf. Hence God is figur'd arm'd with a ſharp Sword, a Bow and Arrows; now gay, then angry, &c. Neceſſary Houſe had at laſt its Goddeſs. Idolatry increaſed by the Veneration which Mankind had for every Thing that came from their Prieſts and Elders, 232

Idols of the Bramins, and their Worſhip, 385. Divine Worſhip different from that of the Chriſtians. Idols carried in Proceſſion thro' the City. Deſcription of that in Honour of Viſtnou. Comes out and boasts he has discover'd the Spirit. Their Cures owing to Chance rather than Skill. Are nevertheless acquainted with several physical Herbs. A Juggler is a kind of Quack, who fancies himself immortal, and is endow'd with the Virtue of healing all Diseases. The Jugglers laugh'd at behind their Backs. The Juggler visits a Patient. Examines him very carefully. Sings, dances, and howls. Sucks the Patient's Body, and pretends to draw Bones out of it. The Juggler often kill'd for not healing his Patient. This Quackery opens with a Banquet. The Physician comes into the Assembly with a Bag upon his Shoulder, and a Gourd-Bottle in his Hands. All seiz'd with enthusiastic Fits, 95. The Juggler dances round the Patient. Touches every Part of his Body. Tells him he has a Spell in such a Part of it, which must be thrown out. The Relations of the Patient sing over the Wound. A great Kettle brought in, and the Presents to the Juggler put into it. He falls into a kind of Lethargy, and tells the Standers by he has found out the Distemper. Tortures the Patient prodigiously by the Medicines he applies. How artful Jugglers excuse themselves when unsuccessful. This Quacking Trade very beneficial. Some boast they can kill an Enemy tho' at two hundred Leagues Distance. Another remarkable kind of Juggling. When the Patient fancies he is bewitch'd, he is extended on the Ground before the Juggler, and a Roe-Buck Skin thrown over him. The Physician throws himself violently on the Patient; foams at the Mouth, sucks his Blood, &c. The Juggler pretends to pull out the Spell, which he shews to the Assembly. Some Jugglers give out certain Charms of Use in War. The most eminent of these are lame or crooked, 96. Oblige the Patient to run through Flames. Prescribe Dances. Plunge the sick Person naked into Snows, &c. in the Depth of Winter. Consecration of the Medicines after a very mysterious Manner, 97

Love of one's Country, 67. That it is not always the Reſult of Reaſon or Duty. It is the Effect of Cuſtom, Education, and Complexion. Many People troubled with what the French call la Maladie de Pais, or a hankering after one's Country. It is ſometimes incurable. The Savages have ſome Characteriſtics of it, ibid. In the Spaniſh Conqueſts of Mexico and Peru, we meet with the moſt excellent Inſtances of this. Their glorious Conduct on this Occaſion muſt not be aſcribed to a Savage Brutality. The Speech which the Emperor Guatimozin made to Cortez, vaſtly noble and heroic. The Ceilians have fought for their Liberties upwards of two hundred Years. The Floridians not yet ſubdu'd. Another kind of Love for one's Country, which makes us idolize our own, and deſpiſe others. Very ridiculous. The Greeks, Romans, and Chineſe, have given into this Abuſe. The Mexicans alſo. The Engliſh Haughtineſs towards other Nations cenſur'd, 68. This Aſperſion clear'd by Monſ. Muralt, in his Character of the Engliſh and French Nations, N ibid. Is of Opinion that the Swiſs have very much corrupted themſelves, by frequenting the French, N. 69. The French partially fond of their own Country. Fantaſtic Fondneſs which ſome Nations have for what is ridiculous when of their own Country. That the Inhabitants of the moſt Savage Climes prefer them to other Countries, tho' moſt beautiful, exemplify'd by the Greenland Savages, who came to the King of Denmark's Court, 69. Story of a Hottentot, who was brought to England, and was kindly uſed; but could not be eaſy till he returned home, N. ibid. That this is not to be wonder'd at, ibid. That it proceeds partly from Pride. Manifeſts his Power by Miracles. Other Particulars concerning him. The God reveals himſelf to a Prieſt in a Dream. The City of Mexico built where a Fig Tree was growing out of a Rock, and an Eagle perch'd upon it. This Story has ſome Affinity with the Entrance of the Iſraelites into Canaan. Poſſibly ſome Jews had come among them. That the firſt Cauſe could not govern the World, without the Aſſiſtance of a numberleſs Multitude of Genii, 145. The Sun was the ſecond God. Vitzliputzli's Idols repreſented with great Pomp and Magnificence. Particulars of it. Seated on a Throne, ſupported by an azure Globe. Tlaloch, another Idol reſembling the former. The Idea the Mexicans had of its Power. Teſcalipuca, the God of Penance. Deſcription of this magnificent Idol. An Ear hangs from his Hair, 146. and is an Emblem of the divine Mercy in hearing Petitions, 147. A great many emblematical Figures round the Idol. Repreſented under another grand but terrible Form. Deſcription of the Mercury and Pluto of the Mexicans. Tozi, a Goddeſs of mortal Extraction. She is put to Death, flay'd, and a young Man cover'd with her Skin. Another Idol made of all the Seeds of the Earth, kneaded together with the Blood of young Children. This Idol pull'd to Pieces from Time to Time, given as Reliques, and another put in its Place. A holy Water at the Coronation of their Monarchs, ibid. Mexicans had upwards of two thouſand Deities, who had each his Temple, &c. A Priſoner treated as a God for ſix Months, and afterwards ſacrificed, 148
Religion of the Savages of Miſſiſippi, Canada, Terra Nova, Iroquois, &c. 82. Have little Notion of religious Worſhip. Pay a kind of Worſhip to the Sun. Preſent the Calumet to him, and beſeech him to take a Whiff or two. Offer to him the Firſt-Fruits they take in Hunting. Ceremonial Habits of theſe Savages very whimſical. They believe the World was created. Heaven, Earth, and Men were made by a Woman. The Woman being big with Child, fell down from Heaven, and dropt on the Back of a Tortoiſe, who ſav'd her from Shipwreck, ibid. Ridiculous Fable of theſe Savages, in what Manner the World was peopled. Odd Syſtem of the Creation. That Men came originally from Beaſts. Groteſque Account of the Flood. A Bridge made. All Animals upon it. In danger of being ſtarv'd. The Beaver, the Otter, and a kind of Rat ſent to ſearch for Earth at the Bottom of the Sea. A ſmall Quantity of Sand ſwell'd to a high Mountain. The Fox walks round and round it, in order to enlarge the terreſtrial Globe. Savages have odd Notions of Thunder, Lightning, &c. 83. Original of Men and Women. Are married together. Their ſeveral Occupations appointed. They live contented for ſome Ages; Diſcord and Jealouſy ariſe, which are the Origin of Wars. Have Banquets in honour of their Gods. Dogs ſacrificed to the Sun. Mankind created out of Arrows. Believe the divine Eſſence is comprehended under four Perſons. The univerſal Spirit that gives Being and Motion to Matter. Savages vary in their Opinions, with regard to who is the Divine Being. They invoke Rivers, Floods, and Water-Falls. Their Offerings at the ſame Time, 84. They ſupplicate the Spirit of the Cataract. Horace quoted on this Occaſion, N. ibid. Subject of their Prayers, 84. Sacrifice Captives in its Honour. Have neither Temples, Sacrifices, or Prieſts. Their extravagant Notion of Inſpiration, 85. The Quakers mention'd on this Occaſion, N. ibid. Reflections on theſe Heads. Their Jugglers pronounce their Oracles, interpret Dreams, boaſt that Rain, Hail, Fruitfulneſs, &c. are under their Direction. The Savages aſcribe a reaſonable Soul to ſeveral ſorts of Beaſts. That their Souls return to ſee how their Bodies are treated. Their Belief in Prodigies, and Dread of Thunder. Some carry the Skeleton of a Crow along with them. Others Owls, Sea-Fiſhes, or Bones. Savages of Miſſiſippi have a kind of Temple dedicated to the Sun, ibid. Sacrifices to the Moon when in the Wane. Deſcription of one of theſe Temples. The Heads of their Enemies fix'd on the Walls of it. A flaming Altar. The Tabernacle of the God, 86. Holy Fire of the Romans kept by the Veſtals. Great Spirit of the Canadans. Guedeville cenſur'd for interſperſing La Hontan's Travels with Jeſting and Buffoonery, N. ibid. The metaphyſical Manner in which the Savages expreſs their Belief, with regard to the firſt Principle, 87
Religion of the Nicaraguans, 168. Sacrificed Men. Their Prieſts were Confeſſors, and oblig'd to live in a State of Celibacy. The moſt remarkable Circumſtance in their Sacrifices. The human Victim cut to Pieces, and the Limbs diſtributed. Other bloody Ceremonies. Privileges of thoſe who were thus butcher'd. A Proceſſion on theſe Occaſions. Deſcription of it. They draw Blood from one another, to ſmear the Idol's Face. Young People now dance and make merry. Maiz ſprinkled with Blood, ibid.
Religion of the Savages of Oroonoko and Guiana, 179. Some worſhip Watipa, or the Devil. Others think the Sun and Moon living Beings. Others worſhip a groteſque Statue of a Man. Some think God a corporeal Being, ibid.
Religion of the Peruvians, 187. Worſhipp'd a Multitude of Gods or Genii. Every Street, Houſe, &c. had its peculiar Deity, ibid. Worſhipp'd Plants, Trees, &c. Uſed to ſacrifice their own Children. The Prieſt burnt the Victim's Heart. Some let themſelves Blood betwixt the Eye-Brows. Mangocapac, their great Legiſlator. He and his Wife were Children of the Sun. Are diſpatch'd from that Planet, to inſtruct and civilize the Peruvians. A golden Rod given them. Relation of their Journey. They ſtop at Cuſco. Make a great many Proſelytes. Aboliſh the antient Religion. What Mangocapac recommended particularly to the Peruvians, 188. His artful Conduct. Reflections on the Conduct of antient Legiſlators. Mangocapac deified. In what Light the Peruvians conſider'd their Inca's. Temples built to the Sun. The Moon call'd the univerſal Mother of all Things. Thunder and Lightning the Executors of the Sun's Juſtice; Houſes ſtruck with Thunder, deteſted, and ſtopt up with Dirt and Stones. A Soul of the World, or firſt Mover of Matter, call'd Pachacamac. Their extraordinary Veneration for that Word. The Sun only animated the Univerſe, 189, 190. Anſwer of one of the Incas to a Spaniard, N. ibid. Cupac, the direct oppoſite Character to Pachacamac. Huacas, or Guacas, were the Genii; beautiful, and even monſtrous Things, &c. Their Prayers of Thanks to Pachacamac. Pull up the Hair of their Eye-Brows by way of Offering to him. Offers Splinters of Wood, or even Straws, 190. Several Animals ſacrificed in honour of the Sun. They kiſs the Air. Adoration made to Trees. A kind of Worſhip paid to the City of Cuſco, 191
Religion of the Savages of La Plata, &c. 185. Some conſecrate the Skins of their Enemies. Wherever there are Prieſts, there muſt be ſome Shadow of Religion. Imagine every Thing is inform'd with its peculiar Genius or Spirit, ibid. Probation for the Prieſthood. Muſt fight againſt wild Beaſts, 186. The Impoſition of the Tyger's Paw look'd on as holy. Superior Medico-Prieſts. Oblig'd to faſt rigorouſly ſeveral Years. Aſſemblies at the New Moon very whimſical. Every Act of Religion flows from a Principle of Fear. Certain Prayers mumbled over the Sick, ibid. Pipes of Tobacco ſmoaked for their Sakes. A Wife may live where ſhe pleaſes, and her Husband oblig'd to follow her up and down. Incontinency in Women a moſt enormous Crime. Injuſtice of our Sex on this Occaſion. When a Woman dies, her young Children buried with her. An obſcure Idea of the Immortality of the Soul. Savages of Paraguay cut off their Fingers and Toes as their Relations die, 187

INDEX.

Religion of the Virginians, 112. Their Greatneſs of Soul diſplayed, in the Perſon of the Emperor of that Country, who was taken Priſoner by the Engliſh. It is Sacrilege to reveal the Principles of their Religion. Reflections on the Contradictions of Travellers. Deſcription of the Temple of the Savages. Barricaded with twelve or fifteen great Logs of Wood. It was thirty Foot long, and eighteen Foot wide. A Hole in the Roof to let out the Smoke. No Windows in it. A dark Place incloſed. Bones and an Indian Hanger in it, ibid. Wattles of a Turkey-Cock tied to it. Deſcription of the Idol. Theſe Images carefully conceal'd from the public View. Have a venerable Aſpect in theſe dark Places. This Gloom heightens Devotion. The Magician moves the Idol up and down in the dark. They think that this Idol is not one ſole Being. The Idol Kiwaſa. Repreſented under a Variety of Shapes. Chapels and Oratories conſecrated to him. Has a Pipe in his Mouth, and ſmokes, the Prieſt lying conceal'd behind, 113. The God manifeſts himſelf in Dreams or Viſions. Savages are very much guided by Inſpiration. The God conjur'd up by four Prieſts. Appears under the Figure of a handſome young Man. They alſo worſhip the Sun. They waſh themſelves. The Winds and Seas under the Direction of another Deity. When they go a Journey, they burn Tobacco, to obtain the Aſſiſtance of the Sun. Throw Tobacco into Rivers, in order to obtain a ſafe Paſſage. Ridiculous Traditions of a Rock, on which a Giant left the Print of his Feet. Emblematical Figures to repreſent the Deity, 114. Altars erected in all remarkable Places. Chief Altar of the Virginians. Religious Houſes in which their Kings were buried. Look'd upon as ſacred. The high Altar of ſolid Chryſtal, vaſtly tranſparent. Their Altars call'd Pacwerances. Their great Veneration for a Bird who is continually repeating that Name. An Indian puniſh'd for killing one of them. Great Veneration for theſe Altars. Particular Account of the Notions which the Virginians have of the Deity. That he delights in doing Good, 115. Allows Free-Will, and is himſelf ſupine, 116. Verſes from Creech's Lucretius on this Subject, N. ibid. They worſhip the Devil, ibid. Fancy Kiwaſa inſpires them in all their Actions. Are afraid of an evil Genius, and therefore worſhip him. That he ruffles the Air, raiſes Storms, &c. Other Notions ſome Nations have of the Deity. He form'd a Set of Subaltern Gods. The firſt Thing they created was Water. Woman created before Man, ibid.

Ruddery, one of thoſe who begins the ſecond Age of the World, 318. Endued with Power to deſtroy all Creatures, ibid. Made the Lord of Death and Judgment, and therefore endued with every Thing fit for that Purpoſe, 319. He diſperſes Afflictions, Sickneſs, Death, &c. 320

Rutrem, his Story, 420. Third Son of Paraxacti, and one of her Husbands. Turns Friar. Is infamouſly lewd. Marries Parvadi, and uſes her kindly. The Gods come to him, and force him to abandon her. This Woman, who was laſcivious, curſes the Gods for it. Rutrem wanders about like one diſtracted. The Earth gives him a Son with ſix Heads, and the ſeven Stars nurſe him. The Indians have the utmoſt Veneration for Rutrem. Parvadi dies with Grief, is born a ſecond Time, and married to Rutrem, ibid. Deſires a Child in Rutrem's Abſence, and one ſprings from her Sweat, ibid. Who inſtantly is full grown. Rutrem jealous, but is appeaſed, 421. Extraordinary Birth of a Giant, by ſtriking a Handful of Hair violently againſt the Ground. The Giant attacks the Gods, and knocks the Sun's Teeth out. Kicks the Moon in the Face. A Man kill'd, when he is raiſed from the Dead, and an Elephant's Head fix'd on his Body, ibid Order'd to ſeek out a Wife as beautiful as his Mother Parvadi, 422. Cuts off one of his Brother's Heads: does Penance for it, by ſtripping himſelf ſtark naked; covering his Head with Aſhes, taking the Skull in his Hand, &c. Rutrem grows weary of his auſtere Life. Goes ſtark naked to a Place where ſeveral Bramins liv'd, who had very beautiful Wives. They fall in love with him, and follow him whitherſoever he went. He is ſuddenly emaſculated by their Husbands. Promiſes to crown with heavenly Joys all who ſhould pay a peculiar Honour to the injur'd Parts. Rutrem is the Priapus of the Antients, ibid. Honour'd under the Figure of Lingam, which they wear about their Necks, 423. The Andis, a moſt infamous, impudent Caſte, ibid. They make a Trade of imitating Rutrem's Penance, by rambling about naked, &c. Stand in uneaſy Poſtures, &c. in the Pagods. They hold continually one of theſe Lingams in their Hands. Some Andis's Arms are ſtiff, wither'd, and immoveable, by holding them in the Poſtures above-mention'd. At a Diſtance they look like ſo many walking Trees. Are univerſally honour'd as Saints. Rutrem marries the River Ganges. Meets with various happy and unhappy Adventures. Great Danger to which he was expos'd, ibid. Rutrem granting a Giant the Privilege of reducing to Aſhes whatever he ſhould touch, was going to try the Experiment upon the God, 424. Rutrem, to ſecure himſelf, contracts himſelf ſo as to lie in the Shell of a Fruit no bigger than the Hazel-Nut, 380. Vixnu, his Brother, to reſcue him, aſſumes the Shape of a beautiful Woman, with whom the Giant falls in love, when the latter neglects Rutrem; accoſts her, and ſhe yields upon certain Conditions, which prove fatal to him; for laying his Hands on his Head, he is reduced to Aſhes in an Inſtant. Rutrem comes out of the Shell, thanks Vixnu, and deſires him to reſume again the Female Shape; which he does, when Rutrem falls deſperately in love with her, &c. ibid.

SACRIFICE of Libation, 233. The Water which David pour'd out before Bethlehem. Oil generally made uſe of on this Occaſion. Jacob ſees the Angels aſcending and deſcending a Ladder. Oil provided always by Travellers to pour out before the Lord. Libations perform'd by the Heathens with ſeveral other ſorts of Liquors. Examples of it, ibid. Profound Libations. The Eaſt-Indians offer no bloody Sacrifices, becauſe of the Tranſmigration of Souls. Smear their Deities with Black. Agree with the Jews in ſeveral Particulars of their Worſhip. The female Dancers among the Jews, Proſtitutes. David's uncovering himſelf to dance before the Ark. Chriſtian-Indians uſe Trumpets, Hautboys, and Drums in their Churches, 234

Sacrifices and Adorations of the Canadan Savages, 87. Good or evil Intelligences aſcribed to every Thing that is wonderful in its kind. Gold and Silver rank'd among the latter. Sacrifice to Kitchi-Manitou, coſts ſometimes upwards of fifty thouſand Crowns. Deſcription of it. A Pile erected; the Savages lay their Offerings on it. Fire ſet to it. They ſing and dance round it the whole Day. Subject of their Prayer. To be protected from the Wicked, and have their Families preſerv'd. That Bleſſings may be ſhed on the Harveſt, on Villages, and the Hunters, &c. ibid. The Subject of their Songs. Praiſe of the Beauty of Nature, Goodneſs of God; Warriors dance the grand Spirit-Dance. How we might better diſcover the Religion of the Americans. The Perſons employ'd for that Purpoſe muſt be learned and unprejudic'd. Theſe Savages not Atheiſts. Reaſons they ſometimes alledge for their not embracing Chriſtianity, 88

Sacrifices of the Eaſt-Indians, 232. Mankind have, in all Ages, paid an outward Worſhip to the Deity, ibid. Uncertain whether there were any Ceremonies at the Riſe of Oblations, 233

Sacrifices of the Mexicans, 149 Vaſtly barbarous, ibid. Deſcription of them. Victims led to the Charnel-Houſe, guarded by Soldiers. The Prieſts tore out their Hearts, and threw their Bodies down the Terraſs. Forty or fifty Victims always ſacrificed at a Time. Prieſts who ſacrificed Men, the chief in Dignity. A Man dreſs'd in the bloody Skin of a human Victim juſt ſacrificed, runs up and down the Streets, and begs Alms. Duel of the Victim with the Prieſt, 150. If the latter conquer'd, he kill'd, flay'd, and eat him, 151. Offerings to the Sun. Stoop'd to the vileſt Offices in honour of their Gods, ibid.

Sacrificing and Incenſing uſed by the Mexicans and Peruvians, 15. This perhaps of great Antiquity among the Americans. Human Victims hard to be accounted for. Something offer'd on this Head. God ſuppoſed to be appeaſed no other Way, ibid Why theſe barbarous Sacrifices were continued. That 'tis probable the Americans borrow'd theſe Cuſtoms no where, 16

Schaerwaeckas, fourth Sect among the Bramins, 317. Don't believe in the Immortality of the Soul, but lead regular Lives, ibid.

Scrupulouſneſs of the Eaſt-Indians upon ſeveral Occaſions, 258. Behaviour of an Indian, who had met a French Sailor eaſing Nature. Indians always do it in the moſt private Manner poſſible, 259. Heſiod adviſes the Greeks not to eaſe Nature on the Highways, &c. The Jews very delicate on this Article, 260

Seaſons, how diſtinguiſh'd by the Peruvians, 209. The Vulgar computed by their Harveſts. By Towers over which the Sun ſhone. Manner of this mathematical Obſervation. Year conſiſted of twelve Moons. Were acquainted with the Equinoxes. Rejoicings made at theſe Seaſons. How they found the Equinox. The Sun worſhipp'd that Day with great Solemnity. Columns adorn'd with Flowers and odoriferous Herbs. The Sun's Seat or Throne, ibid. A great Reſpect paid to Columns, 210

Seivias, the ſecond Sect of the Bramins, 351. Are known by Streaks which they make upon their Heads with Cow-Dung Aſhes. The Lingam, a kind of Stone which they wear about their Necks, ibid.

Serpents worſhipp'd in India, 485

Settreas, the ſecond Caſte of the Brachmans, 348. Compos'd of the King and Nobles. Duty of theſe is to defend and govern their Country, &c. ibid.

Shaſter, Book of the written Word of the Banians, 320. God, to reſtrain the Wickedneſs of Mankind, gives them Laws. Deſcends on a Mountain, and calls Bremaw to him. Delivers him a Book out of the Clouds. Conſiſts of three Parts; 1ſt, The moral Law; 2dly, The ceremonial; 3dly, Precepts for the Caſtes, or Legends, 321. The Firſt, contains eight Commandments. 1ſt, Thou ſhalt not kill any Creature whatſoever, &c. 2d, Thou ſhalt make a Covenant with all thy five Senſes, &c. 3d, Shalt duly obſerve the Times of Devotion, ibid. 4th, Shalt not tell any falſe Tales, &c. 291. 5th, Shalt be charitable to the Poor, &c. 6th, Shalt not oppreſs the Poor, &c. 7. Shalt celebrate certain Feſtivals, &c. 8th, Shalt not ſteal from thy Brother. Theſe Commandments beſtow'd among the four Caſtes, two being appropriated to each, ibid. Particulars of it. Some Objections againſt theſe Precepts. To the firſt and ſecond Commandments, ibid. That they ſhould not kill any living Creature, 322. A vegetative, ſenſitive, and reaſonable Soul. The laſt more noble than the other two. Injunction not to ſlay human Creatures, refuted from Scripture, 323. By the Cuſtom of Nations. The firſt Indians kill'd Beaſts. The Command not to drink Wine refuted. The Romans forbid it, becauſe it occaſion'd Exceſs. The Carthaginians, Egyptians, and Mahometans, conſider'd on this Head, ibid. As alſo the Levites, the Nazarites, and Rechabites, ibid. Learned Men who pleaded for the drinking of Wine, ſuch as Galen, Meteſytheus, Seneca, Plato, and Pythagoras, 324. Objections to the other Part of the ſecond Commandment, viz. the eating of Fleſh. Eggs muſt not be eat, becauſe Life is ſuppos'd in the Shell. Red Roots abſtain'd from. The Tranſmigration of Souls. Not firſt ſtarted by the Indians. By the Egyptians, and then came among the Greeks; afterwards among the Romans, ibid. Pythagoras promulgates the Doctrine of Tranſmigration, 325. Another Reaſon is, that the Soul might be purified, as chymical Eſſences, by paſſing through the Still. Proof of the Soul's Immortality, which invalidates the Metempſychoſis. That the Soul would be defiled by Tranſmigration. Other Arguments againſt this Doctrine, ibid. From Adam's Speech to Eve, ibid. From the New Teſtament. From the Nature of Soul and Body. If this Doctrine were true, the Souls of Beaſts muſt be immortal, 326

Shuddery, third Son of Pourous, 312. A Merchant, and ſent out to the North. Takes his Scales and Weights with him. Wiſhes to meet with Buſineſs. Comes to a Mountain. Immoderate Rains falling, he ſhelters himſelf in the Hollow of it. A Deluge follows. The Waters ſubſide, and he ſets out. Finds Pearl-Shells of a precious Value. Comes to another Mountain. A Rock, or Mine of Diamonds. Shuddery ſuppoſes it to be Fire. In amaze, he touches it with his Finger. Day-Light appears, and the Luſtre diſappears, ibid. Breaks a Piece of the Rock, and carries it with him. Meets a Woman call'd Viſagunda, at the Side of a Wood. He accoſts her. She is baſhful. His Arguments why ſhe ſhould not fly him. She ſtops, and they diſcourſe. She yields to his kind Treatment. He adorns her with his Pearls and Diamonds. They people the North with Traders, 313

Sick, how the Savages of Paria heal theirs, 178 Plunge them into a River. Whip them very ſeverely. The ſick Man, when given over, is left in his Hammock hung between two Trees, ibid.

Sickneſs, Death, and Burial of the Bramins, 368. Abſtinence preferr'd to Bleeding. The former very ſevere. The Symptoms of Death appear. Prayers and other Ceremonies uſed. Asks his Wife whether ſhe'll be burnt or buried with him. The Duty of a Wife conſiſts in three Particulars, ibid. An implicit Complacency for all her Husband's Deſires and Wiſhes, 369. Exemplified in the virtuous Draupeti, who, when her luſtful Husband was ſo weak he could not walk, carried him to his Strumpets upon her Shoulders. She runs againſt a Poſt on which a holy Man was ſet. His Curſe. The Sun does not riſe for ſeveral Years. She dies. Returns again upon Earth, and marries five Husbands, ibid. Enjoys one of them annually, and falls into the Fire. Second Duty of a Wife, to go in a plain Dreſs, and not junket when her Huſband's abroad. Third Duty, to die when her Huſband leaves the World. To force a Woman to be burnt, a Crime that merits Death. Two hideous Spirits appear to a Man at the Point of Death. If he is virtuous, one carries him away in a flying Chariot. If wicked, carried to Jamma-locon, when he is ſent back to the World, where he skips up and down it like a Hobgoblin. The ſick Man dies, 370. His Beard ſhav'd, his Body waſh'd, &c. The Corpſe carried to the Pile. A Sermon in the Name of Death. Some Bramins buried, ibid.

Silk, Knowledge the Antients had of it, 277. The Indians eſteem Arts according to their Uſefulneſs. A Ploughman placed in the firſt Rank, and a Goldſmith in the laſt. Little Notion of Sculpture and Deſigning. Famous for their Manufactures of Silk and Cotton, ibid Silk-Worms firſt brought Anno 552. from India to Conſtantinople by certain Monks, 278. Silk mentioned by the Prophet Ezekiel. Silken Habits among the Perſians a Mark of great Dignity. Whether the Sericum of the Antients be the ſame with our Silk. The modern Manufactures of Silk-Stuffs entirely unknown to the Greeks and Romans, N. ibid. Highly probable that the Jews, the Greeks, and Romans, had the ſame Silk uſed in our Days. Several fancied that Silk was taken from the Bark of a Tree, after which 'twas comb'd and ſpun, 279. Others, that 'twas made of a kind of Wool. Particulars concerning the Labours of the Silk-Worm. Of the Silk-Worms mention'd by Ovid Sericum derived from a People call'd Seres, ibid. Who are thought to be the Chineſe, N. ibid. Enquiries where the Country of the Seres might be ſituated, ibid.

Slaves among the Americans, 70. Their Captives only ſo, whom they keep in their Service. Are often miſerably butcher'd, ibid. The Inhabitants of Chios, the firſt who purchaſed free People for Slaves. The Revenge they draw upon themſelves, 71

Smaertas, the third Sect of the Bramins, 317. Their Tenets. Not diſtinguiſh'd by Marks. Their Doctrine couch'd under myſterious Terms. Deliver'd in a moſt pompous Phraſe, ibid.

Soothſayers, Prieſts and Prophecies of the Americans, 16. All are Prieſts who are appointed to preſide over religious Worſhip of what kind ſoever. Etymology of the Word from the Greek ſignifies Antient. Old People fitteſt to govern. Young People being unexperienced, and govern'd by their Paſſions, unfit for it. American Prieſts always in Years. The Mexican Clergy govern'd by a kind of Pontifex Maximus, ibid. American Prieſts are always Phyſicians. Have Wallets filled with Herbs and Drugs. Medico-Prieſts in Aſia and Africa. Reaſons why the Profeſſions were united. Antient Phyſicians, like thoſe in America, uſed Spells and Inchantments. The Europeans alſo weak on this Head. The Druids and Gerrians unite the two Profeſſions. Prieſts in America have great Influence in State-Affairs, 17. Great Power the Prieſts have thereby arrogated, N. ibid. Caraibes make the People believe they hold Correſpondence with Spirits, 18. And thereby pretend to do Wonders. Braſilian Prieſts pretend to endue with Courage; to make the Plants grow. Agnian their Spirit. Affirm he torments People in the Night. That Prieſts of all Religions ſet up for Agents and Ambaſſadors of God. Endeavour to eſtabliſh their Dominion over the Forced to live separate from the rest. Their extreme Poverty and deplorable Condition. Are yet very proud. Siriperes abhorr'd by the Perreas, 350. Several Ceremonies of the former. This Precedency among the four Castes grounded on a very whimsical Reason. Particulars of it, ibid.

Soul, human; Origin of it, and State after Death, 393 Mankind created by Brahma, who gives Being to nine Men. The Soul of Man not superior to that of Brutes, only that the former has more Liberty to display itself. This Difference arises from the various Constructions of the Organs of Men and Beasts: Exemplified from Childhood and Old Age, ibid. Singular Opinions with regard to the Origin of the Soul, 394. That the Soul is immortal. Illustrated. Rewards and Punishments after this Life. The Druids, Germans, and Getes believed in Transmigration. Restrictions which Porphyry made to this Doctrine. To pass into the Body of a Cow, the most honourable Transmigration, except to that of a Man. An Ox buried like a Person of Distinction. Some Souls hover about in the Air, and are miserable. Souls punished two Ways, 395. Some go into Purgatory, others hurl'd into a deep Well, where they continue for ever, in infinite Pain, ibid. Description of the Torments. Felicity promised the Virtuous in the next Life. Enjoyment of sensual Pleasures. Surgam, the seven inferior Heavens. Few so vertuous as to be admitted to the Enjoyment of the Supreme Felicity, ibid.

Soul, human, according to the Indians, 430. That Man has a Principle of Life within him. Indians differ very much with regard to this Principle, ibid. That Man has a vegetative and intelligent Soul, 431. Particulars of each Soul. TEMPLE of the Sun in Cusco, 191. Description of that wonderful Edifice. The High Altar. Walls cover'd with Plates of Gold. The Sun represented in Gold with prodigious Magnificence. The Bodies of their Monarchs embalmed in so surprising a Manner, that they seem'd alive. Temple Gates covered over with Gold Plates, ibid. A Plate of Gold in the Shape of a Garland. A Chapel for the Habitation of the Moon. The Bodies of their deceased Queens. Mansion of Venus. Thought to be the Sun's Page. The Pleiades the Moon's waiting Maids. Apartment and Gates cover'd with silver Plates. Thunder and Lightning consider'd as the Sun's Lacqueys. An Apartment, the Ceiling of Gold. Some have attempted to draw a Parallel between the Christian Religion and this strange Religion, 192. Apartment sacred to the Rainbow. Richly beautified. Superstitious Notion when the Rainbow appear'd in the Sky. Apartment of the High-Priest. Its Ornaments. The several Gods of those Nations whom the Peruvians had conquer'd in this Temple. Reflections on the Conduct of the Incas in this Particular. The pompous Temple at Titicaca. An Inca offering a golden Vessel to the Sun in it. Pachacamac one of the Attributes of the Sun. The Festival open'd with Sacrifices, 193. Fire catch'd from the Sun with great Ceremony. Victims burnt with it. Fire got by rubbing two dry Sticks one against the other, when the Sun did not shine. Deeply afflicted when it did not break out, 194

Temple, principal one of the East-Indians, 291. Temple at Jerusalem. Mecca. Pagod of Jaguarnat. Compar'd to several Temples of Antiquity in Note [a]. Is vastly rich. Pilgrimages to it from the remotest Parts of India. Very advantageous to the Bramins. Both Jews and Indians Slaves to Prejudice, ibid. Vide the Note [b] for Reflections on that Subject, 292. Both adhere zealously to Antiquity. Vide the Note [c] for Objections against Tradition, ibid. What is the whole Knowledge of this People. Vide the Note [d], on the Ignorance of Multitudes of Christians. The Indians make War by Starts, and are wholly guided by their Priests. Sometimes fight with the utmost Obstinacy in Defense of their Religion. See the Note [e]. Look on all other Nations as profane. Vide the Note [d]. ibid. The Conquest of the Romans over the Jews, of great Advantage to the latter. Vide the Note [e], in which the English are applauded for their Free-thinking, 293. The Indians as much Slaves as ever. Reflections on Alexander the Great's Conquests in India, ibid. Both Jews and Indians have preserved the Simplicity which prevail'd in the Infancy of the World. See the Note [f]. Why they adhere so strongly to the Counsels of the Wise and Learned. Are obedient to the Precepts of Religion, 294. Learn only the useful Sciences. Why they shun all Familiarity with Foreigners. Are wholly employ'd in Traffic, and therefore never projecting Novelties, ibid.

Temples of the Mexicans, 148. Light in the City of Mexico, vastly magnificent Five hundred Houses might have stood in the Court of Vitzlputzli's Temple. Particular Description of this splendid Edifice. The Skulls of the unhappy Men who had been sacrificed, fix'd on Poles near to it. Area so large, that eight or ten thousand People used to dance therein, without crouding one another, on their solemn Days, ibid. Description of a great Stone Edifice in the Center of the Area, or Quadrangle. Pomp of it. Stone of a green Colour, on which Men were inhumanly sacrificed. The Idol Tlalach. Two Chapels immensely rich. Temple of the God of the Air. Description of it. Temple of Tescalpiuca. Dark Houses to lodge a numberless Multitude of Idols; smear'd, or rather crusted over with human Blood, 149

Theft, hardly known among the Americans, 40. Owing to the little Notion they have of Ambition. The Lacedemonians approv'd of Thieving, ibid. Allow'd by the Romans at certain Seasons. The Egyptians had a Captain of Thieves among them. The Japonese won't suffer any kind of Theft, 41

Time, according to the Indians, and the Duration of Ages, 389. Time divided into four Ages. The three first were Golden Ages. Ram lives seventy thousand Years without Issue. The fourth, or present, an Iron Age. Reason why it is so. Different Opinions of the Indians. Fourteen Ages besides. Prodigious Duration of each, 389, & 390. The Planets are Gods, have Wives. &c. 390

Time, how measured by the Inhabitants of Mogul, 290. Divide the natural Day into eight Parts. Measure Time by a Water Clock. Different from our Clepsydra, or Hour-Glass. Description of the latter, and that of the Moguls, which is always watch'd by a Man. Some suppose the Teraphims were Water-Clocks, 291. Reasons against it, ibid.

Traffic of the Americans, 70. Don't employ Money for that Purpose. It consists wholly in Barter. This the Custom in the Infant Ages, ibid.

Transmigration of Souls, 245. Indians believe it. Hospitals for curing sick Beasts, ibid. Certain Bramins who subsist only on Herbs, Milk, and Butter, &c. 246. Conformity between them and the antient Egyptians, N. ibid. Banians adhere more strictly to the Doctrine of Transmigration. Won't kill Flies, ibid. Examples of their ridiculous Charity to Beasts, N. ibid. Reflections on the Diversity of Opinions, with regard to Transmigaation. Perhaps not establish'd first among the Indians as an Article of Religion. Whether the Indians received it from Pythagoras and his Followers, 246. The Chinese had it five hundred Years

Years before this Philoſopher. Firſt ſtarted by Phoe, or Fo, a Native of Ceylan. He ſets up for a Prophet. Taught an interior and exterior Doctrine. That the Soul would be annihilated, &c. That he himſelf had experienced the Truth of Tranſmigration, 247. Phoe's Doctrine receiv'd in India. Eaſily, and for what Reaſons. Has given Riſe to ſeveral ridiculous Opinions. Phoe writ forty Volumes, 248

Travellers, Charity of the Indians in providing Drink for them, 248. People wait on the high Road to give Paſſengers Water, ibid. The Eaſterns in this Caſe more charitable than the Europeans. This the Cuſtom in the Infancy of the World. Abraham entertains three Angels, 249

Travels, Difficulty of writing them ſo as to pleaſe every Body, 216

Trinity, under the Names of Bruma, Vixnu, and Rutrem, 410. Notion the Eaſt-Indian Idolaters have of it. Paraxacti their Mother. Bruma and Rutrem born with five Heads, 411. Power given to each. Heathens divided into ſix Sects on this Head. That the Eſſence of God is incomprehenſible. This Notion ſullied with the moſt ridiculous Fictions, ibid.

Tſchetteas, ſixth Sect among the Bramins, 352. Refuſe to follow the Precepts of their Law, and reject every Thing that can't be demonſtrated by the Teſtimony of the Senſes, ibid.

V.

VEDAM, and the Privileges it allows the Bramins, 353. 'Tis their Book of the Law. Writ in the Samſcortan Tongue. Divided into four Parts. Particulars of which each Part treated. The fourth Part loſt many Years. Vedam of indiſputable Authority. It allows the Bramins five Privileges. The 1ſt, To celebrate the Jagam, i. e. a Feaſt accompanied with a Sacrifice, ibid. This Solemnity deſcrib'd. Particulars concerning the Jagam, 354. 2dly, To teach the Settra's, &c. 3dly, To read the Vedam. 4thly, Liberty of teaching it to others. 5th Privilege, their being allow'd to beg. Charity of the Bramins, ibid.

Veinsjas, the third Caſte of the Brachmans, 348. Live by Traffic, and abſtain from Things that have Life. All the Caſtes forbid to eat Cows Fleſh, ibid.

Virtues, Vices, and Civility of the Americans, 60. Have none of our Politeneſs. Very little Notion of Subordination. Their only Principles of Decorum are, their Obedience to their Chiefs; Reſpect to their Parents and Elders. The more independant People are, the leſs they are apt to give into Politeneſs. Republicans not ſo polite as thoſe who inhabit Monarchies. The Mexicans and Peruvians polite. Both gave their Children good Education. Men, without Subordination, have no real Regard for one another, ibid. Prov'd from Commonwealths. The vaſt Power and Grandeur of the Republic of Rome, N. ibid. Manner how the Savages of New-France and Florida receive their Gueſts. The Savages have the ſame innate Principles of Vice and Virtue as we, and have the utmoſt Dread of Reproach, and that Infamy which reſults from the Commiſſion of a baſe Action. Their Magnanimity very much ſullied by Revenge. Exercis'd againſt Men only, 61. The Principles of Equity engraved in the Hearts of all Men. Americans obſerve an inviolable Fidelity, and never over-reach one another. Nations apt to employ ſarcaſtical Expreſſions one againſt the other. The Savages abhor Covetouſneſs. With what Judgment they barter Goods. Love to beſtow Gifts, 62

Viſtney, in the fourth and laſt Age of the World, according to the Banians, 339. Viſtney, a famous and pious King. God takes him up to Heaven, 340. The preſent Age the fourth, which will be longer than the reſt. The final Judgment of this will be more dreadful than the reſt. By Fire. The Moon ſhall look red, the Sun ſhed his Light like Brimſtone, Lightning ſhall flaſh. The Sky red as Fire. The four Elements at Variance. Reaſons why the World ſhall be deſtroy'd by Fire. The Souls carried up to Heaven, but the Bodies will periſh, ibid.

Viſtnou, the ten corporeal Shapes he aſſumed, 376. That of a Fiſh, a Tortoiſe, a Hog; half Man and half Lion, &c. 377. under the Name of Dajerrata Rama. Reaſon of his aſſuming that Shape. Two Devils ſubdue the World, ibid. Tompacarna's Wiſh, and a Grant of ſleeping ſix Months. Two Brothers build ſeven Caſtles, viz. of Gold, Silver, Copper, Iron, &c. A Man's three Wives barren; the Fire Homan lighted to cure it, and a Man jumps out from it, and preſents a Remedy. Comical Story of Ramma and his Wife Sita, 378. The Devil appears to her under the Figure of a Stag. Sita is run away with. Ramma goes in Purſuit of her, and calls an Ape to his Aſſiſtance, and overthrows their Enemies. The Ape throws Mountains into the Sea to make a Bridge. Sita, after many Battles fought, is reſtor'd to her Husband. The Bridge broke, and a Pagod built in its ſtead. The eighth Appearance of Viſtnou, under the Name of Kriſtna. The ninth, under the Name of Boudiha; and the tenth, he aſſum'd the Shape of a Horſe, ibid.

Viſtnouvas, a Sect of the Bramins, 350. So call'd becauſe they acknowledge no other God but Viſtnou. Of two Sorts. 1ſt, Tadvadi-Viſtnouvas, ſignifying divine. Are diſtinguiſh'd by a white Streak over the Forehead. That it defends from the Devil, &c. 2dly, The Ramanoujas, 351. Theſe draw with a kind of Chalk over the Forehead. Are a ſort of Quietiſts. Theſe boaſt their being better Men than the Tadvadi, ibid.

Vitzliputzli, the chief God of the Mexicans, 145

Vixnu, his Adventures, 413. Second Son of Paraxacti. He married a Wife, who is at the ſame Time a Cow, a Horſe, &c. Nine Metamorphoſes of Vixnu. 1ſt, Into a Fiſh 2dly, a Tortoiſe. A Sea of delicious Butter. A golden Mountain that ſupports the fourteen Worlds. A prodigious Adder brought over it, which is uſed as a Rope. The Giants pull the Adder, and ſhake the World. Vixnu aſſumes the Shape of a beautiful Woman, to prevent the Giants eating the delicious Butter. They fall in love with her. Vixnu carries off the Butter, and vaniſhes away with it. 3d, Vixnu chang'd into a Hog, ibid. Rutrem lays a Wager, that he could hide himſelf ſo, that his two Brothers could not find his Hands and Feet, 414. Bruma transforms himſelf into a Swan, to look out his Head, ibid. Deſpairs of Succeſs, when he meets the Thiſtle-Flower, which ſalutes him, and ſhews him Rutrem's Head. Rutrem curſes the Flower, and his Brother. Vixnu transforms himſelf into a Hog, throws up the Earth with his Snout, but does not find Rutrem's Feet. 4th, Vixnu transforms himſelf into a half-Man, half-Lion. Occaſion of it. Iranien, a mighty Giant. Rutrem grants him the Privilege that no one ſhould kill him by Night, or by Day, in his Houſe, or out of it, ibid. The Giant deſpiſes Rutrem, &c. and bids his Son do the ſame. The Child diſobeys his Father's Commands, and prays to Vixnu, 415. His Tutor tells Iranien of it, who threatens to caſt his Son to Tygers, Bears, &c. The Child continues to pray to Vixnu. His Father being enraged, the God appears to him, under the Shape of a half-Man, half-Lion, when he was ſtanding neither within nor without his Houſe; tears him to Pieces, and drinks every Drop of his Blood. 5th, Vixnu transform'd into a Dwarf. Occaſion of it. A bloodthirſty Giant governs the whole Earth. Mankind pray to God to be deliver'd from him. Vixnu, in the Shape of a Dwarf, goes to him, and begs three Foot of Ground to build a Houſe. The Giant-King was going to grant it, when the Morning-Star (his Counſellor of State) reſolves to hinder the Grant paſſing; and ſlipping down the Monarch's Throat, the latter orders a Stiletto to be put down it, which puts out one of the Star's Eyes, whereby the Promiſe he had made to Vixnu was ratified, 416. The God ſwells to ſo prodigious a Size, that the whole Air and Earth could ſcarce contain him. He ſets his Foot on the Giant's Head, and kicks him down to Hell. Vixnu changed into a Man call'd Ramene, or Ram, under his ſixth, ſeventh, and eighth Incarnation. The ſixth, occaſion'd by the Pride and Cruelty of the Rajahs or petty Kings. Vixnu fights againſt, and deſtroys them. Vixnu, a ſecond Time Ram, to extirpate a thouſand arm'd Giant; knocks him down with a Plough-Share, and cuts off his thouſand Arms. Raiſes a Trophy with the Giant's Bones. Vixnu again made Ram. The Occaſion. Three mighty Giants carry off Sidi, Ram's Wife, 417. He ſearches for, but cannot find her, and therefore calls the Apes to his Aſſiſtance, ibid. They form an Army, join Ram, and recover his Wife. He takes his Wife again; is rallied for it by ſome Laundreſſes, and thereupon abandons her again. Vixnu's 9th Incarnation, under a human Shape, call'd Chrixnen, ibid. Exudi, a Woman, brings him forth; and her Brother Campſen threatening to kill the Babe, ſhe gives it her Husband, and bids him hide it in ſome ſome Deſart, 418. Campſen ſets Spies, but they are all eluded, and the Child is given to, and educated by Shepherds. Campſen goes to kill him, when he vaniſhes on a ſudden, and graſps only a little Girl, ibid. Goes to kill her, and ſhe knocks him down backwards. She vaniſhes, ibid. Searches for Chrixnen, but in vain, 419. Campſen calls the Devils to his Aſſiſtance. Theſe ſubſtitute a Witch in the Place of Chrixnen's Nurſe. The Child ſucks all her Blood out. Now grown older, he plays Pranks among the Shepherds. Steals Butter from them; they tie him to a a Tree, and whip him. Being now a Man, he raiſes an Army, attacks and kills Campſen. Marries two Wives, and takes ſixteen thouſand young Shepherdeſſes for his Coucubines. Multiplies himſelf in ſuch a Manner, that he enjoys them all at the ſame Time. He ſtands by a Pond, where ſeveral beautiful yourg Women were waſhing themſelves, and runs away with their Clothes, and climbs up a Tree. They cover themſelves with Leaves, and entreat him to return their Clothes. The Leaves drop off, and he views them naked, ibid. Vixnu to be again metamorphoſed, 420

Unctions of the Eaſt-Indians, 287. Oil highly valued antiently for its many Uſes, ibid. A ſovereign Remedy againſt Head-Achs, ibid. Indians uſe Oil of Cocoa, 288. The Antients uſed Oil to heal Wounds, make the Nerves ſupple. Uſed alſo by the Indians. Oils firſt employ'd that were not ſcented. Bathyllus repreſented in Anacreon. Virgil's Deſcription of Turnus. The primitive Chriſtians alſo rubb'd themſelves with Oil. Odoriferous Oils, ibid. Reflections on the Fondneſs our Ladies have for Perfumes, 289. Jews preſented Eſſences in Viſits. The Antients ſmear'd Birds with Oil. Anacreon on this Head, ibid.

Vows of the Americans, 107. In a Dearth, a Portion of the firſt Beaſt they ſhall kill promis'd to the great Spirit, ibid. The Protection of their Manitou implor'd, by preſenting a lighted Pipe to him thrice, &c. 108

Vyſhney, in the ſecond Age of the World, 288. Is created, and adores his Maker. Has the Charge of preſerving all Creatures, ibid. God gives all Things into his Power for that Purpoſe, 289. Vyſhney provides every Thing neceſſary for their Subſiſtence, ibid.

W.

WALLS, none among the Americans, 40. Each Savage marks out the Limits of his Land with a kind of Net-Work. The breaking through it a very criminal Action, ibid.

War, Ceremonies thereof, among the Braſilians, 183. Are repreſented revengeful. All who take Priſoners oblig'd to fatten them. Theſe Captives have Women given them to divert themſelves with. Americans inclin'd to a brutal Intrepidity. The Captive carried up and down in Triumph, and expoſed to the Inſults of the Populace. Stones given him, which he throws at thoſe round him. His Brains daſh'd out with a Club. They eat his Body. ibid.

War, Ceremonies thereof, among the Savages of Darien, 173. A ſolemn Smoking-Feaſt. Women march to the War as well as Men. Burn their Priſoners of War. How dreſs'd when they come into the Aſſemblies. Wear Necklaces weighing twenty five or thirty Pounds. They dance in their Formalities. A Boy ſmokes in the Faces of all the Counſellors. Never allow any Quarter to their Enemies. Savages of New-Granada, &c. caſtrate all their young Captives. Wear the Teeth of their Enemies, ibid.

War, how made by the Eaſt-Indians, &c. 284. Their Armies a Crowd of Rabble. Every Horſeman has always two or three Servants, and as many Women. In an Army of an hundred thouſand Perſons, ſcarce ten thouſand fighting Men. The Fakirs ſwarm among them, ibid. Their Manner of Begging. Moors and Indians fight without Order. Always drink Opium before they engage, to make themſelves intrepid. Ridiculous Manner in which their Cavalry fight; compared to Children playing at Priſon-Baſe, 235. Way of Fighting, as practis'd by the Jews. Had a ſmall Number of Cavalry. The Jews uſed to ride on Aſſes. Vide the Note [4]. Very much eſteem'd by them, ibid. Indians employ Elephants in Battle, 286. Some Account of thoſe Beaſts. In what Manner the Romans engag'd them. Stratagem of Queen Semiramis, who had a great Number of wooden Elephants carved in her Wars in India. The Elephants in King Porus's Army oppoſe the Forces of Alexander the Great, ibid. Courage of that on which King Porus rode, ibid.

War, Ceremonies thereof among the Floridians, 131. Americans in general revengeful. Extraordinary Method by which the Floridians excite one another to Vengeance. A Man, on theſe Occaſions, is wounded with Darts. The wounded Perſon carried by the Women, who are in Tears, to a Hut. His Wound is heal'd. They ſing and dance. The Prieſt and Idol always conſulted before they go to War. The Sun invoked. Water thrown up into the Air. Speech to the Warriors on this Occaſion. The Prieſts conſulted on Expeditions. The pretended Magician lays himſelf upon a Shield; draws a Circle of unintelligible Figures, ibid. The Prieſt in violent Agitations. The God ſuppos'd to leave him. Goes and acquaints the King with the Reſult of the ſpiritual Conference. They ſcalp their Enemies. Their Arms and Legs hung on Poles, where the Prieſt pronounces Curſes againſt the Enemy. Widows, who addreſs the King about their Husbands who died in Battle. Hermaphrodites ſaid to carry the Baggage in War, 132

Warlike Ceremonies of the Canadans, Miſſiſippians, &c. 101. Calumet of Peace, and that of War, diſtinguiſh'd by their Feathers. The leaving of the Calumet ſacred. A Peace concluded by ſmoking out of the Calumets. Different Things denoted by the various Plumage, ibid. The Calumet-Dance a Prelude to all great Exercites. War declared, by ſending back a Priſoner with an Ax, 102. Proclamation of War opens with a Banquet, 103. The War-Feaſt given by the General. Deſcription of it, N. ibid. The General fixes the Day of ſetting out, and the general Rendezvous. Women order'd to proſtitute themſelves to their Warriors, to engage theſe to exert themſelves for their Country. Savages, at what Age they go into the Field. Are two or three Months in making their military Preparations. Ceremonies obſerv'd by the General on this Occaſion; faſts once every two Days; hangs great Kettles on the Poles of his Hut, &c. Begins the March, and ſings the Death Song, which conſiſts of furious Expreſſions. His Face is ſmutted with Black, in order that their Enemies may not ſee him grow pale. A ſolemn Feſtival, on which the great Spirit is invok'd, the Day after they ſet out to War. An Altar raiſed; their Gods. Made of Bears Skins, ſet on them. They bend the Knee to them. The Jugglers held their phyſical Bags in their Hands, ibid. pretending they mark'd out all who were to die in the Field. The Maſter of the Ceremonies gives his Bleſſing to the People, who fall proſtrate before him. Dreadful Howling of Dogs, who are to be ſacrificed on this Occaſion. The Jugglers call ſeveral from their Trances, who pretended to counterfeit the Dead, when they all dance higgledy-piggledy. Trances ſucceeded by Miracles. Some ſwallow Sticks a Foot and a half long. They all withdraw to their Huts. Warriors carry their Wives and Concubines into the Field. They attack generally in Ambuſcades. Take off the Scalps from the Dead. The Mournful Shout. Think the Burial of the Dead one of the Duties of Humanity. Verſes from Horace, as imitated by Prior, on this Occaſion. Divide the Captives among their Families, who ſing all the while their Fate is pronouncing, 104. Homage paid to the chief Leaders, at their Return from an Expedition. Several Arrows preſented them. The Commander keeps an open Table while the War laſts, 105

Wars of the Americans, 63. They never break out from a Principle of Avarice or Ambition, but a kind of Punctilio. Their warlike Diſpoſition very antient among them, ibid. The Source of the perpetual Wars, which are carried on among the Americans, accounted for. Their Quarrels ariſe from Emulation. The Greeks were always arm'd, in their Entertainments, their Recreations, and ſolemn Feſtivals, 64. The great Neceſſity of forming the Mind by Education, exemplified by a fine Paſſage from Monſ. De Crouſaz's Treatiſe on Education, N. ibid. The Spaniards fond of wearing their Swords by their Sides, ibid. The American Wars founded on Repriſals. Their old Men are the Orators, and rouze them to War; as alſo among the Greeks. Braſilians make long Speeches in the Field of Battle. A whimſical Way of trying the Fate of War among ſome Nations of New France. How ſeveral Savage Nations denounce War. The Calumet and a warlike Dance on theſe Occaſions, 64.

INDEX.

The Battle begins by Shouts. The Braſilians play on a kind of Flute, made of the Leg-Bones of their Priſoners. Are never allow'd to take Quarter, and obliged to die with their Weapons in their Hands. Their Courage not a tranſient Fury. Fight to the laſt. The Greeks left their Enemies a Prey to Beaſts; the Americans do the very reverſe. The Savages of North-America kill all ſuch as are able to make Reſiſtance; thoſe of the South ſave them, in order to fatten and eat them. Mexicans, Peruvians, and Floridians, ſacrifice their Enemies to their Gods. Reflections on this religious Havock mention'd in Scripture. The Braſilians make him Chief, or Leader, who has kill'd the moſt Enemies. That this Dignity is hereditary, when the Son of a Chief is brave. This Maxim of the Savages, on what probably grounded. A very good one in States which are founded wholly on Wars, 65. Dangerous in thoſe of Europe, becauſe of the refin'd Policy practiſed in them. In the firſt Ages of the World, the Dignity of the King and the General were united in one Perſon. The antient Britons choſe Commanders to lead them into the Field, as alſo the antient Germans; but the People inſpected all his Actions with a watchful Eye. Arms of the Americans, Bows, Arrows, and Clubs. Theſe are of great Antiquity. They go naked into the Field, and have a large Shield which covers the Body, ibid. They carry the Hair of their Enemies into the Field by way of Standard, 63. Carry Curtezans along with them. The Greeks did the ſame. Their Ambuſcades and Skirmiſhes like thoſe of the Tartars. The Battle being ended, they cut off the Heads of their Slain. They drink the Blood of their Enemies. Their Enemies Scalps preſerved as ſo many Trophies. The Antients cut off the Hair of theirs, 66. and carried them in Triumph. The Boiens uſed to clear their Enemies Skulls, take their Brains out, adorn them with Gold and Silver, and make Drinking-Bowls of them, 67

Wars of the Caribees, 138. No ſtated Time for holding theſe Aſſemblies. Some old Woman draws up the whole Plan of the War. Stirs them up to Revenge. Throws ſome of the broil'd Limbs of their Enemies among them, ibid. Fight in Ambuſcade. Cover themſelves all over with Boughs and Leaves. Stand thus behind a Tree, and attack their Enemies. Their Arrows always poiſon'd. Particular Deſcription of them. So made that the poiſon'd Part falls in the Body, 139

Wine, Averſion the Indians have to it, 274. Difficult to account for it. Some Notions ſtarted on that Head. Perhaps the Virtue of ſome antient Brachmans might occaſion it, ibid. Reaſons why the antient Brachmans forbid the Uſe of Wine, N. ibid. The Jews and Nazarenes abſtain'd from Wine, ibid. The Mahometans don't ſcruple to eat Grapes. The European Vines planted in India thrive well. The Bramins drink a great Quantity of melted Butter. Said to fuddle them, ibid. In the Infancy of the Roman Republic, the Roman Women prohibited to drink Wine. Egnatius Mecenius puts his Wife to Death upon that Account. This Severity owing to the Jealouſy of Huſbands. Ovid knew that Wine inſpires Luſt. The Egyptian Prieſts abſtain'd a long Time from Wine. That People imagin'd it was hated by the Gods, 275. The Indians antiently great Drinkers, proved from Athenæus. A Drinking-Match eſtabliſh'd by Alexander the Great, after the Death of the celebrated Calanus, ibid. Concubines who fill'd out Wine to the Indian King, and when he was drunk, carried him to Bed. Scarce poſſible to reconcile two Paſſages in Quintus Curtius, with one in Athenæus, relating to the Drinking of the Indians. Reflections on Alexander's making ſo many Men drunk, to celebrate the Obſequies of Calanus. When the Change of the Indians from Drunkenneſs to Sobriety might have happen'd. Muſt have been cauſed by ſome famous Legiſlator. Skyras, a Perſian Wine, famous over all India, 278

Wiſtnou, Wichnu, or Wiſtnu, 462. Son to Quivelinga. How imag'd. Groteſque Particulars concerning him. His ten Incarnations, or Metamorphoſes, from 462 to 470. Explications of them, according to Father Kircher, from 471 to 473. Wiſtnou worſhipp'd under the Name of Jagarnat, 473

Wives of Viſtnou and Eſwara, 375. The beautiful Latſami produced from the Foam of the Sea. Ridiculous Particulars of Parvati, ibid.. She jumps into the Fire, 376. Virrepadra kick'd the Sun, and broke all his Teeth, and drubb'd the Moon ſo heartily, that he made her Face all over Spots. Datja reſtor'd to Life, and a Goat's Head fix'd on his Body, ibid. Parvati becomes half-Man, and half-Woman. Viſtnou and Eſwara can get Children by the bare Act of the Will. Eſwara repreſented under a very ſcandalous Shape. The Origin of it was from his being catch'd in a particular Attitude with Parvati, ibid.

Women in India burnt or buried with their Husbands, the complete Account of that barbarous Ceremony, 370. & ſeq. Infamy which attends thoſe Women who refuſe to comply on theſe Occaſions, and the artful Inſinuations uſed to excite them to obey, 372
